Mr. HISCOCK. I will say that this is the same provision that was in the bill for the current year. It was put in as new legislation with a view, as far as possible, to enable materials for this work to be purchased in open market. Since this bill has been prepared and reported to the House, I have received a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury asking that a similar provision be put in this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am going now to ask a favor of the committee. The motion which I propose to submit will be subject to a point of order, but I trust no point of order will be made. I ask unanimous consent to move an amendment to this bill to give $900 to James C. Courts, the assistant clerk of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KLOTZ. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. CASWELL. I now ask to return to page 58 of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk in lieu of the amendment which I submitted some time since.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the modification of the treaty and the agreement made with the Sioux Indians under the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved August 7, 1882, is hereby approved, and the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to enable the Secretary of the Interior to enter upon the execution of said treaty: Provided, That the rights of way, depot grounds, including such grounds for bridges, shops, and buildings, as the railroad companies have already selected and paid for, under agreement with said Indians, by and with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding in extent the rights granted to railway companies by the general laws touching the same, are reserved to said companies, and the lands actually necessary for the site of the bridges and approaches thereto on the Missouri River, which have been selected, surveyed, and paid for under such contracts, are reserved according to those contracts; and the money, amounting to $17,110, so paid to the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of said Indians for the said rights of way and grounds as above expressed, shall remain the money of said Indians.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish for a moment at any rate to reserve the point of order on that amendment until I can have read at the Clerk's desk, with the permission of the Chair, an addition which I desire to have made to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

But nothing in the foregoing provision shall impair the provisions in the act of the last session of this Congress above referred to authorizing the treaty and agreement with the said Indians for the cession of land to the United States, under which said land has been ceded to the United States, touching the disposition of the said land by the United States to actual settlers only, under the provision of the homestead laws, except only as to said rights of way and the land named as incident thereto above enumerated.

Mr. CASWELL. I have no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment to the amendment will be regarded as adopted.

There was no objection.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to amend by striking out "$200,000" and inserting "$250,000." I do that for the reason that the amount named in the amendment is not sufficient to pay one-half of what will be required under the legislation of Congress.

My own judgment is that the law providing for the payment of these Indians ought to carry the entire sum. It will require over $500,000 to carry out the agreement with these Indians.

Mr. LE FEVRE. It will take $600,000.

Mr. ATKINS. It will take $520,000 to pay for the 26,000 head of cattle, and then it will require $300,000 in addition to that, making over $800,000 in all.

Mr. RYAN. Not under this treaty.

Mr. ATKINS. Not under this treaty?

Mr. RYAN. Under a former treaty.

Mr. ATKINS. My colleague on the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RYAN] informs me that it is under a former treaty. It makes no difference whether it is under this treaty or under a former treaty; this money must be paid to the Indians. Why then piece it out by separate appropriations of $100,000 or $200,000? I say that if you are going to make an appropriation for this purpose you ought in all fairness to make such an appropriation as will be worth something. You ought to finish it up, and not piecemeal it out for three or four or five years, if that is the policy.

Mr. HISCOCK. The great point in reference to this item, so far as the Government is concerned, is the ratification of this treaty. If gentlemen will look at the law they will discover that the ratification of the treaty by Congress is a condition precedent to everything else. Congress must approve the treaty.

Now, we are in this case doing the unusual thing of not only approving the treaty but of appropriating a portion of the money necessary to carry it out. On consultation with the Secretary of the Interior on this subject he said that what he wanted was an approval of the treaty, and that he could get along with an appropriation of $100,000. It was after this conference and at his suggestion that the sum of $100,000 was put in the bill.

I have no sort of doubt but what, so far as the interest of the Indians themselves is concerned, it is better that the appropriation should be kept down. It never has been the policy of the Government in treating with Indian tribes to pay them the consideration for their lands under treaties with them as you would pay whites. They are the wards of the nation, and this money is to be held and expended for their benefit.

I believe that nothing which we could do would be more unwise than to provide for the payment of this whole sum over to them immediately. We want to pay it to them as fast as they are settled and become, as it were, homesteaders on their reservation; and this sum of $200,000 will be ample for that purpose.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. ATKINS to the amendment offered by Mr. CASWELL, and it was not agreed to upon a division—ayes 50, noes 85.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL].

Mr. RANDALL. I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I wish to say that while the point of order as to the propriety of confirming an Indian treaty upon an appropriation bill has been waived, yet there are matters in connection with this subject of which the House should be made aware. The first we heard of this question in the House was on yesterday. This morning I received a communication from a gentleman residing in the city of Philadelphia in whom I have full and absolute confidence. I desire that the Clerk may read his communication, so that the House may be fully apprised of some of the difficulties presented in connection with this proposition.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is, I suppose, inevitable that the report of the commission appointed to treat with the Sioux in the matter, and the agreements entered into by them with certain chiefs, be adopted in the main. I am told that the whites in the vicinity are most urgent and anxious for the reduction of the Sioux reserve. Railroad communication with Deadwood must be secured sooner or later. I believe, however, that this report should be adopted only with certain modifications.

First. By it the situation of the Santee Sioux is imperiled.

The object of the Sioux commission is to divide the present great Sioux reserve, which is now occupied by all the Sioux tribes as tenants in common, into reservations to be held separately by the several tribes. To effect this each tribe has at the solicitation of the commission relinquished its claim to an undivided part of the present reserve and obtains in consideration of this a reservation set apart for it as a tribe. Each tribe has done this, with one exception, the Santees. They, while relinquishing their right to an undivided part of the great reserve, have had no portion set apart for their use. This is, I presume, due to the fact that they at present occupy, as they have done for some years past, land set apart for them by executive order in the northeast corner of Nebraska. We know from personal observation as well as from the testimony of others that the Santees are the most industrious and civilized of all the Sioux. They are extensively and successfully farming the land they now occupy. They have considerable property in houses, barns, &c., and were for years of most material service to the whites by standing between them and the wilder Indians on the north.

As you know, under act 6 of the treaty of 1868, these Santee Indians can take claims, obtain patents for land so taken, and they become on the acquisition of such patents citizens of the United States. The first patent under this treaty has recently been granted by the General Land Office under a decision of the Secretary of the Interior, and other Indians are ready to avail themselves of their opportunity to get title in this way. But this process is necessarily an exceedingly slow one. Some Indians have not yet taken claims; others have not occupied them a sufficient time or made the prescribed improvements; others, again, can not yet afford even the small expense of obtaining a patent.

Meanwhile they only occupy their Nebraska land on the uncertain sufferance of a Presidential order, and by relinquishing at the instance of this commission their certain rights in the Sioux reserve are in danger of being absolutely homeless. Their danger is increased from the fact that, as I am told, the neighboring whites are anxious for the land and are convinced of the uncertainty of the Indian tenure. It seems, therefore, of the highest importance that the executive order setting apart this Nebraska land should be confirmed by Congress. I would therefore suggest that a clause giving to the Santee Sioux absolutely the land held by them in Nebraska under executive order be incorporated in the proposed bill or that a separate bill be prepared to that effect.

Second. Proper provision should be made for reimbursing individual Indians for loss of property sustained by removal. The report of the commission seems to contemplate only a general payment for land. The comparatively civilized Indian gets no damages for loss of property, receiving like the unsettled Indian the regular compensation for the cession of uncultivated land.

Third. I also call your attention to the fact that act 12 of the treaty of 1868 provides that "no treaty for the cession of any part or portion of the reservation therein described shall be of any validity against said Indians unless signed by at least three-fourths of all the adult male Indians occupying or interested in the same." The report of the commission shows that this consent has not been obtained. It is of course a matter of opinion whether, if it is desirable or inevitable the proposed division of the reservation be effected, any notice should be taken of this violation of the original treaty.

Fourth. Act 12 of the treaty of 1868 provides that "no cession by the tribe shall be understood or construed in such manner as to deprive without his consent any individual member of the tribe of his rights to any tract of land selected by him, as provided in act 6 of this treaty." Sufficient provision for the fulfillment of this clause does not seem to have been made in the agreement reported by the commission.

Fifth. The agreement also seems to contemplate a loss by all the bands treated with of the privileges and compensation coming to them under the treaty on its non-fulfillment by one band. This is manifestly unjust and impolitic. The bill should be so worded as to negative such a construction.

HENRY S. PANCOAST.

During the reading of the foregoing letter, when Mr. RANDALL'S time had expired,

Mr. FLOWER obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], that the reading of this paper may be finished.

The reading was then resumed and concluded.

Mr. VALENTINE. For the purpose of curing a difficulty to which the correspondent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has referred I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to come in as a further proviso to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL].

The Clerk read as follows:

That all selections of land in severalty heretofore made by the Santee Sioux on their reservation in the State of Nebraska be, and the same are hereby, confirmed; and the Secretary of the Interior shall allot in severalty to said Santee Indians not yet having made selections a quantity of land from said reservation in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of April 29, 1868, to be selected by such Indians as are by the provisions of said treaty entitled thereto; and the provisions of sections 6 and 7 of an act to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, approved August 7, 1882, are hereby extended to said Santee Sioux Indians.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] understands this subject so much better than I do that I am quite content to accept his suggestion in connection therewith.

Mr. VALENTINE. If the Committee of the Whole desires an explanation of this amendment, I shall be very glad to give it.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not.

Mr. CASWELL. I trust that we may have order, and that the gentleman from Nebraska will explain this proposition.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Chairman, the Santee Sioux are a small band of Indians who are a party to this treaty. They are more civilized than any other of the bands who are parties to it, and have been placed by executive order on a small reservation in the northern part of Nebraska. They have no rights there under any law or treaty. They are farmers, living upon the land in severalty, and there is no desire on the part of citizens of Nebraska to oust them. This provision, if adopted, will give them in severalty the lands where they now reside—their farms and their homes.

The amendment of Mr. VALENTINE was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. I submit as an additional proviso the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the sum of $39,102.16, or so much thereof as may be found by the Secretary of the Interior to be due them, is hereby appropriated to reimburse the Miami Indians of Indiana for money improperly paid out of money equitably due to said Indians.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make a point of order upon this amendment that it is not germane and is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regards the proposition as not germane to the pending amendment.

Mr. STEELE. Upon the point of order I wish to say that this amendment proposes merely to carry out a treaty stipulation. The treaty with these Indians was made in 1849. In 1859 some sixty-nine Indians not belonging to that tribe were taken on the rolls and money was paid to them. In 1867 the Secretary of the Interior discovered that there had been a mistake in this respect. Under the treaty stipulation only Indians named in the treaty were entitled to participate in the fund; but Indians not named in the treaty had been taken on the rolls, and the fact of their not belonging there was not discovered until 1867. Then the Secretary of the Interior dropped these Indians from the rolls, but did not reimburse the tribe for the money thus improperly paid out.

This amendment, Mr. Chairman, provides only to pay them just the amount that the Secretary of the Interior finds to be due them by reason of that wrongful payment out of their funds, that payment having been made under a false application of the law. The amendment itself is to correct that error when the amount shall be ascertained and to enable the Department to carry out the provisions of the treaty with them; or, in other words, to pay them what is due to them properly under the terms of the treaty and to pay the Indians named in that treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regards this as more in the nature of a claim under the treaty than for the execution of it. If it arises under the regulations or terms of a treaty, a provision making an appropriation to carry out that stipulation with the Indians, the Chair thinks, would properly come in on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. STEELE. But the Secretary of the Interior decides that he can not right the wrong which has been committed upon these Indians in the payment of this fund unless he has legislation to warrant it. And only such amount will be paid as is actually found due on investigation.

Mr. RYAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that he offer his amendment as an independent proposition. It is not germane to the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clearly of that opinion.

Mr. STEELE. Then I will withdraw it for the present.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, upon the pending proposition——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon the pending amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of being heard very briefly. This measure upon which the committee is now called to vote is one of great importance, and may be not only important to the immediate locality affected, but to the country at large; and I am exceedingly anxious that the committee shall understand the effect of these provisions, as they concern the rights here confirmed to these railroad companies, before voting upon it.

It is very unfortunate that we should have been called upon to legislate upon a matter of so much importance as this in the hurried manner in which we are compelled to legislate under the five-minute rule upon an appropriation bill. It is very unfortunate. There should have been more time for careful consideration and deliberation. We are not fully informed as to the nature of the contracts entered into between the Sioux Indians, or the Secretary of the Interior on their behalf, and the railway corporations. The provision is as nearly in conformity to the terms of the agreement as the gentleman having charge of that particular branch of the subject has been able to indicate. And believing myself that this right of way to the railway companies was ultimately inevitable and that the treaty under all of the circumstances is as fair as could probably be drawn in the interest of the Government and of the Indians themselves, I see no reason why the proposition should not be adopted. Yet I think it extremely improbable that every gentleman here has been able to understand the provisions of that amendment from hearing it read at the desk, or its effect; and therefore I ask for order while the entire proposition is again read as it now stands amended, so that every member of the committee may see for himself exactly what it refers to.

The amendment as amended was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay James C. Courts, assistant clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, for additional compensation, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has now concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. STEELE. Is it now in order to offer the amendment which I offered some time ago, but withdrew at the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now entertain the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

At the beginning of line 1395, on page 58 of the bill, insert:

"Provided, That the sum of $39,102.16, or so much thereof as may be found by the Secretary of the Interior to be due them, is hereby appropriated to reimburse the Miami Indians, of Indiana, for money improperly paid out of money equitably due to said Indians."

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order upon that.

Mr. BAYNE. Withhold the point order and let us have an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. STEELE. I have already made an explanation, but will say again——

Mr. HISCOCK. It has been once explained already. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not insist upon having another explanation.

Mr. STEELE. I am perfectly willing to come to a vote on this amendment if the committee understands what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made against it by the gentleman from New York. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly on the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. The matter has been pending in this House in the nature of a claim, and a bill of similar character was considered in the Forty-sixth Congress. It has been existing in that way for years, and I supposed that Mr. Baker, a former member from Indiana, had settled the whole matter up. I am compelled to make the point of order on it.

Mr. STEELE. I beg to state in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from New York that a final payment was to be made to these Indians in 1880, but in making that settlement they did not take into account the money which had been improperly paid out of the fund which was due to them in that year. This money was paid improperly out of the funds belonging to the Indians. The object of this amendment is simply to reimburse the Indians for that money which, as I have said, was improperly paid out, and only in the event that the Secretary of the Interior upon examination of the case finds that it is properly due them under the treaty stipulation.

The CHAIRMAN. The difficulty with the Chair of course is in the uncertainity as to the condition of this matter. If it is a direct obligation resulting from a treaty, and undisputed, it is in continuance of a public work, and the amendment is in order. But if it is a disputed claim against the Government the Chair would not be justified in recognizing it upon this bill.

Mr. STEELE. I state in reply to that that they required receipts in full to be signed by those Indians; and they took advantage of the ignorance of the Indians and got them to sign.

Mr. HISCOCK. The amendment is the same as a bill now pending before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If that be the fact that is enough to sustain the point of order.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to see the bill. I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Interior showing what is due to those Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, with the consent of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], will submit the question to a vote or will rule on the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask for a decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds nothing in the amendment itself which makes it in order if the facts are disputed.

Mr. STEELE. I have here the letter of the Secretary of the Interior——

Mr. HISCOCK. That shows there is a dispute about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the amendment is in order and sustains the point of order.

Some time subsequently, when the committee had risen and the Speaker had resumed the chair,

Mr. STEELE said: I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Interior corroborating my statement, except so far as regards the amount covering attorneys' fees and that paid to agents. That is covered by a separate letter, which I do not care to print.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 21, 1883.

SIR: In reply to the request contained in your indorsement of 1st instant, referring to me a communication from Mr. Samuel McClure, of Marion, Indiana, dated 27th ultimo, that you be informed if the books in this office bear out the statements of Mr. McClure, and also as to what amount was returned to the Treasury Department by Special Agent Cowgill of the funds lately placed in his hands to be paid to the Miami Indians, I have to say that the records in this office show that in compliance with the act of June 12, 1858, sixty-eight persons were added to the roll of Miamies of Indiana and allowed to participate in the annuity payment for that year, and they also appear to have been paid back annuity for the years 1846 to 1857, inclusive, which back annuity amounted to $34,000.16.

These sixty-eight (if none died) and their increase probably shared in all subsequent annuity payments to the Miamies up to and including that for the year 1867. But prior to the payment for 1868, in accordance with a decision of the Attorney-General, one hundred and nineteen persons were dropped from the roll. These one hundred and nineteen, in all probability, comprised all of the original sixty-eight then alive and their increase, and no doubt also some additions through marriages, births, &c.

The records in this office of such payments made ten or fifteen years ago are so imperfect that I am unable at present to trace forward on the rolls the original sixty-eight, or to trace backward the one hundred and nineteen finally dropped, so as to inform you of the exact amount drawn by each of these so-called "bogus Indians," or to say with certainty that the total amount as stated by Mr. McClure is correct. That information can probably be obtained from the Treasury Department.

If it is your wish to call the attention of Congress to this matter, with the view of having those whose funds you believe have been misapplied reimbursed, I would suggest that a reasonable sum might be appropriated for that purpose, with a provision attached that before payment is made it will be the duty of a properly qualified agent to ascertain the exact amount of the Miami funds which may have been improperly disbursed by the Government, and to submit a report of the same for the approval of the Department.

The amount returned by Special Agent Cowgill of the Miami funds lately placed in his hands for disbursement was $695.78, due to Wah-zaw-pe-aw, alias James Lewis Goodboo, whom Agent Cowgill says he could not find.

Mr. McClure's letter and an accompanying paper are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

H. PRICE, Commissioner.

Hon. GEORGE W. STEELE,
House of Representatives.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments.

Mr. MAGINNIS. One moment. The other day I sent up an amendment to the desk accompanied by certain correspondence. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations tells me he has not had time to examine it. I therefore do not desire to press it in connection with this bill, and withdraw the amendment.

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KASSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same with sundry amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on concurring in the amendments recommended by the committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLER. Is it in order for me now to demand a separate vote on one amendment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's right to demand a separate vote will not be precluded by the ordering of the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on concurring in the amendments. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] states that he desires a separate vote on an amendment, which he will indicate.

Mr. MILLER. I ask for a separate vote on an amendment paying one year's salary to the representatives of a person purporting to have been elected from one of the Louisiana districts, Mr. Andrew Herron.

Mr. RANDALL. Does not the whole amendment come in as an entirety?

The SPEAKER. The amendment on which the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires a vote is a separate amendment.

Mr. MILLER. It was adopted as a separate amendment and is not connected with any other paragraph.

Mr. HOUSE. Will that vote include the payment to the representatives of Dr. Updegraff of his salary in the Forty-eighth Congress?

The SPEAKER. That is a separate matter.

Mr. HOUSE. If it does not I demand the yeas and nays upon that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to inquire whether the gentleman from Tennessee refers to an amendment to the bill on which he desires a separate vote, or whether he does not refer to a paragraph of the original bill? If it be a portion of the original bill, then a separate vote can not be asked upon it.

Mr. HOUSE. I understand that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole ruled that this proposition to pay the representatives of Herron was an amendment to the Updegraff paragraph.

The SPEAKER. That is a separate amendment, but the Updegraff clause is a part of the original bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole increasing the cost of the survey of the public lands; also on the amendment adopted to the bill paying an additional compensation of one month's pay to the employés of the House.

The SPEAKER. On those three different amendments separate votes will be taken. If there is no objection the Chair will first submit to the House the question of agreeing to all the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole except the three indicated—one by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER], and two by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. The question is on agreeing to these amendments.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that where a proposition is a part of the original bill a separate vote can be had upon it?

The SPEAKER. A separate vote can not be had upon that.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand that is the object of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER].

The SPEAKER. No, sir; the gentleman from Pennsylvania demands a separate vote on an amendment to the bill.

The amendments of the Committee of the Whole, with the exceptions indicated, were concurred in.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote is asked.

Mr. HISCOCK. Before that is done I ask unanimous consent that the order that the House shall take a recess at half past 5 until half past 7 be rescinded for to-day.

Mr. RANDALL. You want to finish this bill to-night?

Mr. HISCOCK. We want to finish it to-night without a recess, and have no evening session.

Mr. RANDALL. That is right.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that the gentleman from New York should ask unanimous consent to extend the period for taking a recess.

Mr. HISCOCK. All I want to do is to have this bill passed without having an evening session.

Mr. WHITE. What will be the order of business for this evening?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to state. The order of business is the bill now under consideration until it is disposed of.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] if he insists on his objection to my request.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment upon which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "section lines," in line 1349 of the bill, insert the following: "Or where for any cause not provided for by law, in Oregon and Washington Territory, he is unable to get the necessary surveys made at the rates aforesaid, he may allow a sum not exceeding $12 per linear mile for standard lines, $10 for township lines, and $6 for section lines."

The question was taken upon the amendment; and it was agreed to upon a division—ayes 83, noes 67.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was asked was to insert the following paragraph:

To pay the legal representatives of Hon. Andrew S. Herron, a member-elect to the Forty-eighth Congress from the sixth district of Louisiana, the sum of $5,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. Before the question is put on that amendment I desire to ask if it is in order to move that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be in order.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I make the motion.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and upon a division there were—ayes 105, noes 25.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, called for tellers.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers; and there were 20 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of a quorum) tellers were not ordered.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] if he will now withdraw his objection to vacating the order for an evening session, and let us finish this bill?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I am willing to have this bill finished this afternoon if we can have a session this evening.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the announcement of the vote on the motion that the House now adjourn. Before announcing the result of that vote the Chair will submit an Executive communication and personal requests of members.

FRENCH CABLE COMPANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives of the United States of America:

With reference to my message of the 12th ultimo on the same subject, I transmit herewith a further report of the Secretary of State, furnishing additional papers received since the date of his former report, in response to a resolution of the House of Representatives of July 5, 1882, calling for any information in the possession of the Department of State in reference to any changes or modifications of the stipulations which the French Cable Company made with this Government.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, February 23, 1882.

POSTAL REGULATIONS.

Mr. LACEY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 7612, a bill (H. R. 7635) to amend section 3829 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, placed on the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CASSIDY. I ask unanimous consent to present at this time a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Nevada with reference to the attempted nullification of the Chinese restriction act, and that it be referred——

Several Members objected, and called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the memorial will be referred through the petition-box.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CABELL, for one week, on account of sickness.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. ROBERTSON asked and obtained leave to print in the RECORD some remarks prepared by him on the bill (H. R. 7563) for the more effectually suppressing and preventing of lotteries by prohibiting the transmission through the mails of publications containing lottery advertisements. [See Appendix.]

And then the result of the vote on the motion of Mr. HISCOCK was announced; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CASSIDY: Memorial of the Legislature of Nevada, with reference to the nullification of the Chinese restriction act—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. G. R. DAVIS: The resolutions adopted by the Chicago Board of Trade, recommending passage of the joint resolution providing for repeal of article 11 of the amendments to the Constitution and for legal enforcement of State contracts—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DUNNELL: Memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, asking for adjustment of land grants to the State—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. GEDDES: The petition of Hon. R. McKilley and 138 others, citizens of Wyandot County, Ohio, for allowance of pension to L. A. Gromley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Sion S. Bass Post, No. 40, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, asking that a pension be granted to the widow of Major George W. Stough—to the same committee.

By Mr. H. S. HARRIS: The resolutions of the New York Chamber of Commerce; the petition of John Potter, and others, ship-owners of Bath, Maine, and of James W. Elwell & Co. and others, ship-owners and shipping merchants of New York, protesting against section 13 of the bill pending relating to American merchant marine—severally to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MOORE: The petition of freedmen of the Chickasaw Nation, asking that they shall be entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of native citizens—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. RANNEY: The petition of Francis Morandi & Son and others, protesting against the extension of Fisk & Billings's patents—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. VANCE: The petition of W. G. Bowman and 31 others, citizens of North Carolina, asking that Wiley G. Woody be restored to the pension-roll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The following memorials and petitions relating to tariff legislation were presented and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. CANDLER: Of C. F. Hovey & Co. and others, merchants of Boston, Massachusetts.

By Mr. S. S. COX: Of Tiffany & Co. and others, of New York.

By Mr. ERRETT: Of resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of Homestead, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. URNER: Of L. Richardson and 31 others, of David Holsinger and 46 others, of McMillin Brothers and 67 others, of Joseph Womsley and 25 others, of John Chambers and 16 others, of John Beinlaw and 7 others, of Charles Murray and 51 others, of R. D. Rees and 8 others, and of C. H. Wiltig and 20 others, citizens of Alleghany and Garrett Counties, Maryland.

By Mr. WILLITS: Of the lumbermen of Oceana County, Michigan.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 24, 1883.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

JAMES G. FAIR, a Senator from the State of Nevada, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, and after having read for some time,

Mr. GARLAND. As there is a good deal of Journal to be read, unless some one desires it, I ask that the further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, Mr. President; I want to hear the Journal read through.

The Principal Legislative Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

COMMITTEE ON POST-OFFICES AND POST-ROADS.

Mr. HILL. I ask permission of the Senate that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads may have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL]? The Chair hears none, and leave is granted.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. VOORHEES. I present a preamble and resolution adopted a few days ago by the Amalgamated Association of the Iron and Steel Workers of the United States assembled in public meeting in the city of Terre Haute, Indiana. I ask that it be read. It is not long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object, if it is to go into the Journal, the record.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am not asking that it go into the Journal. The Senator from Vermont is usually accurate in his statements. I should like to know what he means by objecting to its going into the Journal?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I made a mistake. I should have said the RECORD.

Mr. VOORHEES. I want the resolution to go into the RECORD. It emanates from a very respectable and large national association of laboring people. They are mechanics and workers in iron and steel. The time this morning has been taken up half an hour in reading the trash of last night, and I understand it was owing to the request, the imperative desire of the Senator from Vermont. I want about a minute and a half for the iron and steel workers of the country to be heard here if I can have that privilege. If not, I want to have the fact known.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed in the RECORD if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to its being printed in the RECORD, and for the reason that has been stated so many times, that it encumbers the RECORD so much as to make the book almost entirely useless, and it is very expensive. If the Senator wishes to have it printed as a separate document I have not the slightest objection.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have no desire to have it go into the Journal so that it goes into the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution can be printed as a separate document, but objection is made to its being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. VOORHEES. I observe that a great deal of stuff does go into the RECORD that is not as valuable as this paper is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table. The rule requires that a brief statement of the contents shall be made.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask to have the resolution returned to me. It is briefer than any statement that can be made:

Whereas it is indispensable to the business and commercial prosperity of the people of the United States that their domestic labor and industry should be properly protected in every department—

Mr. EDMUNDS. I feel bound to rise to a question of order. The rule requires a Senator to state briefly the general contents of a paper that he presents.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will do so, Mr. President. There is a large association of people who seem to have incurred the hostility, the unreasonable hostility, of the Senator from Vermont. They are known as the Amalgamated Association of the Iron and Steel Workers of the United States. How they have fallen into disfavor with the Senator from Vermont to such an extent as to receive an objection to a few words on their part being inserted into the RECORD, I am at a loss to determine.

The body of laboring people, among some of the most meritorious in the United States, engaged in one of the largest and best industries, at a national meeting a week or ten days ago, at the beautiful city in which I live, after much discussion, in which there were some of the best minds of Indiana engaged, formulated a brief preamble and resolution occupying two pages and a half of very open writing that would take about a minute and a half in the reading. They have done me the honor to send that here to me, and have asked me in a note to have their views laid before the Senate of the United States, stating at the same time that they had forwarded a similar paper to the immediate Representative of that district, so that they might be heard in both branches of Congress. Their object in doing that is to make known that they believe that in levying import duties for the purpose of revenue view should be had to the protection of the great industries of the United States. Inasmuch, however, as I am informed that there are no iron interests in Vermont, I do not expect their appeal to be heeded in that quarter, but I do expect it to be heeded in almost if not every other quarter in the United States. I believe now I have made known briefly the purpose of this paper, which would have occupied about one-fifth of the time if it had been read, and would have stated its own purpose better than I have been able to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Where a point of order is made the rule requires a brief statement of it; that is all.

Mr. VOORHEES. I return the paper to the desk, and inasmuch as it relates to a subject that has already been acted upon, I move that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of Corder Grange, No. 2074, of Lafayette County, Missouri; a petition of Clear Creek Grange, No. 278, Patrons of Husbandry, of Benton County, Missouri; and a petition of the Lawrence County Grange, of Missouri, praying for the creation of the office of secretary of agriculture; which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7546) donating condemned cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes, to submit an adverse report thereon, and to recommend that the bill be indefinitely postponed. The reasons are stated in the report.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator—I do not want to consume time—to state in a word what the result of the committee's investigation was?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs has heretofore submitted two or three reports upon this same question of condemned cannon, showing that all the condemned cast-iron cannon which are accessible and available for such purposes have already been appropriated and disposed of, and that the only remaining condemned cast-iron cannon are in forts away from lines of transportation, and are heavy guns and unsuitable for such purposes.

Mr. HOAR. I did not mean to object at all to the conclusions announced by the honorable Senator; I have no doubt they are entirely correct; but I thought it would be interesting to a great many associations in the country to know the committee's conclusion, and they would hear it stated in this way more than in the printed report.

Mr. COCKRELL. There has been one printed report made before, setting forth the facts. I move that the report now submitted be printed and agreed to, and that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7323) to supply condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes, have instructed me to report the same adversely for the same reasons as in the other case.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported adversely the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (H. R. 5302) to donate condemned cast-iron cannon to the citizens of Waterville, Maine;

A bill (H. R. 5321) to authorize the Secretary of War to donate condemned cannon for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. 5609) donating condemned cannon to the town of Stoneham, in Massachusetts;

A bill (H. R. 5616) to donate four condemned cannon to Charles W. Sawyer Post, No. 17, of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Dover, New Hampshire;

A bill (H. R. 5961) to authorize the Secretary of War to turn over to the Soldiers and Sailors' Monumental Association of Delaware, Ohio, four condemned cannon and four cannon-balls;

A bill (H. R. 5963) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate three condemned cannon to Blake Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Medina, Ohio, to be used for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. 6320) to authorize the Secretary of War to turn over to the Ladies' Monument Association of Mount Vernon, Ohio, four condemned cannon and four cannon-balls;

A bill (H. R. 6334) donating condemned cannon to Gregg Post, No. 95, of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Bellefonte, Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. 6358) donating condemned cannon for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. 6359) donating condemned cannon for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. 6368) to authorize the Secretary of War to donate condemned cast-iron cannon;

A bill (H. R. 6371) donating condemned cannon for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. 6386) granting condemned cannon for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. 6408) granting eight condemned cannon to be used in the erection of a statue to the memory of General William H. Lytle, of Ohio;

A bill (H. R. 6431) donating condemned cannon to William Logan Rodman Post, No. 1, of the Grand Army of the Republic, for their place of burial;

A bill (H. R. 6432) donating condemned cannon to the post of the Grand Army of the Republic at Fall River, Massachusetts, for their place of burial;

A bill (H. R. 6433) donating condemned cannon to Charles Sumner Post, No. 101, of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Groveland, Massachusetts;

A bill (H. R. 6434) donating condemned cannon and cannon-balls;

A bill (H. R. 6453) to authorize the Secretary of War to give four condemned cast-iron cannon to the Dick Lambert Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. 6506) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the town of Cornwall, Orange County, New York, four condemned cannon and four cannon-balls, for decoration of the soldiers' monument;

A bill (H. R. 6558) donating condemned cannon and cannon-balls to Alexander Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Piqua, Ohio, for ornamental and monumental purposes, and Farragut Post, Portsmouth, Virginia, for memorial purposes;

A bill (H. R. 6590) granting condemned cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. 6779) donating condemned cannon and other munitions of war to G. H. Barnes Post, No. 175, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. 6815) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cannon for the soldiers' monument at Utica, New York;

A bill (H. R. 6817) to donate four condemned cannon to Henry Wilson Post, No. 68, Grand Army of the Republic, of Slaterville New York, for monumental purposes in the cemetery at that place;

A bill (H. R. 6818) donating condemned cannon for monumental purposes;

A bill (H. R. 6821) donating condemned cannon to the Monumental Association of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 228) to denote condemned cast-iron cannon to Goodrich Post, No. 22, of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Danville, Pennsylvania.

Mr. COCKRELL. Those bills are reported adversely for the reasons stated in the former report. I move that they be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6625) to authorize the Washington and Atlantic Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1998) for the relief of James Hooper, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTLER, Mr. CALL, Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. VEST, and Mr. HARRIS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no "concurrent or other resolutions" the morning hour is closed.

Mr. VEST. I desire to call up for consideration the resolution I submitted some time since in regard to the Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator from Missouri will not call up his resolution this morning. We want to dispose of the legislative appropriation bill to-day.

Mr. VEST. I cannot hear the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call up the legislative appropriation bill. We wish to finish it to-day, and I think we had better begin it at once.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business for a few minutes?

Mr. ALLISON. As soon as we get the appropriation bill before the Senate, I will yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri withdraw his request to have the resolution considered to-day?

Mr. VEST. I will state to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that of course I would not obstruct the legislation in regard to the appropriation bills, and if there can be any sort of agreement that the resolution shall be taken up as soon as we get through with the appropriation bill, I shall have no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that of course I will not interpose an objection to that being done. It is very important that the appropriation bills shall be passed at an early day in order to get them into conference.

Mr. VEST. I understand that.

Mr. VOORHEES. I understand that provision has been made in a bill which has already passed the House for the Yellowstone Park question. It is a matter that will give rise to a good deal of discussion. I am ready for it any time the Senator from Missouri is.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri to let his resolution give way to the appropriation bill, and reserve the right to call it up as though the morning hour applied again after that bill is disposed of, if there shall be any such time to-day.

Mr. VEST. I wish to say one word to the Senator from Indiana. If I believed that the action of the House of Representatives, to which he has just alluded, would not be disturbed by the Senate, I should not care anything about it; but the action of the Committee on Appropriations of this body shows that under the rule they have adopted such legislation will be reported against by the committee here, and I have every reason to believe that unless this resolution passes the park will be absolutely destroyed. That is the end of it. The Senate may do what it pleases with it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that I have conferred with the Department on this subject. I have conferred with the Secretary of the Interior who has charge of it, and there is a different view entertained by him on the subject from that presented by the Senator from Missouri. I should have to be very thoroughly convinced of the necessity of such a measure before I would vote for so sweeping a reflection as this is upon the administration of that Department, especially after I have been informed as I have been on the subject.

Mr. VEST. My information is exactly opposite in regard to the views of the Secretary of the Interior.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I now ask that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] moves to postpone the Calendar until to-morrow with a view to take up the appropriation bill he has named. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Calendar is postponed. He now moves to take up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be announced.

The ACTING SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 7482) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. For the sake of convenience and with a view to finishing the bill to-day, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be considered as we go along.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the order if there be no objection. There is none.

Mr. ALLISON. I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] for the purpose of a brief executive session.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 6900) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VANCE. I gave notice yesterday that I would ask leave to call up this morning the bill for the relief of cadets at the Naval Academy, which I was instructed to report from the Naval Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The action of the Senate, after the morning hour was closed, was to postpone everything to take up the legislative appropriation bill, which is now before the Senate.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will oblige me, I trust. I do not want to debate the bill, but ask action on it. If there is any debate, I will let it go.

Mr. ALLISON. It is very important that this appropriation bill should pass to-day; it will take some time, but after this bill is out of the way I have no doubt the Senator will have an easy pathway for his bill.

Mr. VANCE. If the bill does not reach the House to-day, in order to be on the table of the House on Monday, it will stand no chance at all.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appropriation bill is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7482) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations was under the head of "Senate," in line 15, to reduce the appropriation for compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary in the service of the Senate, from $297,857.10 to $276,031.60.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 63, after the words "Foreign Relations," to strike out "and;" and in line 64, after the words "Public Lands," to insert "clerk to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate;" so as to make the clause read:

> For clerk to the Committee on Claims, clerk to the Committee on Commerce, clerk to the Committee on the Judiciary, clerk to the Committee on Private Land Claims, clerk to the Committee on Pensions, clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs, clerk to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, clerk to the Committee on the District of Columbia, clerk to the Committee on Naval Affairs, clerk to the Joint Committee on the Library, clerk to the Committee on the Census, clerk to the Committee on Foreign Relations, clerk to the Committee on Public Lands, clerk to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, at $2,220 each.

Mr. ALLISON. The word "and" should be inserted after "public lands" in line 64.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in line 119, before the word "clerks," to strike out "twenty-two" and insert "twenty-one," and in line 126, after the word "session," to strike out "28,116" and insert "26,838;" so as to make the clause read:

For twenty-one clerks to committees, at $6 per day during the session, $26,838.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 123, before the word "pages," to strike out "seventeen" and insert "fourteen;" after the word "Chamber," in the same line, to strike out "including three riding pages;" in line 125, after the word "and," to strike out "one riding page" and insert "four riding pages;" and in line 126, after the word "rate," to strike out "$9,967.50" and insert "$11,105;" so as to make the clause read:

For fourteen pages for the Senate Chamber, at the rate of $2.50 per day each during the session, and four riding pages annually, at the same rate, $11,105.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 130, before the word "folders," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" in line 131, after the word "employed," to strike out "5,475" and insert "6,570;" and in line 133, after the word "all," to strike out "6,690" and insert "7,785;" so as to make the clause read:

For one foreman in folding-room, $1,200; six folders, at $3 per day while actually employed, $6,570; in all, $7,785.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 135, 136, and 137, in the following words:

For reporting the debates and proceedings of the Senate, $25,000, payable in equal monthly installments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 139, after the word "including," to strike out "5" and insert "6;" and in line 143, after "Sergeant-at-Arms," to strike out "14" and insert "15;" so as to make the clause read:

For stationery and newspapers, including $6,000 for stationery for committees and officers of the Senate, and $150 for postage-stamps for the Secretary of the Senate, and $150 for postage-stamps for the Sergeant-at-Arms, $15,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 160, to insert:

For reporting the debates and proceedings of the Senate, $25,000, payable in equal monthly installments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "public printing," in line 356, after "printer," to strike out "3,600" and insert "4,500;" so as to read:

For compensation of the Public Printer, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As far as the bill has been read it relates exclusively to the House of Representatives and the Senate, I believe. This is the first item in which appropriations are made outside of the House and Senate. While I do not intend especially to oppose the pending amendment, I think it a suitable place for me to state the amount appropriated by this bill, as I notice the chairman did not, as is usually done, make a statement to the Senate as to whether or not it was larger than last year's bill or whether there were changes from last year's bill. If the Senator wishes now to make any statement, I do not desire to do it; but if not I will state myself a few of the leading changes in this bill from that of last year.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from West Virginia prefers to make the statement, I have no objection. I have a statement before me, but I have not sought to consume time. I am entirely willing he should make any statement he chooses.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am obliged to the Senator for saying he has no objection to my making a statement. From his usual courtesy toward me, and his good humor generally, I did not suppose he would object to a short statement from me.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator desires, I can make the statement now. I have had it prepared.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think it would be very well for the Senator to do that, because he has the statement more full than I have, and I know that he wants the Senate to understand the condition of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand, the Senator from West Virginia desires to know what is contained in this bill as compared with what was appropriated last year——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to my colleague on the committee that it is not for my information, but for that of the Senate. I think I know pretty well what is in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. This bill as reported by the Senate Committee on Appropriations appropriates for the civil service covered by it $20,598,879.55. The act of last year appropriated $20,349,185.54, so that there is a slight increase in this bill over the act of last year for similar purposes. The estimates, however, for this year from the Departments were $21,430,960.08, so the bill now is nearly a million less than the amount estimated by the Departments for this service.

That is about the only statement that I think it is necessary to make at this time. I will say that there are a few increases in the compensation of officers of the Government, and the committee believe that these additions to the compensation of the officers named are necessary and therefore they have proposed them.

Mr. BECK. I believe the largest increase was in the Land Office. I think perhaps the chairman had better state that.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that the principal increase in this bill as proposed by the Committee on Appropriations has been in the Interior Department, and for the purpose of bringing up the arrears of business in that Department, chiefly the Land Office; and when that part of the bill is reached I shall be glad to make some further explanation in reference to the increase of the clerical force there. Of the total increase in this bill as reported to the Senate, amounting in all to about $200,000, $86,000 is in the Interior Department.

There are some small items of increase in some of the other Departments, but I believe there are no considerable increases with the exceptions I have stated on the bill as passed by the House and in the items contained in the act of last year.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It has been stated by the chairman of the committee that this bill exceeds in the gross amount that of last year about a quarter of a million dollars, or a little less, perhaps. It is not my intention to make objection to any particular feature of the bill; I believe the Committee on Appropriations considered it as thoroughly as possible and only made such advances as in their judgment they believed to be right. My intention is to call attention especially to this bill to show how rapidly it is increasing from year to year. Last year we added, I believe, 1,300 clerks on the bill over any previous year. This year we have added in the neighborhood of 100 again. We supposed last year that the increased number of clerks we then provided for would soon work up the business so that we could soon reduce the expenditures; but we are actually increasing them, for as the chairman has stated, this bill exceeds that of last year as reported to the Senate about a quarter of a million dollars, and I believe it provides for about 100 additional employés over last year, though, as the chairman has stated, the increase is principally in the Land Office.

Now, to show how this bill is growing as well as others, I have here a statement made by the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations last year. He said:

This bill in 1880 was $16,852,000—in 1881, $17,515,000; in 1882, $18,561,000; in 1883, $20,210,000.

I will only read round numbers—

The present bill exceeds that of 1883, this being for 1884, as I have said, about a quarter of a million dollars, showing that there has been a steady increase from 1880 to 1883 of two or three million dollars regularly each year until this year, when the increase is less than it has been heretofore.

The entire appropriations of this year, judging from the bills already passed by the Senate, will be perhaps not a great deal, but somewhat, larger than last year. Judging from what I have before me as to the amount of the bills which have already passed, and what I know of those now pending in the other branch of Congress, I think that the appropriations this year will exceed those of last year except for pensions. The pension appropriation bill was $100,000,000 last year, and this year it is $86,000,000. Of course that is a reduction; we all know why that comes; but for the regular ordinary expenses of the Government we are gradually increasing each year.

It will be recollected that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, my friend from Iowa, last year made a very interesting statement to the Senate and gave a number of figures to show that the large expenditure of last year over the previous year was temporary and for temporary purposes, and that it would not probably be necessary to continue the large expenditure of last year; but we find when the present year's bills come that they are equally as large as those of last year. This perhaps is all right; the country is growing, the people expect more business to be done, but I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we are not decreasing, as it was supposed last year we would do, but increasing.

There are in this bill—this is the first one reached—perhaps a half dozen or more increases in salaries.

Mr. BECK. We made a very large increase in the Pension Office last year.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, that is true, but the present year we appropriate the same amount for the Pension Office employés. There is no diminution there whatever, and none expected for another year, until 1885, perhaps. The large increase of 1,300 employés made last year, according to my recollection, was principally for the Pension Office. Probably 800 of them were for that office.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from West Virginia of course knows very well that the large increase in the clerical force last year was for pension business in the Pension Office and in the offices of the Adjutant-General and Surgeon-General. With perhaps a very few exceptions, the entire increase of the clerical force last year was for the purpose of facilitating the settlement and adjustment of pension claims.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes; I recollect that very well, but not to such an extent as the chairman of the committee states. I think probably there were four or five hundred additional clerks outside of the Pension Office.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg to correct my friend, because I know he does not want to do injustice to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly not.

Mr. ALLISON. There was a very small increase. A number of clerks were carried into specific appropriations that had hitherto been paid out of general appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I had forgotten that.

Mr. ALLISON. That accounts for an apparent increase last year, when there was not a real increase, but a mere transfer to specific appropriations of clerical force that had formerly been paid out of general appropriations for general purposes.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The chairman is right about that. I had forgotten for the moment why the large increase of thirteen hundred clerks took place, but I recollect now that a large portion of them had been paid out of miscellaneous funds of one kind or another, and last year for the first time we added them to the legislative bill; but the point is that the present legislative bill is still an increase over last year of nearly one hundred, I believe. The House reduced the number of employés on this bill from last year forty-one; the Senate Committee on Appropriations increase it, as appeared to be necessary—I do not criticise that—one hundred and thirty-two, making a net increase of ninety-one as I have it. What I want to call attention to is the gradual increase of this bill that is going on, and let us see if there is not some way to stop it.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator says the House decreased the number of employés forty-one. That decrease occurred in this way: Twenty-six of the employés of the Patent Office were dropped—twenty-five, as it is said, by mistake. I do not know how that may have been. It may have been intentional on the part of the House. And twenty clerks in the office of the Register of the Treasury were dropped. So of the forty-one clerks referred to by the Senator from West Virginia twenty-five were dropped from the Patent Office and twenty from the office of the Register of the Treasury, which we restored by our amendments.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My recollection is the same as that of the chairman. Still that does not change the general fact that we are gradually increasing all the appropriation bills, and especially this one; and my object was to call general attention to that fact, and not to any specific point.

Now, we are on an amendment which increases a salary $900. It is said that the Public Printing Office is a very important bureau, and that the Printer's salary has not been equal to what it should be for the responsibilities of his place; yet this is $900 increase, and we all know from experience that if you once increase a salary it does not go back; it goes forward all the time or remains as increased. The result, I fear, will be that next year a large number of persons who are at the head of bureaus who are now getting $3,600 will each say, "I am as much entitled to $4,500 as the Public Printer; I have heretofore been equal to him; my duties are fully equal to his, and I ought to have the same salary." I shall make no motion, but I submit to the Senate that this increase, I fear, will lead to further increases of very considerable amount.

It will be seen further on in the bill that there are half a dozen, probably in all, increases of salary. There is one decrease which I thought ought not to have been made, as it was the only one in the bill when there were a number of officers who had been added to; and I thought it was doing injustice to the person who is affected by it from the fact that the law creating the commission of which he is the head gave him $6,000 and it has remained so until this time. My principal objection to it was that it appeared to be singling him from all others in the bill and reducing his salary when some others had an increase of salary. However, that is a matter for the Senate to act upon when we reach it.

I make this general statement and shall delay the Senate very little in the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I think, after what the Senator from West Virginia has stated, that I ought to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we are not increasing from year to year the expenses that properly come within the purview of this bill. I have here a table running over a series of years. For instance, in 1876 we appropriated $18,902,000 for this same service; in 1877, it was reduced to $15,407,000; in 1878, $15,450,000; in 1879, $15,271,000; in 1880, $16,286,000; in 1881, $16,274,000; and in 1882, $17,678,000.

Last year for the first time we drew in some six or seven hundred clerks that had prior to that time been paid out of other appropriations, and appropriated for them in this bill. We also, last year, as the Senator from West Virginia states, appropriated some $1,700,000 for clerical force to bring up the pension cases, and last year also, as this year, there are some large appropriations in this bill, as for instance the Utah Commission, which is a new item requiring some fifty or sixty thousand dollars. Now, in this bill for the first time we appropriate some $25,000 or more for what is known as the Civil-Service Commission. In the nature of things these bills are not the same from year to year; but I submit to my friend that there has been no substantial increase in the appropriation for clerical service in the Departments anywhere, either in this bill or in the bill of last year, if we except the Pension Office.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to say to the Senator from West Virginia that the particular increase now under consideration was recommended by the Committee on Printing; indeed a larger increase was recommended by the Committee on Printing, and a much larger one than they did recommend would have been recommended if we had thought it would have been of any use to lay it before the Committee on Appropriations.

The salary of this officer, who is the most underpaid officer that I am familiar with in the Government, was formerly $4,500. It was reduced on an appropriation bill to $3,600; and this is merely restoring it to what it was before. He has charge of 1,600 persons over whom he has the power of official life and death, and he disburses between two and three million dollars per annum. I do not see why so accomplished and efficient a man as we have at the head of this department should remain here when he can get double the compensation in private establishments.

Mr. BECK. I voted for this increase, and desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question in regard to this Printing Office. I understand that the Public Printer has hardly any control over his printers; that they are run by some league or printers' union or something else outside of the Government, so that he is absolutely at the mercy of some outside association both as to the wages of his men and as to the men he shall employ, and that he can not do anything unless he has the assent of some outside organization. What is the truth about that?

Mr. ANTHONY. There is too much truth in that. There is a typographical association in this District composed of employés who assume, without consulting the employers, to fix the rate of compensation; and if any person not a member of that association is employed in any establishment all those who belong to it leave. It is a tyranny which the craft would not submit to if it was ordained by law, but which they impose upon themselves for their own benefit.

Mr. BECK. If the Committee on Printing or any other body in this Government has any power to emancipate the Government of the United States from the control of an organization of that sort by placing power in the hands of the Public Printer or anybody else, I am willing to vote him any amount of money, I do not care what it is, so that this Government shall not be dictated to by any association.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am in full sympathy with the Senator from Kentucky on that point. The Committee on Printing have once, and I think twice, reported a resolution, which has been adopted by the Senate, instructing the Public Printer to employ his men for the best interest of the Government according to the market price of wages; but it has not met the approbation of the other House of Congress; and now there is a law of Congress which requires the Public Printer to pay to compositors a larger sum than is paid by the private printers down street. This typographical association fixes the price of composition, and then remits to the private employers a portion of the rate.

Mr. BECK. I only desired to call attention to it because the attention of the Committee on Appropriations was called to it sharply. While I know nothing about this association and do not mean to reflect on it: I want to be entirely free from its influence and power, and if the Committee on Printing can devise any way to do it, it will get my vote.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing has devised a way and it has been adopted by the Senate, but has not met the approbation of the other House of Congress.

Mr. ROLLINS. I want to ask the Senator from Rhode Island, who understands this matter fully, how much more the Government is required to pay for work in the Government Printing Office by reason of this union than is paid in the private establishments in the city of Washington? That is a fair test.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suppose the difference is about 20 per cent., but the Public Printer is compelled to pay it, not by that typographical organization but by a higher power, by the power of Congress which fixes the rate of compensation. The law fixes the rate of compensation at a higher rate than is paid to other employés of the same character.

Now, my sympathies are all with the interests of labor, and I desire that every man who works with his hands shall receive the highest compensation that is consistent with the good of the business in which he is employed; but I do not recognize the right of the employés of an establishment, without consulting the employer, to fix the rate of labor, and to fix that for the Government higher than it is fixed for private employés. A majority of this typographical association are employed in the Government Printing Office, so that the employés of the Government Printing Office fix the rate of wages and then after imposing it upon the Government remit a portion of it to private establishments.

Mr. ROLLINS. Is it not the fact that they practically dictate to the Public Printer who shall be employed?

Mr. ANTHONY. They do so far as that he shall not employ any man who does not belong to the typographical union.

Mr. ROLLINS. In other words, if he undertook to employ to-day or to-morrow or any other day a practical printer, if he did it even from charitable considerations, if he found here in the city of Washington a poor printer starving for bread who did not belong to this union, could he do it under the present regulations?

Mr. ANTHONY. The members of the union would all leave the Government Printing Office.

Mr. ROLLINS. That is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, these are most remarkable statements. It seems to me that they must fall with startling effect upon Senators' ears, that a great governmental establishment upon which we expend millions of dollars annually is hopelessly and helplessly in the hands of a private, and for aught I know secret, association that dominates its whole management, that controls the choice of employés, so that those who are not favored of the mechanics of the United States that belong to vocations that are involved in this office can not have a competition there with the men that do belong to this private association. Is it a fact that all the printers, the type-setters, or the employés of any kind in the Government Printing Office must be taken from one organization to the exclusion of the thousands in the United States who do not belong to it? Why, sir, if a tyranny of this kind exists to-day and pervades the Government Printing Office there ought not to be one dollar more appropriated until we call a halt and this tyranny is removed and the Government Printing Office is put open to every person skillful enough to do the work done there, whether he belongs to this association or not. I should be glad to know whether the Public Printer is in sympathy with this performance and whether he submits to it or whether he protests against it. I should be glad if the chairman of the Committee on Printing, if he knows about that, would give some information to the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. What is the use of his protesting when we have imposed upon him by law rates which are even higher than those fixed by the typographical union?

Mr. HALE. Do we impose on him the necessity of being controlled, dominated by this union or association as to the men that he employs?

Mr. ANTHONY. We do not; but then if he does not obey the behests of that association the Government Printing Office stops.

Mr. HALE. Then clearly the Government Printer at the close of the present session of Congress ought to begin deliberately and ruthlessly to weed out from that office every man who belongs to this union, and summon from the great cities of this country where they will be found other men who do not belong to it, so that in an emergency when Congress is sitting and the work must be done we shall not be at the mercy of this union.

Mr. ANTHONY. I quite agree with the Senator, and if Congress will give the Public Printer power to do that I do not hesitate to say that he will exercise it.

Mr. HALE. What power would he need embodied in this bill to do that?

Mr. ANTHONY. That he shall employ his labor at the market price of wages for the best interest of the Government. I think that the printers in the Government Printing-Office are entitled to a little higher pay than those in private establishments, because their employment is somewhat uncertain. Sometimes there is a very great press of work and a large number of men are employed; then the work falls off, and they are furloughed; but, expecting to be recalled again, they do not leave the city and have to remain here unemployed. I think there ought to be some increase of compensation over that in private establishments where they have steady work. But it is to be observed that the printers in the Government Printing Office work only eight hours and that they receive higher compensation than printers down town who work ten hours.

Mr. HALE. I am not so much troubled about the rates that are paid, because I am not intelligent upon that matter; there may be reasons why it should be so, but upon the other great question that this office should not be controlled and tyrannized over by this association I have no doubt. It ought to be open to the whole country and not under this control.

I wish the Senator from Rhode Island, who has had this matter upon his mind, would frame some clause that he can add, to which I do not believe a single Senator will object, that shall give the superintendent of this great office the opportunity, after this Congress shall have closed and ended its labors, to begin at once and weed out the office so that we shall control it hereafter. When I say "we" I mean Congress and the people, and not this association.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think the suggestion coming from the Senator from Maine a very good one, but this bill is not the place for it. The sundry civil bill, as we all know, is pending in the other House, where it is probable that the appropriation for public printing is made, and on that bill some regulation could very properly be added.

Mr. HALE. That may be so, and that is a bill yet to be considered by the Committee on Appropriations. It can clearly be done without trenching on the rule of the Senate already adopted of not putting on legislation, because it can be put in the form of a limitation on the expenditure of the money appropriated. I do not know but that is the proper place; probably it is.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say in regard to this matter that there is really nothing required now. The Public Printer can do that now if he sees fit.

Mr. DAVIS. Perhaps he wants some encouragement from Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. He may want the encouragement. He came there and found that this printers' union was absolutely running the establishment. They have a rule which fixes the number of apprentices the Public Printer may employ—twenty, I think it is—and no other person can be employed under their rule in the Government Printing Office unless he belongs to the Columbia Typographical Union, an institution of this city.

Mr. HALE. I am told by a Senator that an order has been really issued from the head of this establishment that no man shall be taken on to its rolls unless he belongs to this association. Does the Senator know whether that be true?

Mr. PLUMB. I know that that is true, and I know, further than that——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Allow me to ask the Senator a question. Do I understand that the Superintendent of Public Printing himself has issued an order to that effect?

Mr. PLUMB. No; but the typographical union, I understand.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But I understood the Senator to say that from the head of this printing bureau there was such an order issued; am I correct in that?

Mr. PLUMB. I spoke of the association.

Mr. HALE. I was told that it was the superintendent of the establishment who issued the order. That may not be so.

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, no.

Mr. PLUMB. All I know is this: the Public Printer has stated that he found the typographical union in possession of the Government Printing Office when he came in; that he did not believe the establishment could be run without the consent of the typographical union; that is, he did not believe printers of sufficient skill could be had in the United States to meet the needs of that office, unless they came from and at the dictation of the typographical union. I know that a person was employed in that department as a proof-reader, and that immediately after his employment an emissary of the typographical union, himself employed in the department, came to him and asked him for his card or certificate of membership in the Columbia Typographical Union, and I think, perhaps, also, that he added that the body issues a special permit to a man to be employed in the Government Printing Office. At all events he was called on for his card of membership. He said he had none, upon which he was notified that he could not work in the Government Printing Office, and he was discharged because he did not choose to pay $6 and join the Columbia Typographical Union.

Mr. HALE. By whom was he told that he could not be employed if he did not join?

Mr. PLUMB. An emissary of the typographical union, who was also an employé of the Government Printing Office, and still in the employment of that establishment.

Mr. HALE. I am told that the superintendent sympathizes with this feeling that it ought to be broken up. I hope that is so.

Mr. PLUMB. I can not say as to that, but still I have no doubt he would make any correction he should be authorized by law to make. I believe he ought as a matter of his own responsibility, of his own duty and obligation as an officer of the Government, to establish his own rules and regulations for the employment of the persons in that department, entirely independent of the rules and regulations of any society or association whatever.

I was myself a printer at one time; I sympathize with that very meritorious class of people; I certainly mean to sympathize, as I think I do, with every man who wants to labor and with every man who wants the best possible price for his labor; but I do not sympathize with any man whose desire to labor is so strong that it requires him to say, and to put extraordinary means into execution to say, that some other man shall not labor or shall only labor on the terms that he himself imposes. I believe that is a point we ought not to go to. I believe the Government itself ought not to commit itself any more to such specifications of employment in the Government Printing Office than it would similar ones in regard to employment in the Treasury. If we are to be subjected to the domination in this important department of the Government of an outside organization, which by co-operation at the moment might choose to take away all the employés of the Government Printing Office, we had better meet that on the threshold before it grows stronger than it now is and break it up.

As the Senator from Rhode Island says, perhaps these men ought to have more wages than they have elsewhere. The matter of wages in this connection is a matter of no possible consequence. I would rather pay twice the wages to a non-union printer, a man not only willing to labor himself but willing that other men shall labor with him for the support which they need as much as he, than to pay half the wages and submit to the irresponsible control which now exists in that institution.

That is a question which we shall be required to meet at some time. I believe the Public Printer, himself a practical man, who has had occasion to employ in the private employment from which he came large numbers of printers, with a little encouragement to do this would faithfully carry out any hint or permission we give him in the law. I believe he ought to do it. I believe that every one who goes into that employ ought to go in free from any allegiance to outside associations which direct what the wages shall be, and the time employed.

We have raised a good deal of fuss about political assessments. They are no more unauthorized, no more pernicious than the assessments that are levied on the employés of the Government Printing Office, who require everybody to observe them. The hours of labor are not only established, but by insidious processes, which they know best how to employ, particular persons become favored in the distribution of the work of that office in such a way that some men make very considerable wages, while other men, equally as needy and equally as deserving, make nothing. The portion of the work that is called "fat," goes to one man, and what is called "lean" goes to another; one man gets continuous employment, and another is elbowed and shoved aside and is kept waiting and hungry. The work is carried on in that way to minister to the power and to aid the purposes of this typographical union, and the Government sits here and simply lets the functions of this important department of the Government be entirely absorbed by this organization.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President——

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if there would be any difficulty in bringing printers of equal ability from the different States to do the work of the Printing Office?

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I want to submit a few words on behalf of the printers. There are two sides of a question. It seems that only one side of this question has been heard on this floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg pardon. I merely wished to ask the question of the Senator from Kansas before he took his seat.

Mr. PLUMB. There would be no trouble in filling the Government Printing Office from every State in the Union with printers who do not belong to the typographical union. It is a thing of the past almost. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], I have no doubt, himself can bear witness to the fact that it has been largely broken up in the last few years, and that it does not exist at all in some States.

Mr. MORGAN. There were in 1880, according to the census returns, 72,726 printers in the United States, and I suppose that ought to supply a sufficient number for the Government office.

Mr. VOORHEES. I rose, Mr. President, for the purpose of saying a few words in behalf of the printers. It would seem from the debate the last half hour here as if they were a very dangerous class of people. From the unbroken strain of amazed and indignant talk on this subject it would seem that this Government had been outraged and plundered by them. That is not my understanding. My understanding is that a more painstaking, conscientious, hard-working class of people does not live than the printers who are now in question. If they have committed any abuse on any public interest I should like to have it pointed out. I should like to know what they have done. Have they received too much pay for their work? I should like to see a Senator who will rise here and say so.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator from Indiana permit me to direct his attention to one point?

Mr. VOORHEES. If you want to answer that point.

Mr. PLUMB. I want simply to state the abuse I speak of. While they want to labor for themselves, and do good labor and valuable labor, they insist that nobody else shall labor except at their beck.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will come to that directly. Let us take things as they are presented; I want to settle some points as I go along. I do not understand that anybody pretends that these men get too much pay for their work. I want to settle another point: I do not understand that anybody pretends that they do not do their work well. So we have two great propositions in employment and labor; one is that the work is done well, and the other is that they do not get too much pay for it. Then I should like to know what the trouble is? The Senator from Kansas says the trouble is that they are associated together so that their wages shall not be reduced by somebody coming in and working for less. That is about the plain statement.

Mr. PLUMB. No; I did not state it that way.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator did not state it that way, but that is all that he said.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Indiana is too fair to misstate me so grossly as that.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not pretend that that was your statement, but that was the point of it.

Mr. PLUMB. You say that is what I said. I did not state it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will correct myself, then. Of course I meant that the Senator said so simply in substance. I repeat it, the Senator from Kansas said that they would not allow other people to work in so many words. That is not true, and he will have to correct his statement a little as well as I shall have to correct mine. The Senator said that they were associated so as not to allow men to come in and underwork them and thus reduce their wages.

Mr. PLUMB. No; that is not the statement I made.

Mr. VOORHEES. I did not say it was the statement. I say that is what you meant.

Mr. PLUMB. It is not what I meant.

Mr. VOORHEES. Then what did you mean?

Mr. PLUMB. My meaning is that they will not let any person work unless he first joins their association and subscribes to their rules.

Mr. VOORHEES. And work at the same wages.

Mr. PLUMB. But it is more than a question of wages. It is general direction and control in the relation of labor.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not remember how the Senator from Kansas voted on the Chinese question, but I know that the idea of protecting American labor from the competition of cheap Chinese labor swayed this entire Congress, both the Senate and House. I believe in fact as I turn my eye to the Chair as it is now occupied that about the only conspicuous and distinguished opponent of that idea is now in the Chair. I do not remember the eloquence of the Senator from Kansas or anybody else's particularly except that of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] now in the Chair against the proposition which we were then putting in the form of a law that labor in this country should not be brought in contact with cheap labor from China.

I said I intended to say something for the printer. I want to talk on his side for a little while. The way he reasons is this: he has as much right to protect himself in the wages that will give him bread and shelter and clothing as other people have to protect themselves. Is it wrong that they are associated together? To hear the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and other Senators it would seem as if there was a sort of Cataline conspiracy. There is not an association in the world, either of talent, or labor, or capital, that does not do exactly the same thing.

A medical association fixes the fees, and if one of their number comes and administers quinine for less than the agreed fees, he will be expelled from that association. It is the same principle exactly with the typographical union. They say a man must work at particular wages. The physicians of the country say the same thing, and if one is employed at less than the agreed price, those who are already employed will walk away from the bedside of sickness and leave you to die. In many places the bar have their associations and agreements also. Going still further, take up the great industries of the country. Take the Wool-Growers' Association, the Iron-Mongers' Association, the Steel-Workers' Association, the Spinners' Association, Liquor-Dealers' Association, to say nothing of that master of all associated strength, the National Banking Association. No words of reproach for them, no outcry, no danger; but the typographical union, those men who work day and night at their printers' cases, seem to alarm Senators. They do not alarm me. I am much more alarmed at the National Banking Association which meets every year at Saratoga to have their annual congress, when the champagne corks pop and the terrapin is good, and they lay down lines of financial policy agreed upon in luxury and splendor, and come down here and dictate to this Congress from end to end of this Capitol, and every Senator knows it.

These typos are not dictating here. The Senator from Kansas is alarmed, other Senators are alarmed, and they say this thing had better be met on the threshold. Let us meet it upon the threshold, but let us not have a tempest in a teapot on the threshold. Talk about Congress being dictated to! It has been and will continue to be till the end of time dictated to by associated capital, associated talent; but less than on any other subject will it be dictated to by Government printers.

Sir, associated talent, associated wealth, associated labor have governed the world in all times and they will continue to do so. It is just as legitimate and just as innocent and harmless, and more so, for these people who toil with their hands and make their associations to protect them in their rights as it is to those who are more powerful.

I presented a paper here this morning from an association known as workers in iron and steel in my State, and I want them to have their voice heard. It is an association of men who delve in the earth and who work in the blast-furnaces and all that. I believe they have as much right to be heard here as the national association of banks. Yet how different would have been the reception of a memorial of the annual National Banking Association held at Saratoga from that which was given to those workers in iron and steel, and how differently we would speak of something the National Banking Association was doing from that which we speak of the poor Government printers down here with no voice on this floor!

Mr. President, I can generally be counted on on that side which is not here to speak for itself. It seems to me that there are plenty to speak on the other side. It seems to me there are plenty to get up here a sort of fictitious alarm about the Government printers, who do work and get none too much pay, and who do not want to be underworked by others. We have had the most eloquent appeals here about the protection of American labor. That is just what this typographical union are doing; they are protecting American labor in their own profession and calling.

Mr. ALLISON. As this matter is not involved in the pending item of appropriation, I trust now we shall be able to go on with the bill, and when the appropriation for the public printing comes up, of course any amendment Senators may desire to suggest will be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had announced the adoption of the amendment before the debate began. The Chair will say to the Senator from Iowa that he does not understand there is any objection to the amendment as to the compensation to the Public Printer.

Mr. HAWLEY. I want to say a few words just now, as a member of the Printing Committee, so as to let all the remarks appear in one place in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. All of these laborers and any other class of laborers have a perfect right to form an association for their mutual benefit. I do not know that anybody denies that it is not only natural but even praiseworthy. The association has a right to agree upon a price. Two men or 2,000 men have a right to agree upon the price which they will ask for their labor. In the next place they have a right to say that they will not work when they can not get their price. So far their rights are indisputable, but they have no right to say that another man not a member of the association shall not work in the place, or that he shall not work even for a lower price if he chooses. The other man, not a member, who has not agreed to and does not agree to their terms may come in and desire to work, and he may be willing to work for a little less rate, and the employer should have a right to hire him and the man should be absolutely protected in his labor. His right against the 2,000 is just as good as theirs against him. There is no sort of doubt about those principles thus far.

It should be said, in order to state the case fairly, that the Government itself has more or less embarrassed some of these questions by establishing an eight-hour law, and that brings it about that men in the employ of the Government get a little more wages for the same quantity of work done. The Government has still further embarrassed the question by establishing the rates to be paid those who do not work by the day, the prices per thousand for composition, and the prices, I think, per hour.

If we desire to open this question fully to the absolute control of the Public Printer so that he may stand precisely in the position of a private employer, we should repeal those laws. No man outside of Government work in the country is bound by any law to call eight hours a day's work, nor is he bound to give 60 cents a thousand for night work. If you wish to put your Printer in a perfectly free position, I say as free a position as the citizen is in, you should repeal those two statutes. I would then demand of the Public Printer, if that is to be your policy, that he shall employ good men at good rates and defend them in the employment.

I do not object to giving the printers a little more there than they have in some other places. Their claim for that, I say as a man who has had something to do with the employment of printers, is not unreasonable, and for this reason: the employment is uncertain; sometimes he requires more printers than at other times. The inevitable result is—you may say it is their fault—that there will be a body of printers about here sometimes who will have no work, and they feel under those circumstances that when they are at work they should be entitled to a little greater rate of compensation. Those are general, equitable considerations.

The Public Printer should be in a condition to employ people for good wages (and he is good pay and gives reasonable wages) upon just such terms as I in my private business or as the chairman of the committee, or anybody else.

While I sympathize with all the rights of association, to begin with, the natural man rises up in opposition to dictation from anybody. I know something of a case like that suggested by the Senator from Kansas. If a good and honorable and honest man is brought here and employed by the Public Printer, as it sometimes has happened, without his knowing whether the man belonged to the association or not, the members of the association ought to let him alone. I would have the Public Printer compel the observance of that man's rights as an American citizen.

The whole thing needs revision if Senators are going to do what they seem to indicate and desire to do here.

We have now as good a Public Printer as in my opinion we have ever had, and I am glad the committee has raised his wages a little, and I would add $1,500 more, for it is a place that would kill Samson. It is the hardest-worked place in the Government, and the largest printing establishment in the world, and I would be glad to give him more wages still, that he might be able to insure his life against hard work.

Mr. CONGER. I do not understand from anything that has been said that this association undertook to dictate at all to the Public Printer whom he should employ or whom he should not employ otherwise than to say that they will not work there if certain persons are employed.

Mr. HAWLEY. That they have a right to say. In my judgment they have a right to say whether they will work in the Public Printing Office; but the man who does not belong to the association has the right just as much as any other man to go and ask for work there.

Mr. CONGER. I have heard this question discussed at one time and another for the last few years, and I never yet have heard that the printers' association ever undertook to control or dictate any terms to the Public Printer or the Government, except so far as to say that they have for mutual benefit and mutual protection organized all over the United States to protect themselves, as every other class of people can and may and do do. They say if the Government will take one class of men, if it is better for the Government to employ one set of men who do not feel an interest in joining together with them for mutual protection, they will go elsewhere. Who is to condemn them for that proposition? Can the Government get along just as well without them? If it can, let them do so; that is all they say. They are bound up in this association all over the United States, the printers for their mutual protection, for their mutual improvement, to see to it that everybody who belongs to the craft is educated in the craft, is capable of performing the duties of a printer, as I believe for elevating the standard of skill and of labor and of education and support, and for all the things that these associations are formed for, for mutual benefit, for supporting their sick, for burying their dead. They are scattered all over the United States, in every town and village, a mutual benefit society. The object of that is good, as I understand it; it is beneficial to the printer, and is good for the art, and is good for the community, and is elevating.

All I have ever heard anybody assert that they say is that if those who do not belong to this association, if those who are willing to cut under wages are employed in the Government Printing Office, they do not desire to be employed; they will leave. The Government can not afford that. Sir, it would stop the action of both Houses of Congress to-morrow if that printing should stop one day, and we all know it. It may be that some preliminary steps may be taken to organize printers into a class of employés like those in other Departments, to give them appointments and give them salaries. I know of no other way to meet this without doing injustice to the printers belonging to this association, as I suppose probably four-fifths and perhaps nine-tenths of all the printers in the United States do belong to it. I do not know why Congress should commence with a threat against this class of men. Unfortunately or fortunately, as it may be, Congress and the country would suffer without their services to-day and every day. If the men belonging to the association throughout the United States were to leave the different offices where they are employed at any one day, the entire circulation of the newspapers, the entire working of the presses, the entire business of the setting of type, would stop as if an earthquake had stopped their business.

Those are facts that we must look at. It is the condition of the country, not only in Washington, but in every city in the Union. I do not know that it is desirable to threaten, as has been done here, that every member of a printers' association, a benevolent relief society, as it virtually is, should be threatened on the floor of the Senate with being turned out of position under the Government because he belonged to such an association, which has nothing wrong in it, but everything that tends to elevate that class of American citizens, any more than any other class you have legislated against or condemned on this floor.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Public Printer would have no right to say, no citizen would have a right to say, of any person seeking employment that he should not belong to any voluntary association. I do not think he would have a right to do that. He would have a perfect right to say, however, "These are all the wages I have to give, all I ought to give, and I will employ nobody except at these wages and on these terms." But the employer has a right to say what he will give, whether the person belong to an association outside or any association in the trade, or anything of that sort.

Mr. CONGER. There is no denial of that by any member of the association. All that they say to the Printer or all that they say to the Government or in the hearing of the country is that if the Government or the Public Printer does not see fit to accede to those terms they will leave. They have a right to do that in my judgment. The Government can supply their places by wandering printers who belong to no association and will belong to no association, for I understand all may join this and the fee is very small, the dues are small. All who desire to promote the order and the efficiency of the printers of their class and the well-being of their families may unite together in this; and the only penalty for appointing that class of men is that the printers of these relief associations say that they will not work under certain conditions and will leave the Government free to get its men where it can.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, it is proper to have a fair statement of this matter, it having been brought under discussion. I did not introduce it here, but I had occasion to say something about it, and I do not intend to be misrepresented by the Senator from Indiana, or anybody else.

There is no question about the quality of the work, or the character of the men who are performing it at the Government Printing Office. Both are good, the work and the character of the men who are doing it. I believe in fixing the wages by law, just as we fix the wages by law in the various other departments of the Government. There is no reason why that should not be so. I am entirely willing that the wages shall be as they are now, if they are satisfactory, as I understand they are. I am not only willing but believe in an organization of printers and other people, professional and otherwise, for their own mutual protection. There can be no question about that right; and, as the Senator from Indiana says, perhaps that ought even to be encouraged.

But the action of the printers' union does not end there at all. What they propose to do is well stated by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER]. He says if they take a notion that they will not work for the Government the Government must stop; Congress can not carry on any business if they see fit to have it otherwise. That states the case as strong as I can state it. We are to-day at the mercy of these men and are bidden by their advocate on this floor to speak with bated breath about them and about our relations with them for fear on the whole that we may be obliged to adjourn nem. con. The trouble is not that they say they ought to have certain wages and will not work for less; the Government fixes the wages in this case; but they say in substance that no one shall work for those wages except he first joins their association and agrees that when they say he shall quit work, quit he shall, and in every way submit himself to their dictation, which practically amounts to their saying that no man but a member of their organization shall work in the Government Printing Office.

In addition to that, what is further striking in the effort to maintain their monopoly of employment, they prescribe the number of persons who alone shall serve as apprentices in any printing office where they are employed. The very second paragraph of the article on that subject in the constitution of this local Columbia Typographical Union says that the number of apprentices in the Government Printing Office shall not exceed twenty, and that has the force of law. What is this country if it is not to be a free country, for men to labor in, at least? Where is the freedom in labor? Where is the natural aspiration of your boy, Mr. President, or my boy, or the boys of any of us to learn the printer's trade if that is to be canonized into law and their disposition to learn the trade and pursue it as an honorable and profitable calling is thus ruthlessly cut off? The law substantially makes that thing permanent and gives it effect. There is the trouble. No one complains about these people having any organization. We are doing everything we can by law to give free course to labor, to give good wages, to give encouragement to labor; but I tell you, Mr. President, that an organization of this kind does not conduce to either of those things. It conduces to the monopoly of those functions in the hands of a few. It does not even conduce to the highest quality of labor.

The Senator from Michigan says the Government can not be run without printing. I admit that for thirty days it would have to stop, but I would undertake, and no doubt many other men would undertake, and give large bonds, to put the Government Printing Office in the possession of qualified men to run it in every department as well and fully as it is run now in thirty days without a single printer in it belonging to any union in the United States. The statement is not correct that a majority of the printers belong to it; but whether they do or not is entirely immaterial. There are about 2,000 members of the local union here, perhaps not so many, perhaps not more than a thousand, but the other 72,000 members of the printer's craft in the United States are prevented from coming here and having employment in the Government Printing Office unless when they come here they will join the union in this place and submit themselves absolutely and unqualifiedly to its direction.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, I shall prolong this discussion but a very few moments. I hope that the Committee on Printing will have an amendment of some kind prepared to offer to the sundry civil bill which will meet the case we have been discussing this morning. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, however, just previous to this discussion on printing, stated, as I understood him, that I was mistaken in saying there had been a gradual increase in the expenditures of the Government for the last few years. I beg to call his attention to the finance estimate of 1882, to show the net ordinary expenses of the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. I said nothing about the expenditures of the Government. I made no allusion to the expenditures of the Government. I simply alluded to the amount appropriated this year in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill as compared with former years. I do not care to go into the increase or decrease of the expenditures of the Government. That is a matter I did not touch upon.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator very sharply says that he did not go into the expenditures of the Government. I understood him to do so; but accepting what he says, that he did not, I intend to do so for a few moments. I suppose I have that right.

The Senator says that he only referred to the pending bill. Let us see what the legislative appropriation bills have been for the last several years; and I should be glad to have the attention of the chairman of the committee. According to the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, which I referred to previously, the appropriations have gradually increased each year since 1880. In 1880 the bill including deficiencies, because they ought to be added, was $16,000,000 in round numbers. In 1881 it was $17,000,000. There is an increase of $1,000,000. The following year it was $18,000,000, an increase of $1,000,000 for the next year. For the current year, 1883, it is $20,000,000 without deficiencies.

Of course it gradually increases along, and the chairman is mistaken when he says there has not been a gradual increase in this particular bill. The bill under discussion is a quarter of a million dollars in advance of the bill of last year. That indicates a gradual and regular increase. At the same time I said it was possible and even probable that the increase was necessary; but still it is a fact. I understood the chairman to say that I was mistaken in that fact, or I should not have troubled the Senate a second time.

In 1874 the net ordinary expenditures of the Government were $194,000,000. It is unfair generally to take one year alone, because a Congress ought to be taken. Sometimes certain things go over and others do not; but, taking those two years of a Congress, 1873 and 1874, it is $365,000,000. There was a change of political parties in this country, as is well known, in both Houses, in the Senate for two years and in the House for six years, and during the existence of that change there was a reduction gradually for four or five years until 1881, which I believe was the last year that a Democratic Congress appropriated the money, when it was $177,000,000, as against $194,000,000 in 1874. Taking the last two years, there were $346,000,000, against $365,000,000 in the former two years; notwithstanding the growth of the country, notwithstanding the additional expense on account of pensions and other things, it shows in the two last years previous to the change of political parties that there were $365,000,000 expended, and that during the last two years in which the Senate was in control of the opposite party to what it is now it was $346,000,000, showing that there was a decrease of twenty-odd million dollars, notwithstanding the great increase in the country. But as the chairman has said he did not go into this matter I will not go into it further.

I did not rise to object to the increase in this salary of the Public Printer, but simply to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there were several salaries increased in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the amendment increasing the compensation of the Public Printer, in lines 356 and 357, to have been agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 358, to increase the appropriation "for chief clerk of the Government Printing Office" from $2,000 to $2,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 359, to increase the total appropriation "for compensation of Public Printer and clerks in his office" from $14,000 to $15,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of State," in line 441, before the word "laborers," to strike out "eight" and insert "twelve;" so as to read: "twelve laborers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 443, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Secretary of State, the assistant secretaries, and clerks and employés in his office from $111,030 to $113,670.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out line 554 to line 565, both inclusive, in the following words:

That the deputy first comptroller in the Department of the Treasury shall be, and is, authorized, in the name of the First Comptroller, to countersign all warrants, except accountable warrants, and to sign all other papers in like manner under the direction of the First Comptroller; and in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the deputy first comptroller, the Secretary of the Treasury may, by an appointment under his hand and official seal, delegate to any officer in the office of the First Comptroller the authority to perform the duties of the deputy first comptroller until a successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senate will allow that provision to stand, unless it was stricken out for some general reason as being legislative in its character, because I happen to know that it is important to the public service. In order to enable the First Comptroller to discharge important duties in his office he should be relieved from the drudgery of signing warrants not accountable, the little warrants, day by day, usually passed upon by the deputy comptroller. I also learn that recently it has become very difficult indeed for the First Comptroller to have time to pass upon the important questions of accountable warrants, as he is required to devote two hours in the day to signing the smaller warrants passed upon by the accounting officers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is clearly legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is stricken out on that ground, I am stopped from saying anything against it.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state that that was the principal ground. The committee regard the sentiment of the Senate as against inserting provisions of law in appropriation bills. This is a matter that properly belongs to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is struck out on that ground I am estopped from objecting to the action of the committee, because I have objected to other legislative provisions being inserted; still it is important that it should be in.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me say one word. It would seem to be a general omnium-gatherum clause in regard to these warrants. It would seem to indicate that the entire functions of the First Comptroller are to be deposited with the deputy comptroller and to relieve the First Comptroller from all responsibility in regard to the office, with liberty to disport himself about the country or make law-books, or anything else he chooses, leaving the regular business of the office to be run by practically irresponsible persons.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will tell the Senator that this same law proposed in regard to the Comptroller has been in force for years as to the Secretary of the Treasury. He does not sign any but accountable warrants. He does not sign any warrants except drafts drawn on the Treasury in favor of disbursing officers. There are a multitude of claims passed on in the Treasury Department by the accounting officers that do not come to the Secretary of the Treasury at all. There are passed in the regular course of accounts a multitude of claims in settlement of accounts of disbursing officers which do not come to the Secretary, and there is no legal necessity for their coming to the First Comptroller, because all these accounts have passed already through the office of the First Comptroller, and there is no necessity of having him go through the manual labor two hours every day of signing the smaller warrants. But the accountable warrants, on which large sums of money are drawn to be disbursed by the disbursing officers, must pass through the hands and under the eye of the Comptroller. What he says is true, that he can not do both duties, for it is not physically possible sometimes for him to do it. When you bring to his attention the accountable warrants, requiring him to pass upon those and the other duties of his office, it is all that he can do. I believe that is so, but upon the general ground that it is legislation I can not say a word. Upon the other ground, as to its being right, I think the provision is clearly defensible.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We ought to be very careful about changing the responsibility of the First Comptroller, particularly after the Secretary has been relieved from personal responsibility about a very large share of these warrants. Therefore I think it is well to insist upon the amendment recommended by the committee to leave this legislation out and let the Finance Committee at the beginning of the next session arrange a carefully framed law, if any is necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on striking out the words indicated.

The amendment was agreed to.

SUPPRESSION OF BIGAMY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order, the morning hour having expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont calls for the regular order. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

The ACTING SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2238) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the bill be laid aside informally in order that we may finish the legislative appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont asks that the pending measure be laid aside informally.

Mr. BECK. I object.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Kentucky will not object.

Mr. BECK. I was brought in under arrest last night, and the farce was kept up for a good while. I want this bill to go through, so that we shall not be troubled about it any more. I can not agree that it shall be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky objects. The motion requires unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Kentucky I think is mistaken in saying that he was brought in under arrest last night. I agree with him that he ought to have been, but he was not, unfortunately, because the stubborn and factious and unparliamentary opposition of a minority in this body of a minority prevented, under the rulings of the Chair (which were contrary to law, in my opinion), our getting in the absent Senators. Now, Mr. President, I do not object to my friend from Iowa moving to postpone this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to postpone this and all prior orders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to postpone this and all prior orders and go on with the appropriation bill. I move to postpone the bill until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves to postpone the special order until to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the motion is put I give notice that if I can get the eye of the Chair, and I hope I can, the moment this bill is finished, I shall move to take up the Utah bill again.

Mr. BAYARD. That question of notification of intention has, I believe, no effect on the power of the Senate to take up or not take up as it pleases at the time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not the slightest. It is a notice for fair play; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to postpone the pending bill until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4437) to amend section 1090 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to interest on judgments rendered by the Court of Claims;

A bill (H. R. 7486) to prevent the importation of adulterated and spurious teas;

A bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 7597) to admit free of duty articles intended for the national mining and industrial exposition to be held at Denver, in the State of Colorado, during the year 1883.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 6957) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 23d instant approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 137) to print certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Benjamin H. Hill.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. 4437) to amend section 1090 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to interest on judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 7486) to prevent the importation of adulterated and spurious teas was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I move to proceed with the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7482) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 581.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Second Auditor," in line 601, after the word "four," to strike out "thirty-seven" and insert "forty;" in line 603, after the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty-two" and insert "fifty-five;" in line 604, after the word "two," to strike out "thirty-four" and insert "thirty-five;" and in line 607, before the word "hundred," to strike out "twenty thousand six" and insert "thirty thousand eight;" so as to make the clause read:

Second Auditor: For Second Auditor, $3,600; deputy auditor, $2,250; six chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; eight clerks of class 4, forty clerks of class 3, additional to one clerk of class 3 as disbursing clerk, $200; fifty-five clerks of class 2, thirty-five clerks of class 1, eight clerks, at $1,000 each; three assistant messengers, and eight laborers; in all, $230,890.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Fourth Auditor," in line 629, after the word "each," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 630, after the word "two," to strike out "nine" and insert "ten;" and in line 633, after the word "all," to strike out "sixty-nine" and insert "seventy-two;" so as to make the clause read:

Fourth Auditor: For the Fourth Auditor, $3,600; deputy auditor, $2,250; three chiefs of divisions, at $2,000 each; three clerks of class 4; fourteen clerks of class 3; eight clerks of class 2; ten clerks of class 1; three clerks at $1,000 each; five clerks, at $900 each; one assistant messenger, and two laborers; in all, $72,390.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department," in line 648, after the word "each," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "sixteen;" in line 650, after the word "dollars," to strike out "sixty-three" and insert "sixty-six;" in line 651, before the word "clerks," to strike out "seventy-four" and insert "seventy-five;" in line 651, after the word "two," to strike out "fifty-six" and insert "fifty-eight;" in line 652, after the word "one," to strike out "thirty-two" and insert "thirty-four;" in line 653, after the word "each," to insert "five clerks at $900 each;" in line 655, after the word "each," to strike out "three" and insert "five;" and after the word "all," in line 657, to strike out "392,510" and insert "410,850;" so as to make the clause read:

Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department: For the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, $3,600; deputy auditor, $2,250; chief clerk, $2,000; eight chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; sixteen clerks of class 4, and additional to one clerk as disbursing clerk, $200; sixty-six clerks of class 3; seventy-five clerks of class 2; fifty-eight clerks of class 1; thirty-four clerks, at $1,000 each; five clerks, at $900 each; twenty-three female assorters of money-orders, at $900 each; five assistant messengers; twenty laborers; and ten charwomen, at $180 each; in all, $410,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 704, to increase the allowance of "copyists at $900 each" from "forty" to "sixty" in the office of the Register of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 707, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the office of the Register of the Treasury from $170,110 to $188,110.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Life-Saving Service," in line 780, to increase the allowance of clerks of class 2 from "one" to "two."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 780, to increase the allowance of clerks of class 1 from "three" to "four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 783, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the "Office of Life-Saving Service" from $32,880 to $35,480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Commissioner of Internal Revenue," after the word "dollars," in line 849, to strike out:

That from and after the 30th day of June next, 1883, there shall be no more than eighty-two collection districts, and it shall be the duty of the President, and he is hereby authorized and directed, to reduce the internal-revenue districts to not exceeding the number aforesaid in the manner heretofore provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 857, after the word "expenses," to insert:

Including traveling expenses of such officers and clerks as shall be detailed for special service by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the fees earned by the gauger during any one month may be averaged so as to include every day in which he is actually employed in gauging, or in the duties connected therewith, or in traveling in the performance of duty.

So as to make the clause read:

For salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, for fees and expenses of gaugers, for salaries of storekeepers, and for miscellaneous expenses, including traveling expenses of such officers and clerks as shall be detailed for special service by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the fees earned by a gauger during any one month may be averaged so as to include every day in which he is actually employed in gauging, or in duties connected therewith, or in traveling in the performance of duty, $2,300,000.

Mr. VANCE. I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the committee. After the word "duty," in line 864, insert:

And the pay of storekeepers at all distilleries of thirty gallons capacity or less production per day shall be $2 per day; and general storekeepers shall be paid only for the time they are actually engaged in the performance of duty.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order on that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa raises the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. It is legislation.

Mr. VANCE. In what respect is it out of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa will state his point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. My point of order is that it changes existing law and is legislation.

Mr. VANCE. Does not the committee's amendment change existing law?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir.

Mr. VANCE. Does the existing law authorize the payment of traveling expenses of "officers and clerks detailed for special service by order of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury?" Does it authorize "the fees earned by a gauger during any one month" to be so averaged "as to include every day" that he is in the service "or in duties connected therewith?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Chair understands that the ruling repeatedly made in the Senate is that if a committee amendment changes the law it does not warrant a new substantive change of the law by way of amendment to that amendment.

Mr. VANCE. I make the point of order that the committee's amendment, which is not germane to the text at all, changes the law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I guess that is true, from lines 860 to 864. The first half of the amendment is good.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. On all of it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is one substantive amendment. If the Senator confines his point of order——

Mr. VANCE. To the committee's amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It must be sustained as a whole; but the first four lines can be moved separately and would be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee is one substantive amendment, which includes a change in the existing law. That amendment as a whole is out of order. The Senator from Iowa can hereafter, when the committee's amendments are concluded, move another amendment, avoiding the objection, if he see fit. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 888, in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the Treasury Department, to increase the item "for purchase of ice" from $3,000 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "office of assistant treasurer at Chicago," in line 952, after the word "each," to strike out "one coin and currency clerk" and insert "two coin, coupon, and currency clerks;" in line 953, after the word "dollars," to insert "each;" in line 956, before the word "watchmen," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" and in line 957, after the word "all," to strike out "19,180" and insert "21,400;" so as to make the clause read:

For assistant treasurer, $4,500; for cashier, $2,500; for paying-teller, $1,800; for book-keeper and receiving-teller, at $1,500 each; two coin, coupon, and currency clerks, at $1,500 each; one assistant book-keeper and two clerks, at $1,200 each; for one messenger, $840; and three watchmen, $720 each; in all, $21,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to line 1062.

Mr. BECK. We are now substantially through the provisions relative to the Treasury Department, and we have shown a great deal of care and some particularity in going into detail in appropriating every dollar of this money. I desire now, not wishing to delay the bill, that the chairman of the committee——

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Iowa is necessarily out of the Chamber for a few minutes.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon; but I may as well state what I rose to state. We have inserted a whole paragraph here, occupying eight or ten lines, going into all sorts of detail, providing for washing and hemming towels, for the purchase of awnings, bowls, brooms, brushes, and God knows what all, for the Second Auditor's Office, and we were compelled to make an increase of clerical force in that office, when the proof was laid before us that the Secretary or somebody in charge takes men out of that office, puts them elsewhere, does as he pleases with them; and all this apparent particularity on the part of the committee goes for naught when it comes to administration.

I desire to have the letters read showing how the Second Auditor is treated and how his best men are taken away from him and put somewhere else against his will, and how with all our effort at being very particular no attention is paid to what we do. The country is made to believe and the Senate is made to believe and we are made to believe that this detail is absolutely necessary to enforce accuracy; and yet in the great office of the Second Auditor his force is taken from him and put to other duty or no duty, or whatever may be deemed fit, utterly regardless of our appropriations. If there is any way to stop that I want it done.

The chairman is now here. Is the letter relative to how the force in the Second Auditor's Office has been used here? I should like to have it read for the information of the Senate. It is more important to stop that sort of thing than it is to provide for towels and brushes and the ten thousand little things we seem to be providing for with so much particularity that a person reading this bill would think that a spittoon or a trap or a thermometer or wire and zinc could not be had unless it was appropriated for with wonderful accuracy.

Mr. ALLISON. I have the letter here.

Mr. BECK. I want it read; not that I am complaining of the bill, but I want the Senate to understand it.

Mr. ALLISON. I send the letter to the desk.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The comparatively slight progress that has been made toward clearing off accumulated work is chiefly attributable to the repeated demands upon this office for clerks to assist in other bureaus of the Department. Emergencies will continue to rise when the power given to the head of a Department by section 166 of the Revised Statutes to alter the distribution of the clerks allowed by law and detail clerks credited to one bureau for service in another must be exercised. At one time, in consequence of an unusual amount of labor suddenly imposed upon the loan division and Register's Office, no less than sixteen clerks on the pay-rolls of this office were detailed for work elsewhere. At the present time five are so absent, and the average for the last fiscal year was at least five. All these were experienced and efficient clerks, for such are always asked for, and none others taken or received.

While the clerical force was nominally the same, 5,349 more accounts and claims were disposed of than during the preceding year, and the number unsettled diminished by 1,789. The additional work of five efficient and experienced clerks would have largely increased these figures. No bureau of the Department needs more than this the entire force accorded to it by law. Of the 38,440 unsettled accounts and claims, a very large proportion has been pending more than five years. It is not surprising, then, that claimants become importunate and not unfrequently abusive in their correspondence. They are entitled to a settlement, and it is extremely difficult to give a satisfactory reason for the delay. At the present time, so far as I am aware, there is no extraordinary demand upon any of the bureaus of the Treasury Department, and if more clerical force is needed it should be supplied by legislation. The business of this office is pressing. It has never to my knowledge had any assistance from other bureaus; certainly not without according an equivalent by an exchange; and it is fairly entitled to its legal complement of clerks.

The facts herein set forth as to the work performed during the year are sufficiently indicative of the faithfulness and efficiency of the clerical force of the bureau.

Very respectfully,

O. FERRISS, Auditor.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. BECK. That is all I desired to call attention to. We have had to increase the force in that office, to make an allowance of $24,000 to employ twenty additional clerks in the Second Auditor's Office rendered necessary by increased work relating to pensions, and yet his force is taken from him and used elsewhere against his will; it seems, too, to the detriment of the service. It looks very much like a burlesque to have things of that sort done when we give these clerks to that Auditor specially to keep up that work, and suppose they are employed there every day, because the work on pensions and other matters seems to be very pressing; and yet in spite of all that they are taken away from him and put elsewhere and used wherever the Department sees fit. And then in the face of all that look at this paragraph in the bill:

For washing and hemming towels, for the purchase of awnings and fixtures, alcohol, baskets, belting, bellows, bowls, brooms, buckets, brushes, canvas, crash, cloth, chamois-skins, door and window fasteners, dusters, flour, garden and street hose, lace-leather, lye, nails, oil, plants, picks, pitchers, powders, stencil-plates, spittoons, soap, sponge, tacks, traps, thermometers, tools, towels, tumblers, wire, and zinc; and for blacksmithing, repairs of machinery, removal of rubbish, sharpening tools, and other absolutely necessary articles, $10,000.

That we should be going into all that detail, and putting that solemnly into the legislative bill, and hundreds of other things of a like sort, when the men we employ and assign to special work by the dozen are taken out and diverted from the purpose for which we gave them, requires that I should say that it seems to me we ought to be very particular to see that the work to which the men are assigned is carried on by them. They should not be diverted to other work, while we are made to believe that every little item we put down is applied to that particular purpose. I was about to say it looked like a farce.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not desire to take time. Of course the Secretary of the Treasury, during the year 1881, after our adjournment, was compelled to detail a large number of clerks from different bureaus in his Department to take care of the refunding of the bonds into 3 percents, and it seems that he drew pretty heavily on the Second Auditor's Office, and I am not surprised that the Second Auditor should complain about it, because his business is very far behind. That is all there is in it. Of course we could by law take away from the Secretary of the Treasury the power he has now to say to a clerk employed in one bureau, "You shall be employed in another," but it is not deemed wise, I believe, to do that. Therefore the matter rests as it is. We have now supplied an additional force to the Second Auditor, hoping that we have given him a sufficient force to enable him to bring up the arrearages of work in his office.

Mr. BECK. If they are not taken away from him.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 1063. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "assay office at Helena, Montana," in line 1193, to increase the appropriation for "wages of workmen" from $10,000 to $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Territory of New Mexico," in line 1270, after the word "namely," to strike out:

For per diem of members and officers of the Legislative Assembly, mileage of members, printing, and incidental expenses, including secretary's office, and $800 for translating bills, laws, and journals of the Legislative Assembly, $21,965:

For rent, light, fuel, stationery, incidentals, and pay of messenger, $1,500.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to inquire why that is stricken out in this clause and left in in the provision for other Territories?

Mr. ALLISON. Simply because the law of this Territory does not authorize the Legislature to sit until January, 1885, so that it properly will be appropriated for next year. We appropriate for Legislatures in Territories where the session will be next winter.

Mr. CONGER. Is that different from the other Territories in the matter of annual legislative sessions? I see that for Utah the per diem of members and officers of the Legislature is provided for.

Mr. ALLISON. Their Legislature sits next winter.

Mr. CONGER. For the Territory of Washington I find the same appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. But it will be observed that there is no Legislature appropriated for in Montana and in several other of our Territories.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for expenses of the Utah Commission, after the word "dollars," in line 1301, to insert:

Provided, That out of this sum the commission is hereby authorized to pay the secretary of the Territory, who is its secretary and disbursing agent, a reasonable sum for such service, not exceeding $600, and a like sum for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "War Department," to strike out the following proviso from lines 1352 to 1359, inclusive:

Provided, That the provisions of the act entitled an act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, approved August 5, 1882, which authorized the appointment of an Assistant Secretary of War and an Assistant Secretary of the Navy, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to hear from the chairman of the committee some explanation of the reason why this provision should be stricken out. I understand no appointment of an Assistant Secretary of War or Assistant Secretary of the Navy has ever been made under the act of 1882, because those officers are not necessary. The House have inserted a provision to repeal the act creating the offices. I should like to hear why that provision is stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. We struck it out in the first place because it is legislation; in the second place, we found a letter of the Secretary of the Navy dated as late as the 8th of January in which he stated that he desired the office of Assistant Secretary for that Department retained. We thought we would allow the law to stand, at least till we could inquire into it further. I am aware that neither an assistant to the Secretary of War nor to the Secretary of the Navy has been appointed; but there is no special reason why we should repeal the law, having passed it less than a year ago.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether it is not a fact that one year ago the offices were created and an appropriation made for them, and both the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have never filled the offices because they were not necessary. No appointment has been made, as I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. I have not at hand the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, but I remember very well the fact of there having been a letter before the Committee on Appropriations in which he desired the continuance of the appropriation and stated that such an officer was desirable by the Department. I have heard nothing from the Secretary of War on the subject. I do not know why the office has not been filled. I know of no request that it shall be abandoned or abolished. I think no great harm will result from striking out this provision.

Mr. MORGAN. Is there any appropriation for either of these officers?

Mr. ALLISON. There is for the current year; there is not for the next year.

Mr. MORGAN. My inquiry is as to next year; is there any appropriation for them in this bill?

Mr. ALLISON. Not thus far. Of course an appropriation can still be made.

Mr. MORGAN. This would be the appropriate bill?

Mr. ALLISON. This would be the appropriate bill. We do not appropriate for these offices in this bill, but I will say to the Senator from Alabama we did not choose to abolish them by a repeal of the statute passed only eight or nine months ago.

Mr. MORGAN. It is the first time I ever heard of an office being created by Congress and provision made for filling it and an appropriation made that the Government was not willing to have the office filled. We were making overtures entirely unnecessary, it seems, for the accommodation of the Departments. It is so singular a fact that it attracted my attention.

Mr. ALLISON. It is rather a remarkable fact, but these offices were created last year, at the request of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, by a clause inserted in one of the appropriation bills; and they have not yet been filled, so far as I have heard. I do not know why, but we thought it was rather early to repeal the statute, at least without a little further information than we are possessed of.

Mr. MORGAN. I am afraid that the House will not appreciate our ruling on the question of order striking out this proviso because it is out of order according to our rules. The House seems to have put it in there, of course we must assume, in accordance with its own rules, and it comes to us as part of the text of the bill, which I think does not necessarily fall under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. The House may have some information on this subject that we could not gather, and they may have some different information from the information we have. Of course this matter is not finished even if we strike it out.

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose the object of the committee was to draw the matter into conference between the two Houses.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly, that will be the result.

Mr. MORGAN. Of course the bill must go anyhow to a conference committee. I do not know that it can be fixed in any other way.

Mr. GORMAN. As I understand, these two offices were created by a provision on the appropriation bill of last year. The fact is, as we learn from the public prints, that the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War found that the two offices thus created were utterly useless. Now the bill comes from the House abolishing those two offices, neither Secretary having made an appointment, and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate move to strike out the proviso repealing the act of 1882. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland asks for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I want to do just what we should in this matter. I notice that there is no appropriation in the bill as it is now to provide a salary for either of these officers for the coming year, 1884. There is an appropriation for the current year, which has not been used, I take it for granted. If there is good reason for not striking out the proviso, I wish to act with the committee. If there is not, I should vote to strike it out.

Mr. ALLISON. The only information we gathered on this subject was the letter to which I have alluded, a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, in which he urged the importance of the continuance of the office of Assistant Secretary of the Navy. We have had no communication, so far as I know, from the Secretary of War since last year. The Senator from West Virginia knows very well that the Secretary of War was quite urgent then to have an assistant secretary. Now, just why the office has not been filled, I do not understand; and of course if we make no appropriation for it, it will be in abeyance next year; it can not be filled after the 1st of July at least until an appropriation is made. I do not see that it is vastly important to repeal it even on the assumption suggested by the Senator from Maryland that these places have not been filled and are not likely to be. It may be that in the course of a year or two, or by 1885 at any rate, it may be found necessary to call into exercise this latent power, and the remarkable situation suggested by the Senator from Alabama may not exist after that time. There may be those then in control who would be willing to fill all the offices whether they were necessary or not.

Mr. MORGAN. What is the salary attached to the office at present?

Mr. ALLISON. Three thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My recollection of last year's appropriation bill agrees with that of the chairman of the committee that there was an urgent request for the appointment of assistant secretaries in these two Departments. The committee knowing that all the other Departments had assistant secretaries agreed to allow them, and my recollection is that the committee reduced some officers in each of these Departments or at least cut off one clerk from the force on account of an assistant secretary being given. I do not know the reason why the place has not been filled but I heard a rumor that there had been some difficulty or some question arising as to who should be appointed, that the parties interested could not agree. Probably that is the reason it has not been filled.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Maryland will not press his opposition to the amendment. If this office is not filled according to the law as it stands, no harm will be done. However, I do not wish to waste time. Have the yeas and nays been ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have been ordered. The question is on striking out the clause which has been read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. If I were not paired, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with some Senator; I can not say whom. I shall not vote.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator from Nevada is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY].

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] is paired with the present occupant of the chair.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FRYE (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON], who is temporarily absent.

Mr. GARLAND (after having voted in the negative). I see the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is not in. I withdraw my vote. I would vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. As I do not know how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 20; as follows:

YEA—20.

Allison,	Hale,	Kellogg,	Morrill,
Anthony,	Harrison,	McDill,	Platt,
Beck,	Hawley,	McMillan,	Plumb,

Edmunds,	Hill,	Mitchell,	Windom.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "Office of Publication of Records of the Rebellion," in line 1487, after the word "clerks," to strike out "at $1,000 each" and insert "of class 1;" and in line 1496, after the word "all," to strike out "thirty-seven thousand eight" and insert "thirty-eight thousand two;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of Publication of Records of the Rebellion: For one agent, $2,000; two clerks of class 4; two clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 2; two clerks of class 1; fourteen copyists at $900 each; one foreman of printing at $1,600; one pressman, $1,200; five compositors, at $1,000 each; two copy-holders at $900 each; two assistant messengers; two watchmen; and one laborer at $600; in all, $38,280.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "expenses," in line 1514, to insert "including one clerk of class 2, and one assistant messenger;" and in line 1516, after the word "messenger," to strike out "65,000" and insert "60,120;" so as to make the clause read:

For contingent expenses of the office of the Secretary of War and the bureaus, buildings, and offices of the War Department: purchase of professional books, law-books, blank-books, pamphlets, newspapers, maps, furniture, carpets, matting, oil-cloth, file-cases, towels, ice, brooms, soap, sponges, fuel, gas, and heating apparatus; telegraphing, freight and express charges; repairs to buildings and furniture; and for other absolutely necessary expenses, including one clerk of class 2, and one assistant messenger, $60,120.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "State, War, and Navy Department Building," in line 1604, after the word "each," to strike out "one assistant conductor" and insert "two assistant conductors;" in line 1606, after the word "dollars," to insert "each;" and in line 1608, after the word "all," to strike out "eighty-one thousand eight" and insert "eighty-two thousand three;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of the superintendent: One clerk class 1; one chief engineer at $1,200; six assistant engineers at $1,000 each; one captain of the watch, $1,200; two lieutenants of the watch at $840 each; forty-five watchmen; one machinist at $900; one skilled laborer at $720; seventeen firemen; four conductors of the elevator at $720 each; two assistant conductors of the elevator at $600 each; sixteen laborers; one laborer at $600; and fifty-four charwomen at $180 each; in all, $82,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Navy Department," in line 1622, before the word "assistant," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 1625, before the word "laborers," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 1626, after the word "board," to strike out "one clerk of class 2, and one laborer (for examining and retiring board);" in line 1629, after the word "all," to strike out "53,490" and insert "52,810;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the Secretary of the Navy, $8,000; for compensation of chief clerk of the Navy Department, $2,500; one disbursing clerk, $2,250; four clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; one stenographer at $1,600; two clerks of class 2; six clerks of class 1; four clerks at $1,000 each; telegraph operator at $1,000; one carpenter, $1,000; two messengers; three assistant messengers; one messenger boy at $420; one messenger boy at $240; three laborers; one clerk of class 2, and one laborer (for inspection board); one clerk of class 1, and one assistant messenger (in care of library); in all, $52,810.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Nautical Almanac Office," in line 1653, after the word "each," to insert "two at $1,000 each;" so as to make the clause read:

Nautical Almanac Office: For the following assistants, namely: Three at $1,600 each; two at $1,400 each; three at $1,200 each; two at $1,000 each; one assistant messenger; and one copyist at $480; in all, $14,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1668, after the word "hundred," to insert "and sixty;" so as to make the clause read:

For draughtsmen, engravers, copyists, copper-plate printers, printers' apprentices, and laborers in the Hydrographic Office, $52,660.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1698, after the word "two," to insert "one clerk of class 1;" and in line 1699, after the word "all," to strike out "seven thousand nine" and insert "nine thousand one;" so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Ordnance: For chief clerk, $1,800; draughtsman, $1,800; one clerk of class 3; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $9,180.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Department of the Interior," in line 1742, to increase the appropriation for compensation of "Assistant Secretary" from $3,500 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1746, after "building," to insert "one superintendent of documents, $2,000."

Mr. GORMAN. I raise the point of order on that amendment. It creates a new office. One year ago, when we were considering the appropriations for the Department of the Interior, the distinct understanding was that there would be no increase for offices in that Department.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that it is to conform to the law that we have made this amendment. The law provides for this superintendent of documents, and provides a salary of $2,500 a year, but the committee, instead of allowing the salary which the law fixes for him, simply allows him $2,000. This is in exact conformity with existing law except as to the amount.

Mr. GORMAN. Then I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. This is the designation of the officer in charge of the public documents in the Interior Department by law.

Mr. GORMAN. I was not aware of that. I did not see it in the law of last year.

Mr. ALLISON. It is in the Revised Statutes. I can find it if the Senator desires to see it.

Mr. GORMAN. It is not necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. If it is not in the Statutes I will allow the Senator to make the point hereafter.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Maryland will turn to page 507 of the Revised Statutes he will find the provision for the office of which we spoke just now.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1747, before "clerks," to strike out "seven" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Six clerk, chiefs of division, at $2,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1750, after "four," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Six clerks of class 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1753, after "determine," to insert "one bookkeeper for custodian, $1,200."

The amendment was agreed to,

The next amendment was, in line 1762, after "each," to insert "three copyists and three laborers for distributing the reports of the Tenth Census."

Mr. BECK. I am opposed to that. I do not know that any one will vote with me. We passed some order at the last session, I believe, directing the Department of the Interior to distribute the Tenth Census reports. They could not trust members of the Senate and House with the documents that belong to them, but they desire to do it themselves, and this is the first installment:

Three laborers and three copyists for distributing the reports of the Tenth Census.

If we were allowed to do it we could do it ourselves without any sort of expense to the Government and without any sort of annoyance to ourselves. This is the beginning of a system under which all documents are to go to the Interior Department, and half of them will find their way into the old second-hand book-stores of Washington. I tried on Thursday morning if any of the abstracts of the census were there that I could send off in answer to applications. I sent a messenger requesting an answer Thursday morning. It is now Saturday afternoon and I can not ascertain to-day whether I can get a single copy of the abstract of the census. If it was in our own document-room the moment a letter came to me for it I could send a page at once and get the document. These persons now are to be employed, and no matter what may be said about it the result is going to be that half of our books will be lost in the Department. I do not know whether they will tell what is done with them. The books will go to second-hand book-stores in this town. This is just the beginning of a system to make the Interior Department take charge of all documents that come to members of Congress and the people. I move to strike out the clause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair). The question is on the amendment inserting the clause.

Mr. ALLISON. This provision is absolutely necessary, unless the law on the statute-book is not to be enforced. By a law we passed last year we required the Secretary of the Interior to distribute these census documents. He has no means to distribute these documents; he has no clerks at his disposal for that purpose. If we require him to perform this duty we must give him the necessary clerical force in order that he may do it. That is all there is about it. If Senators are not willing to appropriate this money they had better repeal the law they passed last year.

Mr. BECK. I confess that I propose to vote against this as the beginning of a system that I think will be a very bad system. I do not desire to vote, as far as my individual vote will go, to send all the books and documents there; and if that is an indirect way of repealing the law, so much the better.

Mr. ALLISON. But that is no way of repealing the law, because these books will be piled up in the office of the Secretary of the Interior under the law and he will have no means of distributing them as the law requires.

Mr. BECK. I would rather allow them to remain piled up for another year than to have them wasted, as they will be, in my judgment. They are better there than in the second-hand book-stores of Washington.

Mr. ALLISON. This is the law:

That the Compendium of the Tenth Census be printed, and that 100,000 additional copies be printed, of which 30,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 60,000 copies for the use of the House, and 10,000 copies for the use of the Department of the Interior. And in order to avoid duplication in the distribution of these documents, and to secure complete sets to libraries and other public institutions, the additional copies herein ordered, excepting those ordered for the Treasury Department and for the Fish Commission, be delivered to the document-rooms of the Department of the Interior; and the Secretary of the Interior shall distribute those ordered for the use of Congress, as follows.

Mr. BECK. To show how much trouble we are having under this already let me state that when the matter was under discussion on last Thursday morning in the committee-room I had then, as I have now, dozens of applications from libraries and the auditor of my own State and others for a copy of the Compendium of the Census. I sent a messenger from the committee-room, a riding page, to the Secretary of the Interior, asking him to tell me whether I had any of these documents there or not, and if I had to please advise me by that page. That letter was delivered. It is now Saturday, and I am yet unadvised, and I suppose will remain unadvised until I have time to go with my hat in hand and beg some clerk to tell me if I have any books there.

Mr. ALLISON. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, that this law shall be repealed if the Senator thinks it ought to be.

Mr. SHERMAN. We can not do that in this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course not, unless we all agree to it by unanimous consent; but if this law is to stand, certainly some means should be provided whereby it can be executed.

Mr. GORMAN. The fact is that in the Interior Department there is a clerk detailed as superintendent of the document-room, a mere clerk in the Department. At the last session of Congress, when the present occupant of the chair [Mr. HOAR] offered an amendment to an appropriation bill for the distribution of the census, it was the distinct understanding on this side of the Chamber, on my part at least, that that was the extent to which it should go, and that the clerk now performing duty should do it without additional expense; but this appropriation bill makes specific appropriation for a superintendent, then for a bookkeeper, and now for copyists and laborers. You have already a full organization at both ends of the Capitol for the distribution of the documents ordered by Congress. Here is an increase of officers and an increase of salaries, and I make the point of order that this amendment is certainly new legislation.

Mr. ANTHONY. This law was enacted, at the suggestion of the Senator now in the chair [Mr. HOAR], to prevent the duplicate distribution of this document. It was apprehended that the same document might be sent by many Senators and Representatives to the same individual, and in order to prevent that all copies were ordered to be sent to the Interior Department, where if a Senator or Representative ordered one to be sent to a constituent and one of his colleagues had given a similar order, the member giving the second order would be notified that a previous order had been given to be sent to that constituent. Then if he chooses to duplicate he can do so; but it is assumed that gentlemen will not desire to duplicate. Either the law should be repealed or the Interior Department should have authority to carry it into effect. This can not be done without some additional clerical force. I think the experiment is worth trying, although I am not certain of its success; but it is ordered to be tried upon the Compendium of the Census in the Interior and upon the Records of the Rebellion in the War Department. I think we should either repeal the law (which I trust we are not prepared to do) or should give the means of carrying it into effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not liable to the point of order as being new legislation, it being merely a carrying out of existing law. It is not liable to the point of order under the twenty-ninth rule, coming from the Committee on Appropriations itself.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not suppose anybody would make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland made the point of order, which the Chair overrules.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think a point of order lies against it. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to the fact that this law requires the Secretary of the Interior substantially to keep an account with every Senator and member of Congress, and it necessarily will require a considerable correspondence backward and forward about what I am doing with my documents or what some of my colleagues in the House are doing with similar documents. All this can not be done without clerical force; and it ought to be done promptly by somebody. We have authorized a very large publication of the census report, on the theory that it is of some value to the people; and shall we refuse the small sum necessary to distribute the document among the people? I hope my friend from Kentucky will resort to some more direct method of changing the law than the one he suggests now of defeating this amendment.

Mr. BECK. I confess that because of my opposition to the law I do not propose to vote to give six more employés, "three copyists and three laborers, for distributing the reports of the Tenth Census." I think one person could do it without any trouble, but I do not want it done there at all. I do not know that I can better illustrate the difficulty we have about it than by the fact I have already stated, that I do not know to-day whether there are any of the abstracts of the census in the Interior Department belonging to me. I have no means of knowing; I have no time to go; and when I sent, as I did Thursday morning, a messenger with a polite request to know if I had any, so that I could send them to the governor of my State and the auditor, and requested an answer, "yes" or "no," I could not get that answer, and have not got it now, and I suppose I shall have to go to the Interior Department some day next week, whenever I can find time, just to ascertain that fact.

If the books were here in this building, as they have always been heretofore, I could ascertain in a minute; Amzi Smith could tell me at once. I could put my frank on it and mail it, and if I did not like to trust the mails I could pay for it, as I do with every valuable document, and have it registered. I am satisfied that this thing will not only prove to be a failure but will be a system of annoyance to every Senator and every Representative, and the books will not reach their destination half as well as they do now. This is only the beginning of the transfer of all these books to the Interior Department and a doubling up of officers.

I desire to say once for all that I do not object to many things on this bill that under any decent administration never ought to be here.

Take all these lines from 1559 to 1567, and what do we find? Here is one watchman for Iowa Circle, a circle perhaps twice the size of this Chamber; one watchman for Fourteenth-street Circle.

Mr. ALLISON. I can not allow the Senator from Kentucky to speak thus of Iowa circle. That is one of the largest circles in the city, and one of the most beautiful in the city.

Mr. BECK. No doubt about that; it may be twice as large as this Chamber, and I reckon it is. One watchman is provided for the Fourteenth Street Circle. I know the Fourteenth Street Circle is not larger than this Chamber, and a watchman is there. There is one for Rawlins Square, one for the Washington Circle, one for McPherson and Farragut Squares, one for Stanton Place, one for Armory Square. Here are seven of them. A single line requiring some of the one hundred or one hundred and twenty policemen we have to guard these circles is all that would be done in any other city in the world. That is only a specimen.

I do not propose to try to improve or reform all these things; but I do hope and trust that at the next session of Congress, with a different administration at the other end of the Capitol, there will be many things not in this bill that are in it now, and I do trust this multiplication of officers—six more people to distribute the Tenth Census for us when we can distribute it ourselves and do it twice as well without costing the Government a dollar—will not be continued, for it is a useless expenditure of money; and this is only the beginning of a good deal more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1769, to increase the total appropriation "for compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, and clerks and employés in his office from $133,130 to $141,110.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1773, before "law," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in the same line, after "clerks," to insert "one at $2,750;" in line 1776, before "clerks," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" in line 1777, after "each," to insert "one clerk, $1,600;" and in line 1779, after "all," to strike out "12,300" and insert "18,700;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of Assistant Attorney-General:
For three law clerks, one at $2,750, one at $2,500, and one at $2,250; four clerks at $2,000 each; one clerk, $1,600; one clerk, who shall act as stenographer, at $1,600; in all, $18,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed to the word "dollars," in line 1783, as follows:

General Land Office:
For the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000.

Mr. MORGAN. After the word "thousand," in line 1783, where it first occurs, I move to insert "250;" so as to read $2,250 for the chief clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inform the Senator from Alabama that that amendment would regularly come in after the committee amendments are disposed of unless the Senate prefer to deal with it now.

Mr. MORGAN. I was not aware we had adopted that order of proceeding.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1788, to strike out "thirty-two" and insert "thirty-four;" so as to read:

General Land Office:
For the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000; law clerk, $2,000; recorder, $2,000; three inspectors of surveyors-general and district land offices, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $2,000 each; three principal clerks, at $1,800 each; thirty-four clerks of class 4.

Mr. PLUMB. I think for the purpose of making the amendment which the Senator from Alabama has already proposed at a later period, as it should be, he will want to modify this amendment of the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; but the whole subject will be open in the Senate, as I understand.

Mr. PLUMB. But, as I understand, if we adopt this amendment of the committee it can not be amended afterward.

Mr. MORGAN. Not in committee.

Mr. ALLISON. What does the Senator from Alabama propose?

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to make three amendments here. The first one I have suggested is to raise the salary of the chief clerk $250. I then wish, on lines 1786, 1787, and 1788, to amend by increasing the number of principal clerks to twelve, being an addition of nine. The object I have is to get one principal clerk at the head of each of the divisions of the Land Office. Then I propose to strike out "thirty-four" and substitute "twenty-five" in the next class, class 4. The effect will be to take nine clerks from class 4 and raise them to principal clerks, so that we may have a head for each of the divisions in the bureau of the General Land Office. If the Senate is willing to have these amendments considered now, I shall be very glad.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the amendments proposed by the Senator from Alabama at the present time?

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator from Alabama had better wait until we finish the amendments suggested by the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. The difficulty is that if you go on and adopt the amendments suggested by the committee, then I have to wait until we get into the Senate before I can move these amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I am willing to pass over the amendments between lines 1781 and 1788.

Mr. MORGAN. I would be glad if the Senator would. That will give us an opportunity to prepare the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That part of the bill will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was stated to be in line 1788, to strike out "forty-three" and insert "forty-nine;" so as to read:

Forty-nine clerks of class 3.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Iowa. There is a very large increase in this paragraph, an increase which I believe to be wholly necessary, absolutely required by the condition of the public business, which can not wait; but I would suggest to him whether or not for the purpose which the committee had in view in recommending this large increase of clerical force, and in view of what was said on the subject from somewhat authoritative sources, it would not be better to add to the lower grades of clerks and not so much to the higher grades.

I agree entirely with the Senator from Alabama that while all the other Departments of this Government have had their divisions and chiefs of divisions and chief clerks and increases of salaries, the General Land Office has remained at a stand-still for now more than forty years. While under the plea of greater business and greater expenses of living and so on from time to time we have put up the salaries of chief clerks and made new divisions and increased the salaries of the officers at the head of old divisions in the Treasury Department, the War Department, and all the other Departments of the Government, the Land Office has received no consideration of this kind. I believe that as a matter of dignity, as a matter of justice in regard to quality of service performed, the motion of the Senator from Alabama as indicated ought to be carried; but I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that there would be greater money compensation in the way of efficiency, in the accomplishment of the work we all know ought to be accomplished, by putting more of these clerks in the lower grades. I am re-enforced in my belief on that point by a statement made to me by the Commissioner of the General Land Office this morning of the fact that the gross sum which the committee proposes to give at the close of this paragraph to the Secretary for the purpose of bringing up the work of this office will accomplish 25 per cent. more result than would the distribution of that sum in the shape of the payment of clerks of different classifications already existing. That results from the fact that there is always a large number of persons well qualified seeking employment here at Washington who work more zealously as their employment is more indefinite and liable to be terminated at any moment, who are more desirous a great deal of exhibiting their qualities of efficiency and commending themselves to their chief, than those are who are provided for in that kind of way which they come to regard as putting them beyond the control both of their superiors and of Congress, because it so happens by reason of the civil-service-reform principle prevailing in this Government now, combined with the backing, so to speak, which every clerk has on the part of some person who solicits his appointment or is interested in having him retained in his position, except for some flagrant disobedience of orders, something more than ordinarily flagrant inefficiency or insubordination, that no clerk can be discharged. And so the perfunctory round of duties is from time to time performed with, instead of increasing efficiency growing out of long service, a diminished efficiency.

The Land Office, in common with all the other offices of this Government, needs not men who are going there with a permanent tenure, but men who go in under the spur of necessity, pecuniary necessity, and the necessity to perform accurately and sensibly the duties of that calling as an inducement to further employment; and the temporary clerks whom we shall employ under this provision will do more work, and more satisfactory work, in bringing up the delinquent business of this office, 25 per cent. at least more than an equal number of the men who are already in. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa whether we can not adjust that force in such a way as to give the persons at the head of divisions, and who are necessarily invested with considerable responsibility, that which is fairly their due by comparison with what is given to others, and at the same time not make that an increase of absolute expense in the administration of the duties of this office by making the increase of stated clerks less in the higher grades and greater in the lower grades.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations considered this question with some care. There has been a pressure for two or three years constantly upon the committee to make an increase in the force of the General Land Office, and in making the distribution of the force that we have made in this bill we have followed the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior, in his interview with the committee on this subject, requested higher grades of clerks rather than lower, upon the idea that this adjustment in the Land Office required very largely a force familiar with the statutes and with the current decisions of the Land-Office itself for a series of years. In other words, they must have discriminating intellects, and not mere copyists. So in making up the bill we followed precisely the suggestions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as indicated in his report and in the Book of Estimates. We did provide, as the Senator from Kansas suggests, a fund of $50,000, to be used by the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion. The object of that was not to create a force here which would be permanent, but a force that would only last for the present year; a temporary force, in other words, to bring up this work; but the force we provide for in the body of the bill will, in all probability, be a continuous and permanent force, and I think it ought to be a force of sufficient intelligence and knowledge of the subjects investigated in the Land Office to require better compensation than a thousand or twelve hundred dollars a year.

The same rule suggested by the Senator from Kansas as applied to all the Departments would merely require us to bring in, instead of this bill in detail, a bill providing that the Secretary of the Treasury should have $2,000,000 to carry on the work of that Department, and the Secretary of the Interior so much, and so on. It is for the purpose of confining and narrowing the limits of the discretion of these departmental officers that we report for clerical force as we do, so much in detail. The rule is to report in detail, and we have only reported a gross sum in exceptional instances in a few cases.

While it may be true that the Commissioner of the General Land Office is of the opinion that he can more economically use $50,000 in the way provided for here than if we specified the grade and compensation of employés, we fail to appropriate specifically because he believes he can handle this fund better than Congress can for him. I do not know but it may be so; but that is not the theory upon which we are appropriating money.

Mr. PLUMB. With my usual lack of facility when I make extended remarks, I had the misfortune of being entirely misunderstood. The Senator from Iowa understood me as suggesting that we should put more into this gross sum.

Mr. ALLISON. No, I did not so understand the Senator.

Mr. PLUMB. Well, I simply suggested that we should make less of the higher class of clerks and more of the lower class; as, for instance, that we should make less of class 4 and more of class 3, and less of class 3 and more of class 2, proportionately, and more of class 1, and so on.

Mr. ALLISON. Have we not appropriated in this bill as the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office recommended us to do?

Mr. PLUMB. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ALLISON. They ought to know their necessities.

Mr. PLUMB. Of course, if that is to be the guide, if that is to be regarded as beyond appeal, then of course we ought to appropriate a very much larger sum than we have appropriated in every Department; we ought to add clerks in every single division of the Government, because there is not one, I believe, in which an increase has not been asked for.

I want to say in regard to this matter now while it is under consideration, without the purpose of affecting in any way the amendment pending, that my own belief is that we have got too many clerks in high grades. We have got too many subordinates upon whom responsibility is devolved, leaving too little responsibility upon the heads of bureaus and divisions, because by the adjustment of salaries and the consequent adjustment of responsibility, which comes internally, that responsibility which ought to be focused upon a single head at a single point and place is scattered throughout an entire division. We ought to have more clerks and fewer heads of divisions. We could get along, in my judgment, with a very much less sum of money than we do if we were to adjust these salaries upon a wholly different basis, while, at the same time transacting the public business with full as much efficiency.

I do not believe in depositing unnecessary discretion with the heads of Departments or of divisions. Some little will be necessary, inevitably; but I do believe that in this constant increase of salaries, increase of heads of divisions, withdrawing in place of concentrating responsibility, we are not only expending a larger sum of money than we need to expend every year, but that it does not tend to the proper administration of the business of this Government. There is no place in the Treasury or elsewhere where you can fix the responsibility for any particular act or for a series of acts on any particular person. It is scattered and divided here and there and everywhere in such a way that the responsibility of the head of the bureau is actually lost; and this does not tend, as I think, to the dispatch of business.

Every year, of course, we are beset by propositions to increase salaries; but we never cut anybody's salary down, we never dispense with the service of anybody. If a person is once billeted upon the Government he continues there, or after the office is once created it always continues. By designating these clerks, by constantly increasing their salaries, we increase in that ratio the things which from time to time we are compelled to do to keep them up. I believe myself that we are paying 25 per cent. more salaries in this bill than we ought to pay. I believe we are paying that per cent. by reason of the fact that we are paying more for services than we ought to pay, and we are paying more people than we ought to pay. Then if we could run a plow-share through some of these incrusted divisions, put in some new people, stop this round of perfunctory duties that has gone on from time to time until it has become so well and thoroughly understood that the duty of to-day is the duty of yesterday, and the duty of to-day is also the duty of to-morrow, with nothing to disturb its uniformity and to some extent its uselessness, we should have a better administration of the affairs of this Government at Washington in the various Departments, accompanied by very large economy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1789, before "clerks," to strike out "fifty-four" and insert "sixty;" so as to read:

Sixty clerks of class 2.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to ask if the amendment in line 1788 was adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the lines down to the words "class three," in line 1789, have been passed over, and the amendment just adopted was a substitution of "sixty" for "fifty-four."

Mr. MORGAN. Class 4, in line 1788, was to be passed over. That was the understanding.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1790, before "clerks," to strike out "fifty-five" and insert "sixty-one;" so as to read:

Sixty-one clerks of class 1.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1789, before "clerks," to strike out "fifty-four" and insert "sixty;" so as to read:

Sixty clerks of class 2.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to be informed by the committee how it is that while one member of the committee is stating to us without reply that we have too many clerks already, the committee propose to increase the whole body of clerks in one bureau, the Land Office, by more than twenty—I have not counted up the actual figures—and then give $50,000 as a general fund for discretionary purposes for clerk-hire besides? What does it mean, if the Senator from Kansas is right in his idea that there is too much force now?

Mr. PLUMB. That illustrates what I said a moment ago, as to my lack of facility in either being understood or expressing myself in the ordinary way. I did not say in this bureau. I prefaced what I had to say by saying that in this bureau the work was greatly behind. I believe in this bureau—and I am authorized by the head of it to say so—that more business ought to be done with the force now in hand. I talked with him on the subject this morning. He authorized me to say that more business ought to be done by the force in hand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why does he not do it?

Mr. PLUMB. The answer is simply this: He says that as the business in hand now being done by the force in the office has been increased at least 25 per cent. during the past twelve months, it is not a thing that can be done at once. It is done in various ways. In the first place, during the session of Congress there is a large amount of correspondence to be attended to. There has been a habit when a letter was written to the Department, to refer it as it necessarily must be referred to some clerk to answer it, and in writing the answer a letter is got up, containing an exposition of the general land laws, or something of the kind, making one, two, three, four, five, or sometimes ten pages, each page having to be thoroughly revised and then copied before it goes to the Commissioner. That has been largely stopped as a thing entirely unnecessary. In addition to that various other habits of practice dealing with the transaction of public business have been practically overcome, but all of them can not be overcome at once.

In addition to that, during this time while the force has not been increased in that Department the business has been enormously increased. The Senator from Iowa has, I think, as chairman of the committee, in his possession a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office showing the belated condition of business in that particular bureau.

What I did say, and what I repeat, and what I have the authority of one Cabinet minister at least for saying, is that as a general rule and as a rule applicable to all Departments, regarding them in gross, the business of the Government could be conducted with a good deal less force if it were organized, unified, and vivified as the force of a private establishment is and ought to be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that be so, why then do we not stop increasing this force that at present does not do its whole duty, and devote ourselves to unifying, vivifying, and organizing these Departments? How does it happen that we are silent upon the subject for the whole length of a long session and the whole length of a short session until we get to an appropriation bill on which we are going, as we go in general, apparently in exactly the opposite direction to that which we should take? It seems to me that is rather extraordinary legislation. For one I do not wish to be responsible for it on this explanation.

Mr. ALLISON. I will ask the Secretary to read what I send to the desk from page 5 of Executive Document No. 39, Forty-seventh Congress, second session, being a letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in response to a resolution of the Senate, in which the Commissioner states briefly the difficulties in his office.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read as follows:

There are about 2,000 contested homestead cases now pending besides those in conflict with Congressional grants. There are also 20,000 final homestead cases in which the proof is yet to be examined, and 34,000 private cash and other final entries awaiting adjudication. In addition there are 75,000 timber-culture entries and over 200,000 original homestead cases on file in the public lands division.

In the railroad division there are about 6,000 pending settlement claims, all of which are to be decided in connection with the adjustment of railroad grants.

In the pre-emption division there are 12,000 cases awaiting final action, and there are in addition a large number, probably between 200,000 and 300,000, subsisting pre-emption claims of record upon which final proof is liable to be at any time offered.

In the mineral, swamp land, private land claim, and other divisions of the office there are large accumulations of cases awaiting disposal. It is my judgment that if the entire force of the office should be devoted to bringing up the work in arrears in cases now ready for final action it would require a year and a half to accomplish this result.

New work is also coming into the office more rapidly than the old can be dispatched. This is all work that must be done some time, and it is economy, as well as a great advantage to parties interested, that it should be done speedily.

The needs of this office are for additional clerical force, especially of the higher grades, and for additional office-room. These needs are pressing and imperative if the public business is to be transacted with any reasonable degree of promptitude, accuracy, or intelligence. It is simply impossible for men not learned in the law nor trained in the application of legal principles to the multiform questions relative to land titles that arise in this office to decide cases requiring for their consideration profound research and exhaustive knowledge of laws, rulings, and decisions, however competent they may be to pass a satisfactory examination in the rudiments of a common or classical education.

It is equally impossible for decisions to be unnaturally forced under the pressure of work in arrears without endangering private rights and imperiling the interests of the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. The substance of the statement of the Commissioner of the General Land Office is that if the entire force at his disposition were to be engaged in bringing up the arrears of work it would take one year and a half to do it; and another statement is that the present force in his office is not sufficient to keep up with the current work of the office. Now, it is perfectly manifest that unless we intend to abandon all the great interests that arise out of our public lands, we must, in the face of this statement of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, furnish them additional force for the purpose of carrying on their work. That is all there is of it, and the Committee on Appropriations have endeavored to meet this demand and have reported this increase of the clerical force of the Land Office for that purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Committee on Appropriations has undoubtedly devoted all the time it was capable of devoting to the investigation of this question, but as it has similar questions in all Departments of the Government, and every other question, of course it has not been able to have these gentlemen before it and cross-examine them and scan and criticise the establishment, and call up the heads of the bureaus to know what they are about, how long they have been about it, how many hours they work a day, whether capable people are employed and are compelled to attend to their duties, and so on. We only get the printed and ex parte, and undoubtedly intended to be candid statement of this gentleman about what he thinks the state of his office is, but if it were a matter of private business which was in charge of the members of the Committee on Appropriations or any other committee, before there was this very considerable increase and this large sum of money left to the discretion of these agents, there would be an exhaustive examination and investigation, with the men before them, so that every aspect of the affair could be perfectly understood. What that involves, of course is what it is quite impossible for the Committee on Appropriations, at the time that these bills come here, to do. What this office needs, and a good many other offices, I take it, in this Government, is a careful scrutiny when there is time enough to scrutinize, by the committee charged with that particular branch of the public service or some other committee, so that the errors and inefficiencies that the Senator from Kansas speaks of in the present force that does not do what it ought to do may be corrected and the thing established upon a basis where the public service will get the benefit of the money that it pays and public business will go on.

I hope my friend will not understand me as blaming the Committee on Appropriations at all. I do not; but I only speak of the misfortune of our being left at the end of a Congress to give a large increase of force without any inspection and examination and scrutiny, such as ought to be made, when at the same time some gentlemen who know about it say that the force we already have does not do anywhere up to what it ought to do.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, one word only in response to what the Senator from Vermont suggests. As a matter of course the Committee on Appropriations can not make that detailed and absolute investigation of every bureau and every Department of the Government which would enable it on its own responsibility to say exactly what measure of service each particular clerk performs, but so far from our not making diligent inquiry about the matter in hand we had the Secretary of the Interior, the responsible officer of the Department, before the Committee on Appropriations for three successive mornings, and we went over the bill with reference to his force in detail. We inquired of him, perhaps not with as much particularity as the Senator from Vermont would have done, but we inquired of him with reference to the force in the Land Office, the character of the force, the sufficiency, the number of hours they work, and so on, and he stated to us that probably about 3 or 4 per cent. of the force was an inefficient force, and he gave us the reason why. I shall not go into that, but we went into that detail.

In addition to that, a committee of the Senate last year made a thorough investigation of the General Land Office. I think my friend from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] was a member of that committee. They went over the Land Office with great particularity with reference to its clerical force and its needs. When the appropriation bill was up last year I remember having quite a prolonged struggle with my friend from Alabama in reference to what we ought to do for the Land Office. It has been a subject of inquiry in the Committee on Appropriations for three or four years, and has been pressed upon us from year to year, and finally this year the accumulations are so rapid and so great that it seemed necessary that something should be done at once. Last year the business of the General Land Office was nearly double what it was eight years ago, or six years ago. It has increased beyond any other department of the Government with reference to mineral lands, with reference to agricultural lands, timber lands, swamp lands, and every division of the public-land service. We believe that this force is necessary, and I leave it for the Senate now to decide the question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it intended that this $50,000 to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior shall authorize him to appoint people without examination and inspection by the Civil-Service Commission that we established with such a large flourish of trumpets a little while ago?

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose not. I suppose these appointees will come clearly under the wise and salutary provisions of the civil-service act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish I could see that as plainly as my friend does. It looks to me, as an humble observer, and not knowing much about law, as if here were $50,000, which will pay for forty clerks' salaries for one year at the salary of first-class clerks of $1,200, in round numbers—I may not state the number exactly right——

Mr. ALLISON. About that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend from Iowa and I should appear before the Civil Service Commission on the 2d day of July, when the act goes into force, and should find that my friend from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] should outfoot us on an examination with reference to our capacity to work in that particular office (for that is what the law we have passed requires, not mere scholasticism, but capacity to do the thing that the Government wants), my friend from Alabama beats us on that, as he naturally would. Thereupon we turn around through what is called "influence," and through our friends get the Secretary of the Interior to appoint us to a first-class clerkship, notwithstanding, under this discretionary authority of the use and application of which he is to be the sole judge. If that is not meant then I think we had better make it pretty clear. If it is meant we had better understand it.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will suggest an appropriate phrase to make that perfectly clear I shall cheerfully act with him. This clerical force is to be employed in Washington, it is to be under the control of one of the heads of the Departments here. It stands with reference to the law just as any other force in the Departments stands, except that the Secretary of the Interior can use all this money for fourth-class clerks, all of it for third-class clerks, or all of it for second-class or first-class clerks. We do not confine him to the particular class of clerks that he shall employ, but he must take one of the classes known to our law, either first, second, third, or fourth class, or $1,000 clerks, and they all come within the range and purview of the civil-service law.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont there is no more necessity of attaching that condition to the expenditure of this money than there is to every other paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognized the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. Does he yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to add to what the chairman of the committee has said.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me complete my statement. There is no more necessity for applying a condition to correspond with this paragraph than any other paragraph in the bill appropriating money for clerk-hire.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to add to what the chairman has said about the investigation at the Land Office, that that investigation was very carefully and thoroughly made. The chiefs of division and the chief clerk of the office were all put under oath, so that the examination might be verified in the best way that the committee could possibly do it. We also made a personal examination of the officers of the different divisions.

We found the Land Office in what I call a very deplorable condition, for the want of room, for the want of ventilation, for the want of sufficient clerical force. The organization of the Land Office appeared to be very good. I was very much surprised and agreeably so to find that the chiefs of divisions, the principal clerks who had charge of every variety of land question that could come up in that great department, seemed to be very well informed in respect of their duties, though some of them were non-professional men. Some of them were physicians. They were very well informed; and I must do them the justice to say that our examination convinced the committee that there was more work performed in that office out of hours, more extraordinary work performed in the Land Office than in any other office in the Government of the United States. It is not an infrequent thing for the men to go there at night and on Sunday to work up during the sessions of Congress to the requirements that are made on the Land Office for information.

Another thing must be remembered. The agricultural classes, after they have entered their homesteads, send their papers forward, and where there is some intervention or controversy become impatient to get their titles. They generally attach a great deal of importance to having a patent. The delay which has been necessary for the want of clerical force to clean out the 250,000 cases, for instance, that are undisposed of in the public lands division leads to an accumulation of correspondence. A man, instead of writing one letter about his case, will write three, four, or five; they have to be answered; and that is one of the reasons why the current business has accumulated so rapidly.

The disposal of the public lands is going on with a rapidity that is not only astonishing but alarming to me. We are getting rid of our public domain at a rate that will soon leave us without any resources of that kind, and without anything for our own posterity in the way of donations of public land to them. However, that is a subject I need not refer to now, except to show the necessity that has come upon the Department for having an increase of force. There can not be any doubt about it; there is great embarrassment for the want of room. At the same time the public business can not be detained waiting for the building of houses. We must go on and do the best we can, and the best thing we can do now is to increase the clerical force.

I think it will be found that this appropriation of $50,000 left to the discretionary use of the Secretary of the Interior will be about the most useful part of this appropriation bill, so far as improvements are concerned. He can put it precisely where it is needed to relieve the pressure, to relieve the clog that is now upon the Bureau, and can put us in an attitude whereby, with some re-arrangement of the organization perhaps of the bureau and a small additional force, we can get this business ahead.

Mr. Commissioner McFarland, I think, is a pretty severe man at the head of the bureau. I think he is an exacting man. He requires perhaps as much of the employés and officers under him as any other man in the service of the Government of the United States. I know personally that he is extremely exacting in respect of the full and diligent use of the time of the different clerks and employés of that bureau; and when he says that perhaps some additional labor might be performed by those persons that must be received as a statement of a man who is very exacting. I do not blame him for it, but at the same time he has less cause for being so than perhaps any other bureau officer of the Government, for I believe he has as faithful a force under him as can be found in any of the Departments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] says that he does not see why this force is not just as much subject to the civil-service law as the clerks named above it are. I think I do, with great respect to him. The clerks named above it are named as clerks of certain classes and in the regular classifications of the law, to which the civil-service law clearly applies. Then comes this additional provision for increasing the regular force, and this $50,000 is employed for clerical force, without describing it by clerks and classes, for the purpose of disposing of this accumulated work and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose. I am very much afraid that the legal effect and intendment of that is that this sum of money is put entirely at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, a very discreet man undoubtedly, to be employed in such a way as he pleases, in employing you or me or anybody else that he may choose to select of his own free will and pleasure according to his estimate of the best way of employing it, without any competition and without any reference to the provision that we have made in regard to carrying on the clerical work of the Government in this city.

To guard against that, as the committee say they do not mean it, I I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting after the word "force," in line 1798, the words "to be employed only in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress passed January 16, 1883, entitled 'an act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States.'"

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to my friend a modification of the amendment. I do it with great deference, of course. I suggest that he simply say, after the word "force," "of the classes now authorized by law."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think that would help it when you come to the discretionary power of the Secretary of the Interior. What I want to do is to have the Senate decide flatly one way or the other, so that there can not be any mistake about it hereafter, whether the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to appoint these people without reference to the civil-service act, or whether he is not. If he is, I want to use language so that there can be no mistake about it.

Mr. ALLISON. I am perfectly willing to adopt the language suggested by the Senator from Vermont. I will say to him that it never occurred to me that anything else was possible.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me say in regard to that matter, there is one thing the Senator from Vermont ought to see. Of course he is a civil-service reformer, as I understand, and has made up his mind that this increased force shall be goverened by the rules laid down in the civil-service act. Of course that is the end of it. But this is in its very essence to be a temporary force. It is designed so to be. It is not designed to billet anybody on the Government. It therefore does not come within the fair purview and intent of the civil-service act, although, as I believe, if the Secretary of the Interior has occasion to employ a person for a year of the classes named in the bill at $1,000 he would undoubtedly have to employ him according to the terms imposed by the civil-service act.

Mr. MORGAN. He always does that.

Mr. PLUMB. He always does that, as the Senator from Alabama says. Notwithstanding that, he would employ in this case undoubtedly men for three months, men for six months; and the idea of requiring the expense of an examination and the time and paraphernalia and performance that would be gone through with in order to get men into the service for three months would, it seems to me, be saving at the spigot and losing at the bung, if I may use that expression.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has not yet reached the clause which the Senator from Vermont proposes to amend. There are two or three amendments preceding it not yet disposed of.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg pardon of the Chair.

Mr. CALL. Since the discussion has proceeded on this proposition I wish to say a word in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator from Florida that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is not yet pending. There are two or three prior amendments.

Mr. CALL. I thought it had been discussed for half an hour here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been discussed, and the Senator may proceed if he desires.

Mr. CALL. I shall not occupy the time of the Senate at any length. When I came to the Senate I received a number of applications from people living in Florida for their patents, which they requested me to urge upon the Department the immediate issue of for agricultural and other lands entered by them. Many of these cases had been pending for five and ten years, and some of them for a longer period of time. Within the last two months I have had occasion to call the attention of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the very cases which when I first came here, nearly four years ago, I brought to the attention of the Department. The reply to me was, and in a great many cases which have occurred the reply has been the same, that the Department has not had the clerical force; they are overworked. In the land office in Florida the same objection has been made. The entries are not completed, the certificates of the land can not be obtained; persons who have complied with the law are not able to dispose of their lands. Others who wish to make valuable improvements upon their land are deterred from doing so, and there is a general complaint throughout the whole of that portion of the country on account of the delay in the Land Office.

The amendment of the Senator from Vermont preventing the Secretary of the Interior from immediately employing this force in remedying these defects will effectually destroy it. If they are to wait one, two, or four months for the machinery of the civil-service act to be perfected and examinations to be completed, certainly at least that much delay will occur. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the prior amendments.

The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations in order was stated to be, in line 1788, before "clerks," to strike out "thirty-two" and insert "thirty-four;" in the same line, after "four," to strike out "forty-three" and insert "forty-nine;" in line 1789, before "clerks," to strike out "fifty-four" and insert "sixty;" in line 1790, before "clerks," to strike out "fifty-five" and insert "sixty-one;" in line 1791, before "clerks," to strike out "twenty-seven" and to insert "thirty;" in line 1792, before "copyists," to strike "fifty-four" and insert "fifty-nine;" and after "all," in line 1794, to strike out "383,000" and insert "419,300;" so as to read:

Forty-nine clerks of class 3; sixty clerks of class 2; sixty-one clerks of class 1; thirty clerks at $1,000 each; and fifty-nine copyists at $900 each; eight assistant messengers; twelve laborers; and six packers at $720 each; in all, $419,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after "dollars," in line 1796, to insert:

And the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated for clerical force for the sole purpose of disposing of the accumulated work in the General Land Office, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now move the amendment I indicated. After the word "force," in line 1798, I move to insert:

To be employed only in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress passed January 16, 1883, entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States."

Mr. PLUMB. I hope that will not be adopted. That would require the Secretary of the Interior to classify the clerks at $1,200 and upward. He may employ them at $1,000. It will cost the Government at least 10 per cent. of the entire sum simply to carry out the notion of having it made in accordance with the civil-service act.

Mr. CALL. I raise the point of order on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is not well taken. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I wish to reply to the Senator from Kansas, who says this will embarrass the thing because the civil-service provision requires classification by salaries. I think the Senator is mistaken. The civil-service act says nothing about salaries, but it says the clerical force employed in the Departments at Washington shall be selected through the test of their fitness for their places which the act prescribes, and according to the population of the various States.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I think there is one objection to bringing a temporary force of the character here proposed under the civil-service law. There are provisions made in that act to have all the appointments equalized among the States as nearly as may be, and there is a great deal of machinery of that sort which can not very well be applied to a temporary force.

The idea we have in our minds (at least the idea I had in committee) is that the work is so far behind that patents and other things can not be issued, and the Secretary of the Interior should have in the promptest possible way the right to pick up the most available people in the shortest time that he could, to use in bringing the work up, and this money is given for the purpose of having it done. If he could get fifty young men for three months to do it well, or if he could get more it is proposed to give him the power to employ them; but not to become part of the permanent machinery of the Government. If they are to go through all the details of an examination they would claim that they came into the service through the civil-service act, by which they had acquired a status and standing, and we should have trouble with them all the time. One reason why we did not give a regular force for this purpose was because if they came in under the civil-service rules we could not get clear of them after the exigency passed away. All know that if men passed a competitive examination and by that means got into the Land Office they would become a part of the machinery, and we could not get clear of them easily.

I think when the Senator from Vermont looks at it a little closer he will come to the same conclusion we did, that we would not want them to go into the Land Office as an increase of the regular force, but we want to bring up the work which is behind, because of litigation of railroad companies and on account of actual settlers who are having great trouble about their titles, and the sooner the force is employed the better and the more efficiently the work will be done without any preliminary machinery. That is the thought I had, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That has great force. That was the forcible, and the only forcible, argument against a civil-service commission and the civil-service scheme altogether. All of these Departments are made up of bureaus and divisions, and the principle that will apply to one will apply to all the rest. If we are to make an exception, as to the application of this method of selection of clerks in the public service as to the Land Office, we can make it as to every other with equal propriety. I do not believe in that propriety; I believe that it is perfectly competent to have a competitive examination in accordance with the provisions of the law without the favor of Senators or the influence of Representatives of respectable young men and women, who, according to their capacity for the business about which they are to be employed are to have a fair chance according to their character and capacity without reference to our influence and persuasion. To accomplish that we have passed the civil-service law.

The first step, as now represented by the Senators from Kansas and from Kentucky, not agreed to by the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill, is to get money enough in the sole discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to employ forty clerks of class 1 for one year according to the old plan, entirely according to his discretion. I do not think that is right. If we were really and honestly in earnest about trying the civil-service experiment, then let us stick to it long enough to have it begin and see how we come out; and then if we find that there are difficulties in the way inseparable, we can correct the law; but do not let us begin to repeal it piecemeal the very moment it is passed, and before it gets into operation.

Mr. President, I shall be glad to ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will not ask for the yeas and nays at this moment.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I rise to say in reply to the Senator from Vermont that under the civil-service law (about which I have nothing to say now, because it is the law of the land) the persons to be employed in the Departments at Washington are to be distributed among the various States. Suppose my State or California or any distant State may have a smaller number than the State of Maryland or the State of Pennsylvania or some State near by, you apply the civil-service rule and delay the examinations until people can come from California, or from Kentucky or somewhere else to go through all this preliminary work, and they are to be dismissed at the end of a year. They are not going into the service of the United States really but they are simply employed to bring up the work. I submit it would be a great hardship upon those people and a great mistake to encourage that sort of thing.

We ought to confine the law to the actual employment inside of the Departments in such a way as by length of service and by good service promotion can be had; but it should not be applied to mere temporary clerks. You can find fifty or sixty young men in the city of Washington now ready to go to work as soon as the bill passes making the appropriation immediately available, so as to bring up the work that is behind. That is the proper way to do. That is what a business man would do. He would not advise that California was behind or Minnesota was behind in her quota, or that Kentucky was behind and bring people here for a temporary purpose and put them through all the machinery of examination and dismiss them at the end of six months and leave them on their own resources, perhaps worse off than if they had not come here. I never saw any public place open when somebody did not want it, somehow or other, whether it was good for him or not. That will be the result if the amendment is agreed to. That is another reason that ought to be considered.

Mr. MORGAN. This appropriation of $50,000 is expressly to be applied to the sole purpose of disposing of the accumulated work in the General Land Office. It has no connection with the permanent service of that bureau. The civil-service act, as I understand it, was intended to control or influence the permanent service in the Departments. I suppose that the civil-service act would not shut Congress off from employing persons to bring up the work when the regular corps of employés in any Department or bureau was not adequate to the discharge of all the public duties.

In Washington city there are a number of persons who can be employed during the vacation of Congress, during the summer time, who have a special knowledge of the condition of affairs in the General Land Office, and who have experience there, men who have acquired this specialty by being clerks in the different divisions of the Land Office, and who have resigned and gone into other business. It is very important that you should have men in the General Land Office to deal with matters of this kind who have had such experience. You can not take a man into one of those divisions and educate him in a few days so that he will be of any valuable assistance in the disposal of these questions.

I think it is eminently proper for the purpose of overcoming the present embarrassment and removing the existing obstruction to the performance of this public business that the $50,000 should be left in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. I have no idea that it would be abused. More than that, the Secretary of the Interior is in the habit of having an investigation made of every person appointed to office. That has been the custom there, whether it has been the custom of any other heads of Departments of the Government or not. I hope that the Senate will agree to the amendment of the committee allowing the Secretary of the Interior to have the use of this money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BECK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So do I.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, a single word. There is nothing in the civil-service bill which prohibits the Government, or establishes a policy looking to that end, from the employment of persons temporarily when the exigencies of the public business require it. In this case the Secretary of the Interior has recommended the appropriation. I myself introduced a resolution in the Senate asking what additional force is necessary to enable these patents to be promptly issued. There is a large emigration to my State of people from the North and from the West, and in Florida for years they have been unable to obtain patents, and it has caused very great trouble and also great distress there.

Persons who have completed the homestead entries are unable to obtain their evidences of title or to transfer them or to dispose of them in any way, although authorized by the law to do so.

Again, it is perfectly manifest that it will be impossible to hasten this work and expedite it in any material point of view by subjecting this temporary employment to the operation of the civil-service act. Why should persons be called from Florida and elsewhere and be subjected to the examination and machinery and the details of the civil-service act, all of which are not perfected, when there is a pressing necessity for immediate action upon this subject? I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the committee will be adopted.

Mr. LAPHAM. Before the vote is taken I should like to make one inquiry of the mover of the amendment proposed. Does the provision take effect until after the 1st of July next?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The provision takes effect, as the bill now stands, exactly when the civil-service act takes effect, on the 1st of July.

Mr. LAPHAM. I supposed not until then. Therefore there can be no appointments under the language of the clause, as I construe the civil-service law, prior to the 1st of July next.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Both will go into force at the same time.

Mr. LAPHAM. I should like to know whether it is the interpretation given to this clause in the bill by Senators that the clerical force to be employed under this clause of the bill is not to be employed in pursuance of the provisions of that law? I do not remember any exception in the law.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from New York that according to my notion of the proper construction of the proviso it comes under the rules and principles of the civil-service act; but the Senator from Vermont is afraid that it does not.

Mr. LAPHAM. Then certainly his amendment will do no harm in the opinion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I think not.

Mr. LAPHAM. For that reason I shall vote for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I was paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], but I have transferred the pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS], and I vote "yea."

Mr. FAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY].

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON].

Mr. MILLER, of California. I desire to announce the pair of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (after having voted in the affirmative). I am informed that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I therefore withdraw my vote and announce my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Aldrich,	Davis of Ill.,	Hoar,	Miller of N. Y.,
Allison,	Dawes,	Kellogg,	Platt,
Anthony,	Edmunds,	Lapham,	Rollins,
Bayard,	Frye,	Logan,	Sherman,
Blair,	Groome,	McDill,	Tabor,
Cockrell,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Windom.
Conger,	Hawley,	Miller of Cal.,

NAYS—23.

Barrow,	Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,
Beck,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Vance,
Brown,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Van Wyck,
Call,	Harris,	Plumb,	Vest,
Coke,	Jackson,	Pugh,	Voorhees.
Davis of W. Va.,	Jonas,	Ransom,

ABSENT—26.

Butler,	George,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Camden,	Grover,	McPherson,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill,	Mitchell,	Walker,
Fair,	Ingalls,	Morrill,	Williams.
Farley,	Johnston,	Pendleton,
Ferry,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1815, before "clerks," to strike out "three" and insert "five;" in the same line, after "four," to strike out "nine" and insert "ten;" in line 1818, after "one," to strike out "seven" and insert "ten;" and in line 1821, after "all," to strike out "eighty-five thousand six" and insert "ninety-three thousand eight;" so as to make the clause read:

Indian Office: For compensation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000; one chief of division at $2,000; one financial clerk at $2,000; one principal bookkeeper, $1,800; five clerks of class 4; ten clerks of class 3; one stenographer at $1,600; fifteen clerks of class 2, one of whom shall be a draughtsman; eight clerks of class 1; ten clerks at $1,000 each; fourteen copyists at $900 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $93,820.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Pension Office," in line 1837, before "principal," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty-two;" so as to read:

Forty-two principal examiners for review board at $2,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1851, after "and," to increase the total appropriation for the Pension Office from $1,941,550 to $1,955,550.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of the "United States Patent Office," in line 1889, after the word "each," to insert "one messenger and property clerk, $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1893, after the word "each," to insert "twenty-six examiners' clerks at $1,000 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1901, to increase the total amount of appropriation for compensation of the Commissioner of the Patent Office, assistant commissioners, and the clerks and employés in his office, from $536,230 to $563,230.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations "for photolithographing or otherwise producing copies of drawings of the weekly issues of patents," after the word "dollars," in line 1918, to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall invite and receive bids and proposals for the performance of such work for not less than one nor more than five years, at the option of the Government, and shall report the same to Congress at the beginning of its next session for its information, and shall also report the rates at which the work is being done under this clause, and the rates paid for the work during the last five years.

Mr. GORMAN. I raise the point of order on the amendment of the committee that it is new legislation. The law now provides that contracts shall only be let for one year. This extends it to five years, and it is legislation under the twenty-ninth rule.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is not changing this question. It is simply a provision, which I think is a very just one, and it is for information.

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall invite and receive bids and proposals for the performance of such work for not less than one nor more than five years, at the option of the Government, and shall report the same to Congress at the beginning of its next session for its information, and shall also report the rates at which the work is being done under this clause, and the rates paid for the work during the last five years.

That is simply to get information to Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not think it comes within the rule, or that it is legislation. If it was an absolute authority to contract for not less than one year nor more than five years, it would be legislation in the sense of the rule, but this is to get information. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Chair overrule the point of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is overruled as to the proviso being legislation.

Mr. HARRIS. It is legislation, whether it authorizes a contract or does not authorize a contract.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is directing an officer of the Government to get information for Congress.

Mr. HARRIS. I will not myself raise any question about it.

Mr. PLUMB. I raise the point of order as to the proviso down to line 1921, including the word "Government."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would be subject to the point of order if it could be divided from the rest of the proviso.

Mr. PLUMB. I make the point of order as to that part of it.

Mr. MORGAN. If that part of it is legislation, I do not see why the whole of it is not amenable to the objection.

Mr. PLUMB. I think so too.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is all legislation, if any part of it is.

Mr. LAPHAM. It clearly authorizes the making of a contract for a period of five years, and the employment of persons in pursuance of it, because it says he shall report the rates at which he shall employ people under this provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The last part depends upon the first. It seems that there is nothing in the proviso that requires the Secretary to make a contract. It is simply for bids and proposals, and that he shall report for the information of Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Chair hold that it does not require him to make a contract?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He can not make any contract under this proviso.

Mr. INGALLS. What does the line mean, "and shall also report the rates at which the work is being done under this clause?"

Mr. ALLISON. It means under this paragraph.

Mr. INGALLS. Not under the clause? So far as requiring the collection of information and not requiring legislation, I suggest that in that view of the case the bill creating the Tariff Commission was not legislation. All they were required to do was to collect information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not consider the clause "and shall also report the rates at which the work is being done under this clause."

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair allow me to say before he gives his decision that, as I understand, the whole paragraph preceding line 1918 only applies to contracts for the year, which is the present law, the present method of doing it. Then the Secretary of the Interior has to invite and receive proposals and bids for the future not less than one nor more than five years. That is a mere receipt of proposals, and he reports what those rates are and what he is doing under the existing law for the year for which it is at present being done. That does not mean that the rates at which the work is being done under this clause, under these bids, but that is the previous part of the clause.

Mr. ALLISON. If the clause needs any interpretation I will say to the Senate that some statements were made to the committee that perhaps exorbitant prices were being paid for this work. The committee were impressed that it is important that this work should be done in the city of Washington, but with a view of ascertaining whether or not the price now being paid was too high, it was thought wise to introduce here a proviso that would enable the Secretary of the Interior for the purposes of the future to ascertain what this work could be done for elsewhere or by competitive bids. Then also it was thought wise to have him report the prices that will be paid for the work under this appropriation, and report to Congress so that we may legislate hereafter.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Iowa will permit me to say that there is nothing in this clause in the character of an amendment which the Senate could not do by a single order in the morning. There is not any legislation at all, but it is something which we might order the Secretary of the Interior to do. I wish to make a suggestion to test the idea whether it is general legislation. Suppose the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations should bring in a resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to do that thing in the morning, one branch of Congress could require it to be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The last clause is a little blind, but the Chair construes it to mean that the Secretary of the Interior shall report the rates at which the work is being done, as it has been done heretofore, and the rates paid during the last five years. In the opinion of the Chair this is simply a proviso for information, which, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, could be done by either House of Congress, by the Senate alone. New legislation is something which requires the joint action of both Houses of Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. To make that plain I move to strike out, in lines 1923 and 1924, the words "and shall also report the rates at which the work is being done under this clause," so that there may be no misunderstanding about it.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the word "clause" and to insert "paragraph."

Mr. PLUMB. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that he would accomplish what he desires if he should insert after the word "Government," in line 1921, "that no contract shall be made for a longer period than one year." That is the present law.

Mr. PLUMB. This is all done with the idea that no contract can be made at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is overruled. Does the Senator from Kansas accept the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa to substitute the word "paragraph" for the word "clause?"

Mr. PLUMB. I accept that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment of the committee, to strike out the word "clause," in line 1924, and to insert the word "paragraph."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to strike out all after the word "that," in line 1918, and to insert:

> If the work herein provided for can be done at the Government Printing Office for satisfactory prices, not greater than is paid for similar work in Washington or elsewhere, the Secretary of the Interior shall contract with the Public Printer for doing the same.

Mr. HOAR. I make the point of order on that.

Mr. WINDOM. What is the point of order?

Mr. HOAR. That it is new legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is new legislation. It is an absolute thing that is proposed to be done. The committee's proviso is simply for the purpose of getting information for Congress.

Mr. WINDOM. Under the rule prohibiting legislation you have the right to direct what shall be done with any appropriation. I think it has always been held to be the rule that when you appropriate——

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the point of order if nobody else makes it.

Mr. WINDOM. I think it clearly is not subject to the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. WINDOM. I will state my purpose in offering the amendment. Almost since I can remember the discussions on such bills there has been a controversy over the matter of photolithographing. I think the Government Printing Office is the place where it should be done, and this proviso is that if it can be done as satisfactorily and at as low prices there as elsewhere it shall be done at the Government Printing Office. I should like to see it taken out of the category of contested questions hereafter. I see no reason why it can not be done there, and I think that the Secretary of the Interior should ascertain that, and if it can be done there make a contract for it.

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to go into a discussion of the matter at this time. There is nothing now pending before the Senate which makes it proper to make any criticisms on anybody, and therefore it is not worth while. But the Senator perhaps will remember that certain persons in my State of very high standing and character as workmen claim that they have repeatedly been the lowest bidders for this contract, and that in some mode, which is not according to ordinary proceeding, they have failed to receive the award which they are entitled to. That matter has been discussed before the Senate heretofore, and they had to struggle and struggle to get some protection for fair play into the bill. Here is a protection as I understand it; and now the suggestion comes to place this work in the Government Printing Office. Although that is probably to prevent their getting it, yet still if it is a fair suggestion I do not see why it should not be considered if the Secretary of the Interior finds it can be done cheaper there. My impression is that it will be impossible to do it in the Government Printing Office, or in any place where there is any possibility of delay from any cause, as it is a thing which must be done by contract with private parties. But I shall make no point of order or objection to the Senator's substitute for the proviso.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is very plain that this work should be done in the city of Washington, either at a private establishment or at the Government Printing Office. I suppose that the Government Printing Office could not as at present equipped do it, but it might equip itself so as to do it. In Mr. Fisher's time the advertisement required that it should be done in this city. Afterward it was taken from this city and carried to Boston, and the work was three months behind. Then it was carried to New York, and there it was behind. To have it done out of this city requires the transmission by mail of the original drawings in the Patent Office at great risk of loss and great delay to the patentees.

The Patent Office is supported by patentees, and they are entitled to have the prompt delivery of the photolithographs of their drawings. These drawings cost the Government about a cent apiece, and they are sold at 10 cents a piece, I think. I believe the Government Printing Office might be put in a condition to do this work, but it is not at present, I suppose, capable of doing it. I think the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota should be adopted.

Mr. HOAR. There is a great deal of truth in what the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] has said. The copies of drawings of the weekly issues of patents ought to be done in this city, very likely; but there is a great deal of the work of reproduction of exhausted copies which there is not the slightest reason for having done in the city of Washington; and so in producing copies of designs and trade-marks and other things referred to in the preceding portion of the paragraph. They are done very much better and very much cheaper, as I am instructed (of course, I repeat now merely what I am instructed by persons in whom I have confidence), elsewhere, and have to be done elsewhere for economy and for nicety and accuracy of work. The work which is done by persons who have at some time had this work awarded to them under the claim that it ought to be done in this city has been inferior in quality to that, as is shown in their specimens in their bids. But I will not go into that question at this time, because I will not object to the Senator's proposition. Therefore I will not introduce a subject which would lead to a long and earnest debate.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator's information does not correspond with mine. My information is that the work has been done better and cheaper in this city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] as a substitute to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BECK. Is not that legislation?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order was waived.

Mr. CONGER. Is that subject to the objection of the point of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, the Chair thinks it is.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order.

Mr. WINDOM. The rule ever since I can remember its administration in the Senate has been that you had the right to dictate by provision of law what should be done with an appropriation. This does not extend beyond the $80,000 appropriated. It is an application, as I understand it, of that fund.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule says that there shall be no legislation on an appropriation bill, and the amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. WINDOM. Does the Chair hold that in appropriating a specific sum for a specific purpose you can not give a direction as to its use?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is new legislation if it requires the action of both Houses.

Mr. INGALLS. Does not the proviso now offered by the committee require the action of both Houses also?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not necessarily, because a mere direction of the Senate would be sufficient to procure the information.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to be heard on that point after the Senator from Minnesota is through.

Mr. WINDOM. The proviso now in can not be made operative until both Houses have agreed to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the legislation is incomplete. It does not require anything to be done, while the amendment requires a contract to be made.

Mr. WINDOM. I am compelled to appeal from the decision of the Chair, because I think it is a rule that would utterly prevent the Senate from ever directing what shall be done with any sum of money if it can be said that we can not direct it by a specific provision which does not apply to anything but to the sum appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. I dislike exceedingly, always, to vote against the decision of the Chair, and if there is the slightest doubt about it I shall vote to sustain the decision of the Chair. But it does seem to me that it is the right of the Senate in appropriating any sum of money whatever to state for what purpose it shall be used. It is clearly the right of the Senate. The House have exercised that right in saying this shall be done upon contracts made by the Secretary of the Interior, contracts made in the ordinary way. It seems to me it is clearly our right in making this appropriation of $80,000 to say that the work shall be done in the Government Printing Office. That is not new legislation. It is only a direction as to the application of the money.

It seems to me that if the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations is not legislative this clearly is not, because the proviso as reported requires the Secretary of the Interior to invite and receive bids and proposals. I do not agree that the Senate has not power to do that. The Senate has power to ask for information from the Departments, but this is an affirmative act requiring something to be done outside of the ordinary business of the Department. Waiving that, the amendment now proposed is a simple limitation made, that upon the Secretary of the Interior being advised, being informed after an examination, that it is cheaper and better to do this work in the Government Printing Office, the money shall be expended in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair may be wrong in ruling that the proviso is not subject to the point of order, but he can not possibly be wrong in ruling that this amendment is subject to the point of order, because it says positively that the Secretary of the Interior shall contract for this work at the Public Printing Office. Surely that is new legislation.

Mr. INGALLS. The proviso says he "shall invite and receive bids and proposals," and that requires the expenditure of money out of the Treasury which can not be taken from the Treasury except in pursuance of law. Therefore the Senate can not direct the Secretary of the Interior to do what is required in the proviso.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point now is upon the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand, and if the question were res nova, as judges would say, I should agree with the Chair entirely, but I understand the Chair, with the assent of the Senate, that is without any appeal, but with acquiescence, to have decided that the proviso reported from the committee is in order. That proviso does require the Secretary of the Interior, in my opinion——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair may have been wrong about that, but he is not about the other.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But we must be consistent, and if we have ruled that way, until that decision is reversed we must stand by it. Now the Chair speaking for the Senate, and so the Senate, has held that the proviso reported from the committee is in order. That proviso commands the Secretary of the Interior to do things that neither House alone in my humble opinion has any right to command him to do; and that is that he shall invite and receive bids and proposals for the performance of work. I think it very clear myself, with great respect——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it requires the action of both Houses to invite proposals, of course it is legislation. The Chair went upon the theory that the Senate could do it, but the Senate can not alone do what this amendment of the Senator from Minnesota proposes, because there is an absolute contract to be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I do not think there would be any disagreement in this body if I were to have offered a resolution this morning when resolutions were called for, commanding the Secretary of the Interior to invite and receive bids and proposals for the performance of the Patent-Office drawings, that everybody would have said it was totally beyond our constitutional power to command him to do anything of the kind. We have said a thousand times here when resolutions of inquiry were offered which went beyond the mere point of inquiry to get at papers in the office or information in the possession of a head of department and required him affirmatively to do something, that we could not do it; and I think that is a clear distinction between the power of one branch of the legislative department and the power of the executive department. Therefore it appears to me pretty clear that if the proviso that the Senate has decided to be in order is in order, then the proposal to amend it in exactly the same legal line must be in order too.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair at first blush thought this was in order; but in his opinion on reflection it is not in order at all. The whole proviso is not in order, nor the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota. There can be no question, however, about the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota being out of order. The Chair will now rule that both are out of order. But the yeas and nays were ordered on the appeal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the appeal be withdrawn.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It can be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the withdrawal of the call for the yeas and nays. The proviso goes out.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1980, in the appropriations for the "Office of the Director of the Geological Survey," to reduce the appropriation for the compensation of the Director from $6,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1983, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for the compensation of the Director of the Geological Survey, and the clerks, employés, &c., in his office from $34,940 to $33,940.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued down to and including line 2008. The paragraph from 2009 to line 2017, inclusive, was read, as follows:

For the rent of a suitable building or buildings for the use of the Pension Office, to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to contract with the owner of said building or other buildings for the rent thereof to the Government, at a rate not exceeding $20,000, from June 30, 1883, to June 30, 1884.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether there ought not to be a limitation in respect to the renting at $20,000 of the building now occupied for a Pension Office? We have a standing provision of law somewhere against long leases of private buildings in this city.

Mr. ALLISON. One year is the limitation now by law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But here comes a later provision, and I suggest that my friend say "subject to existing law" so as to make it perfectly clear.

Mr. ALLISON. I will agree to that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. After "authorized," in line 2012, I move to insert "subject to existing provisions of law."

Mr. BECK. He is already limited to a contract from the 30th of June, 1883, to the 30th of June, 1884, in lines 2015 and 2016.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I saw that, but as the courts have held that commas do not make any difference in laws, I was afraid that might be construed to be a rate of $20,000 a year. If the Senator is clear that it makes a perfectly secure limitation, I have nothing to say.

Mr. BECK. The committee thought so, but I am willing to make that clearer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then there can be no harm in the amendment I propose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection the Chair will receive the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. The question is on that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2021, to increase the appropriation "for rent of a building for use of the United States Geological Survey" from $1,500 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2026, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to comply with the requirements of section 4 of the act approved January 16, 1883, entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued down to and including line 2078. The paragraph from line 2078 to line 2081, inclusive, was read, as follows:

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Washington, two thousand, and for the clerks in his office, $5,500; in all, $8,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would call attention to line 2079.

Mr. ALLISON. The word "dollars" should be inserted after "thousand."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to that amendment. It will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. I desire to call attention to lines 2061 to 2070. May there not be employed under that provision of law so large a number of clerks that the civil-service bill will apply to their appointment? I believe the number is limited to fifty. By the appropriation there made for the surveyor-general's office in Colorado, may not fifty persons be employed, so as to require a provision making the civil-service rules applicable to them?

Mr. ALLISON. I think not. I do not think the civil-service rules apply to this paragraph if there are not fifty persons employed.

Mr. LAPHAM. Is the Senator certain there will not be fifty employed?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will continue.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Post-Office Department," in line 2107, to increase the appropriation for compensation of "law clerk" from $2,250 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2112, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of the Postmaster-General and the clerks and the employés in his office from $29,510 to $29,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for office of First Assistant Postmaster-General, in line 2117, after the word "additional," to strike out "three" and insert "chief of salary and allowance division, $2,000."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have that explained. I do not remember any such office. Does that create a new office?

Mr. ALLISON. It is the designation of one of the divisions in the Post-Office Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But has it a chief now by a previous act?

Mr. ALLISON. I think not by any absolute law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then this creates a new head of division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object. But I shall not bother about it—let it go.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2118, to insert "two" before "clerks;" in line 2121, after the word "two," to strike out "fourteen" and insert "nineteen;" in line 2125, after the word "supplies," to strike out "one thousand eight hundred," and insert "two thousand;" and after the word "all," in line 2131, to strike out "ninety-seven thousand," and insert "one hundred and three thousand four hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For First Assistant Postmaster-General, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000, and while the office is held by the present incumbent, $500 additional; chief of salary and allowance division, $2,000; two clerks of class 4; twenty clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 3, to act as stenographer and department telegraph operator; six clerks of sengers; superintendent division post-office supplies, $2,000; one clerk of class 3; four clerks of class 1; two clerks at $900 each; one clerk at $1,000; one assistant messenger; three laborers (for division of post-office supplies); superintendent of free delivery, $2,100; one clerk of class 4; one clerk of class 2; and one clerk of class 1 (office of superintendent of free delivery); in all, $103,460.

class 2; nineteen clerks of class 1; four clerks at $1,000 each; three assistant mes-

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for the office of "Third Assistant Postmaster-General," in line 2154, after the word "dollars," to strike out "seven" and insert "one chief of finance division, who shall give bond for the faithful discharge of his duties, $2,000; six;" so as to read:

For Third Assistant Postmaster-General, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000; chief of division of dead letters, $2,250; chief of division of postage-stamps, $2,250; one chief of finance division, who shall give bond for the faithful discharge of his duties, $2,000; six clerks of class 4.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a new office?

Mr. ALLISON. It is like most of these others, a division in the Post-Office Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has it been established by any previous law?

Mr. ALLISON. No. I move to insert after the word "bond" the words "in such amount as the Postmaster-General may determine."

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much money does he have in charge?

Mr. ALLISON. It varies from year to year; sometimes fifty, sixty, or eighty thousand dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would it not be better to say not less than a certain sum? It gives a pretty broad discretion to the Postmaster-General.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the usual form in this class of laws.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that is the usual form, I will not try to change it here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the same clause, in line 2157, after the word "four," to strike out "nineteen" and insert "twenty;" in line 2158, after the word "two," to strike out "forty-one" and insert "forty-two;" in line 2159, before "clerk," to strike out "nine" and insert "ten;" and in line 2165, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-seven" and insert "thirty-one;" so as to make the clause read:

For Third Assistant Postmaster General, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000; chief of division of dead letters, $2,250; chief of division of postage-stamps, $2,250; one chief of finance division, who shall give bond for the faithful discharge of his duties, $2,000; six clerks of class 4; twenty clerks of class 3; thirty clerks of class 2; forty-two clerks of class 1; ten clerks at $1,000 each; ten female clerks at $1,200 each; fifty-four female clerks at $900 each; six female clerks at $720 each; three assistant messengers; eight laborers; four female laborers at $480 each; in all, $231,980.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2170, after the word "two," to insert "one clerk of class 1;" and in line 2171, after the word "all," to strike out "fifteen thousand seven" and insert "sixteen thousand nine;" so as to make the clause read:

For superintendent of foreign mails, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; one clerk of class 4; three clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; two clerks at $1,000 each; one assistant messenger; in all, $16,920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2175, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" in line 2181, before "charwomen," to strike out "six" and insert "three;" and in line 2184, after the word "thousand," to strike out "three hundred and twenty" and insert "two hundred and eighty;" so as to make the clause read:

For Superintendent of the Money-Order System, $3,500; chief clerk, $2,000; six clerks of class 4; eight clerks of class 3; five clerks of class 2; ten clerks of class 1; two clerks at $1,000 each; five clerks at $900 each; one assistant messenger; one engineer, $1,000; two firemen; four watchmen; three charwomen at $180 each; one female laborer, $480; and seven laborers; in all, $66,280.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the office of disbursing clerk and superintendent of Post-Office Department building, in line 2218, to reduce the number of charwomen from "fifteen" to "ten," and in line 2219 to decrease the total appropriation for that office from $44,920 to $44,020.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations "for contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department," in line 2224, to reduce the appropriation for "fuel, and for repairs to engines, boilers, and heating apparatus" from $7,200 to $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2225, to reduce the appropriation "for gas" from $5,600 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2226, to reduce the appropriation for "plumbing and gas-fixtures" from $3,700 to $3,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2227, to reduce the appropriation for "telegraphing" from $5,900 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2228, to reduce the appropriation for "painting" from $4,700 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2229, to reduce the appropriation for "carpets" from $5,900 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to reduce the appropriation for "furniture," in line 2229, from $6,200 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2232, to reduce the appropriation for "hardware" from $1,700 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2233, to increase the appropriation for "miscellaneous items" from $12,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2234, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation "for contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department" from $63,400 to $61,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Office of the Attorney-General," in line 2273, to strike out "two firemen" and insert "one fireman."

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the chairman if the engineers of the other Departments are not put at $1,200 each. This is $1,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I know several of them are.

Mr. LOGAN. And in most cases they have an assistant engineer. In this Department there is one engineer but no assistant. It seems to me his salary should be put at $1,200.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the Senator pass that for a moment.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The building is a small one.

Mr. LOGAN. I should rather have the amendment as to the number of firemen passed by. I think there ought to be two firemen there. The engineer's salary ought to be raised; and one fireman can not perform the duty of fireman and engineer. I ask that the amendment be non-concurred in. There ought to be two firemen anyhow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment striking out "two firemen" and inserting "one fireman."

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, in line 2273, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Attorney-General, Solicitor-General, and the clerks and employés in the office from $110,310 to $109,590.

Mr. ALLISON. The footing should now be left as it is and the amendment non-concurred in.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, in line 2291, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one night watchman" and insert "two watchmen at;" in line 2292, after the word "dollars," to insert "each;" in the same line, after "each," to strike out "one fireman" and insert "two firemen at;" in line 2293, after "dollars," insert "each;" in line 2294, before "laborers," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" before "assistant," in line 2295, to strike out "six" and insert "seven;" and in line 2296, after the word "all," to strike out "eight thousand four hundred" and insert "eleven thousand and forty;" so as to read:

For the following force necessary for the care and protection of the courthouse in the District of Columbia, who shall be under the direction of the United States marshal of the District of Columbia: One engineer, $1,200; two watchmen at $720 each; two firemen at $720 each; four laborers at $480 each; seven assistant messengers at $720 each; in all, $11,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the same clause, after the word "dollars," in line 2297, to insert:

And for the like force for the same purpose, for the balance of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, $3,680.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after "section 2," to insert:

That the Secretaries respectively of the Departments of State, of the Treasury, War, Navy, and of the Interior, and the Attorney-General, are authorized to make requisitions upon the Postmaster-General for the necessary amount of official postage-stamps for the use of their Departments, not exceeding the amount stated in the estimates submitted to Congress; and upon presentation of proper vouchers therefor at the Treasury the amount thereof shall be credited to the appropriation for the service of the Post-Office Department for the same fiscal year. And.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the Secretaries respectively of the Departments of State of the Treasury, War, Navy, and of the Interior, and the Attorney-General, are authorized to make requisitions upon the Postmaster-General for the necessary amount of official postage-stamps for the use of their Departments, not exceeding the amount stated in the estimates submitted to Congress; and upon presentation of proper vouchers therefor at the Treasury, the amount thereof shall be credited to the appropriation for the service of the Post-Office Department for the same fiscal year. And it shall be the duty of the respective Departments to inclose to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, in all official communications requiring answers, or to be forwarded to others, penalty envelopes addressed as far as practicable, for forwarding or answering such official correspondence.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is legislation, I submit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the point of order made?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is sustained.

Mr. MORGAN. A part of that may be legislation, but a part of it certainly is not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole taken together is.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no point of order on this. This is not legislation in any sense. It simply provides for a method of official correspondence instead of appropriating money, and it has been in every appropriation bill for the last five years. The House left out what we have inserted in italics, but inserted another provision which is entirely new. We merely inserted what has been in every appropriation bill since we have been in the habit of using official stamps.

Mr. INGALLS. How does it save the appropriation of money?

Mr. ALLISON. If the Departments are not permitted to use official stamps, of course we must appropriate money to enable them to buy stamps.

Mr. INGALLS. We provide penalty-envelopes.

Mr. ALLISON. The penalty-envelope provision is imperfect and incomplete. Of course if the Senator wishes to make a new departure and supply the penalty-envelopes and do away entirely with official postage-stamps, that is another thing. That is new legislation which I do not object to at the proper time and place, but until we have changed the law in reference to this matter we must of course either provide that these Departments may have official stamps or appropriate money in order that they may buy stamps.

Mr. INGALLS. I receive communications in penalty envelopes every day.

Mr. ALLISON. So do I.

Mr. INGALLS. From the Pension Office and every Department.

Mr. ALLISON. They use them every day.

Mr. INGALLS. What, then, is the necessity of having official postage-stamps?

Mr. ALLISON. There are a great many reasons why you must have official postage-stamps for the transaction of business in many of the Departments. We went all over that last year. Take courts-martial; it is impossible to transmit court-martial records from a far-distant post to the War Department in any envelope you can supply.

Mr. INGALLS. Why not as well do that as to put a little piece of colored paper on one corner? Why not?

Mr. ALLISON. I am not to be interrogated in that way in reference to it. I know it is not as convenient. We had that up here and debated it two or three hours and perhaps two or three days at the last session. I had then a letter from the Secretary of War and a letter from the Secretary of the Interior and other Cabinet officers saying that these stamps were more convenient and that there was no more danger of fraud under them than under the penalty envelopes. Of course if the Senate wants to raise that question and go into a debate upon the relative merits of this plan and abolishing official stamps, so be it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not. I merely raise the point of order, which I think ends it.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator wants to leave all these Departments without any appropriation for the purpose of carrying on their ordinary operations, so be it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So be it; I raise the point of order.

Mr. DAWES. What is the point of order?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That it is legislation.

Mr. DAWES. Why is it legislation to appropriate for these stamps?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does not appropriate; it commands certain things to be done as a specific fact.

Mr. HALE. That is only the form of doing it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Only the form of a law.

Mr. ALLISON. Another method of appropriating money—and it has been done in every appropriation bill for five years.

Mr. MORGAN. In the last legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act the second section read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretaries, respectively, of the Departments of State, of the Treasury, War, Navy, and of the Interior, and the Attorney-General, are authorized to make requisitions upon the Postmaster-General for the necessary amount of official postage-stamps for the use of their Departments, not exceeding the amount stated in the estimates submitted to Congress; and upon presentation of proper vouchers therefor at the Treasury the amount thereof shall be credited to the appropriation for the service of the Post-Office Department for the same fiscal year.

That is precisely the act which the committee have incorporated in this amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not make this any the less law.

Mr. ALLISON. But it is necessary.

Mr. MORGAN. Therefore it is not new legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is a continuing law, that is read from the statute-book; it would last, and need not be repeated every year. There is not a word confining it to the particular year. If that is the law on the statute-book now, what is the use of repeating it?

Mr. MORGAN. It is necessary, I suppose, to renew the authority annually for the getting of these stamps.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see why.

Mr. MORGAN. The committee have added that statute as it exists to the text as sent by the House, which read as follows:

It shall be the duty of the respective Departments to inclose to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, in all official communications requiring answers, or to be forwarded to others, penalty envelopes addressed as far as practicable, for forwarding or answering such official correspondence.

That portion of it in one sense is new; but I understand that that part of the bill which is sent to us from the House was really taken from existing statutes.

Mr. ALLISON. No; the part that is sent to us from the House is entirely new.

Mr. MORGAN. In its application to Members of Congress and Delegates?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; in its application to Members of Congress and Delegates.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, let me ask, if that be so, how it is, as stated by the Senator from Kansas, that the Departments have been inclosing to Senators and to others envelopes for the purpose of sending off official correspondence to their friends?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Because they violate the law.

Mr. ALLISON. They do it under a ruling of the Attorney-General, I believe, that they were authorized to do it.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the interpretation of the Department that that is according to law?

Mr. CONGER. No, these envelopes are addressed to the parties in pension cases, where they inquire through members in regard to their cases. An answer is prepared directed to the applicant, and it is merely sent to members that they may see the reports which are sent, to inform the member. Each is sent unsealed, to inform the member of what the office communicate to the pensioner or claimant.

Mr. MORGAN. And the only change made here is that the envelopes may be sent to members of Congress without the address of that party.

Mr. HOAR. May I inquire what is the pending question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order.

Mr. HOAR. Has anybody taken an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. ALLISON. Has there been a ruling?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The opinion of the Chair is that if there is any necessity of inserting this provision at all it is new legislation.

Mr. CONGER. But the last clause of it makes the usual appropriation which has been made every year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Here is the new legislation.

That the Secretaries, respectively, of the Departments of State, of the Treasury, War, Navy, and of the Interior, and the Attorney-General, are authorized to make requisitions upon the Postmaster-General for the necessary amount of official postage-stamps for the use of their Departments, not exceeding the amount stated in the estimates submitted to Congress.

That is new legislation, unless it is the law now, and if it is the law now there is no necessity of repeating it.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Chair will not rule upon that too hastily. I agree with the Senator from Ohio that this is not absolutely necessary; but we were somewhat misled, if I may use that expression, from the fact that it has been repeated year after year, and we thought for safety it was better to continue it. Now, Mr. President, I move to strike out the rest of the clause, that going out.

Mr. LAPHAM. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that it is necessary because it provides that whatever the expenses shall be it shall be paid out of the appropriations for the Post-Office Department. That makes an appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. It says "for the same fiscal year," and that being the old law, it would be continuing I think.

Mr. MORGAN. But that is not a permanent appropriation. It is an appropriation from year to year. This is not among the permanent appropriations, and if this clause is stricken out there will be no appropriation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is entirely mistaken, I think.

Mr. MORGAN. It is impossible I can be mistaken, because the bill itself is a bill for an annual appropriation and not for a permanent appropriation. We have two classes of appropriations, one of which is made by law permanent and the other annual.

Mr. SHERMAN. These stamps are all printed at the Government office.

Mr. ALLISON. No; they are not printed at the Government office, but they cost very little. The whole supply does not exceed $70 per annum.

Mr. MORGAN. It makes no difference what the cost may be, there must be some appropriation to cover it.

Mr. SHERMAN. They are covered.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no appropriation here for the stamps.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is merely a question of bookkeeping.

Mr. ALLISON. It is merely a question of requisition. I do not think it is necessary myself after looking at it carefully, and we are very particular now about our appropriation bills. I think probably it had better go out; and I move to strike out the rest of the clause.

Mr. COCKRELL. The other ought to go out.

Mr. HARRIS. Down to and including line 16.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to strike out the section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, to strike out section 4 in the following words:

SEC. 4. That hereafter it shall be the duty of the heads of the several Executive Departments, in the interest of the public service, to require of all clerks and other employés, of whatever grade or class, in their respective Departments, such hours of labor as may be deemed necessary for the proper dispatch of the public business, the same, however, not to be less than from the hours of 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. each day, except Sundays and days declared public holidays by law or executive order, from the 1st day of October to the 1st day of April, and from the hours of 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. from the 1st day of April to the 1st day of October in each year; and all absence from the Departments on the part of said clerks or other employés in excess of such leave of absence as may be granted by the heads thereof, which shall not exceed thirty days in any one year, except in case of sickness, shall be without pay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out section 5 in the following words:

SEC. 5. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I have one or two amendments I desire to offer. On page 54, line 1300——

Mr. HOAR. I desire to remind the Senator from Iowa that there was an amendment passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On page 74.

Mr. ALLISON. I will come to that in a moment. On page 54, line 1300, after the word "commission" a comma should be inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

Mr. ALLISON. I also ask on page 81 a transposition. I desire to strike out on page 81, from line 1975 to 1977, these words:

For the pay of six watchmen employed on the Capitol grounds, at $720 each.

I desire to transfer that provision to the page relating to the Capitol police, so that these watchmen may be under the Capitol police force.

Mr. COCKRELL. With the distinct understanding that there is to be no increase of salary at this or any subsequent session by reason of that change.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; absolutely on that condition.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope if that change is made that we shall not have any application to increase these salaries. If it is a dodge to get them where the salaries can be leveled up, I hope it will never be done.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree with the Senator from Missouri in reference to that. The object is to place these watchmen under the control of the Capitol police; they are now under the control of the Architect of the Capitol. He thinks it would be much better for the service to have them under one control.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the transposition?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I desire to ask a question. Does that change in any way the direction or appointment of the police? Does it take it from one party and transfer it to another?

Mr. ALLISON. From one person to another, does the Senator mean? I think these six watchmen are now appointed by the Architect of the Capitol. Of course if they are transferred to the clause under the Capitol police they will then be appointed by the police board, so called, which consists of the Architect of the Capitol, the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the Senator to say it is agreeable to the Architect of the Capitol?

Mr. ALLISON. It is agreeable to the Architect of the Capitol. He made the request of me, as also did our Sergeant-at-Arms.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The transposition will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON, The footings should be changed accordingly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will make these changes in the two items.

Mr. ALLISON. The footing should be increased in one clause and decreased in the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Consent is given that the Secretary may make the footings correspond.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say a word about that. I am not going to object to it, but I wish to state what will be the effect of this. A number of communications have been sent to us making application for the increase of watchmen everywhere. I called attention to the little squares and patches for which watchmen were provided. We are asked by every Department for more watchmen to stand at their doors. They stand there eight hours and do not do a thing that I know of, and it seems to be considered very hard on them. We have to give them what they want and replace them every eight hours. It seems a watchman can not stand ten or twelve hours. They do not do a thing. The car-drivers work twelve or fifteen hours a day for far less pay than these watchmen get. It is simply an immense hardship for these watchmen to stand and do nothing eight hours out of the twenty-four. The number of watchmen we have all about these buildings is something amazing. I do not believe we can help it now, but I hope something will be done hereafter.

Mr. ALLISON. This amendment does not increase the salary or pay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The change is made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The clause is to come in on line 173, page 8, after "each," I understand. Now, I wish to point out to the Senate what an inconsistency there will exist in the pay of fourteen watchmen. You have got fourteen watchmen of equal grade and rank, and equal power of duty and service of every kind; eight of them you give $900 each to, six of them you give $720 each to. How can you stand on that consistently, the same sort of men, the same duties?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Next year they will all be at $900.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what I am afraid of.

Mr. COCKRELL. I dissent from what my colleagues of the committee say. An increase of compensation will not be made them by my consent, and I have put it on record that this is with the distinct understanding that they shall not be increased. If the compensation is to be increased I shall object to the transposition.

Mr. ALLISON. The watchmen now provided for on page 8 are watchmen about the Capitol; the six watchmen provided for in the clause I have asked to have transposed are watchmen on the Capitol grounds, and they now are under the supervision of the Architect of the Capitol. When this matter was suggested to the committee we objected on the ground that it would have a tendency to increase the pay, and it was stated that that would not be done or proposed.

Mr. INGALLS. Who stated that?

Mr. ALLISON. The Architect of the Capitol and the Sergeant-at-Arms; but I can not see how it will change the situation to transfer these six men from one part of this bill to another. That inequality exists now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Secretary read the clause put in on page 8?

The ACTING SECRETARY. After "each," at the end of line 173, insert:

And six watchmen employed on the Capitol grounds, at $720 each.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that agreed to?

The ACTING SECRETARY. And in line 174 strike out the footing "$36,600" and insert "$40,920."

Mr. COCKRELL. I think in view of all that has been said I shall raise the question of order that it is legislation to transfer the provision for these parties from one place to the other. If it is a dodge to get an increase of salary I object to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; then it all goes out.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go back where it was.

Mr. ALLISON. Let both paragraphs stand as they were before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the understanding.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I move, on page 91, line 2222, to strike out "nine" and insert "fifteen." This relates to the stationery and blank-books for the contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that moved by the committee?

Mr. ALLISON. That is moved not formally from the committee. I have summoned some members who examined the question with me and they agreed that I should move it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator moves it from the committee it is in order; but if not, it is not. I do not ask a formal meeting of the committee, only if the committee wishes it to be done.

Mr. ALLISON. As far as I have been able to consult with the committee I understand the committee agree to it. It is done on the request of the Postmaster-General, whose letter I have here; and it is done under a decision of that Department in relation to penalty envelopes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator indicate the amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. On page 91, line 2222, strike out "9" and insert "15;" so as to read "$15,000;" "it having been decided," says the First Assistant Postmaster General, "that penalty envelopes heretofore furnished out of the appropriation for stamped envelopes by the Third Assistant Postmaster-General shall with the beginning of the next fiscal year be supplied out of the appropriation for stationery."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have you diminished the stamped-envelope appropriation accordingly?

Mr. ALLISON. The stamped-envelope appropriation is in the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the trouble we are going to get into is that we increase this sum by $6,000 for stationery and blank-books, and for aught we know we are to leave the appropriation for stamped envelopes as before.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly; but the stamped envelopes are a very different thing. Stamped envelopes are furnished and paid for by the people who use them, and of course if the appropriation is $100,000 too much or $100,000 too little it does not make any difference to the Post-Office Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; but here is an appropriation for stationery and blank-books. Now, if I understand the communication from the First Assistant Postmaster-General correctly, he says they have decided to charge the stamped envelopes, the penalty envelopes, I suppose, or whatever they are, to the stationery account, and therefore it is necessary to increase the appropriation for stationery. Now, suppose they change their minds and conclude not to devote all the money to stationery? I do not make any point.

Mr. ALLISON. It is so late that I hope no point will be made about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The sum total of the clause will have to be changed.

Mr. ALLISON. Let $6,000 be added.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 2234 it is moved to strike out "$61,100" and insert "$67,100."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Do I understand that the former amendment increased the appropriation $6,000?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It did, for stationery and blank-books.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Was that the intention of the chairman?

Mr. ALLISON. The appropriation in this bill is $9,000 for stationery. The First Assistant Postmaster-General sent me a letter stating that it has been decided, I do not know by whom——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Determined by the Department, I suppose.

Mr. ALLISON. Determined that these stamps shall not be paid out of another appropriation from which it has been paid hitherto, but must be paid out of this appropriation; and hence it is essential to increase the amount to the extent of $6,000.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then I understand we appropriate $6,000 additional for either one or the other branch. It must be that too much that was formerly paid, and if you add $6,000 here it ought to be taken off elsewhere. I submit this to the chairman for his own consideration. I do not make any motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that I had not the opportunity of consulting with him. I received this matter so late that it could not be considered in full committee. I have given the Senate all the information I can.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. You have given the information and will be governed according to the circumstances.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment changing the footing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed there was an amendment on page 73 reserved as to the General Land Office.

Mr. MORGAN. On that part of the bill which was reserved I move to insert, in line 1783, after the word "thousand," "two hundred and fifty;" so as to read:

Chief clerk, $2,250.

The Secretary of the Interior estimated for $2,500. The Commissioner of the General Land Office says in his report:

The salary of the chief clerk is estimated at $2,500, an increase of $500. The chief clerk must be fully competent to take charge and control of the bureau at all times, and his other and proper duties being intricate, complex, and arduous, fully deserve the salary estimated for.

I have taken, however, $250 instead of $500, which the Secretary recommends, and move to increase it by that amount. That does not still bring it up to the pay of the chief clerks in some of the other Departments.

Mr. HOAR. I inquire if that is the estimate of the Department?

Mr. MORGAN. The estimate was $2,500, but I move to make it $2,250. I wish only to say that the chief clerk acts as assistant commissioner of the General Land Office; and is compelled in the absence of that officer to discharge all his duties really. More than that, his own duties are of a very intricate character requiring him to be master of the decisions and of the statutes in reference to public lands. He is not only one of the most important officers of that bureau, but his labors are very heavy. I hope that the Senate will agree to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. Now I move, in line 1786, to strike out "three" and insert "eleven," and also in line 1788 to strike out "thirty-four" and insert "twenty-six." The effect of that will be merely to move eight of the clerks of class 4 into the class preceding it; that is of principal clerks; they are all of them chiefs of division. On that subject the Commissioner says as follows:

I would call attention to the unnecessary distinction maintained in the classification of the principal clerks of this office. Originally there were but three, namely, of public lands, of surveys, and of private land claims. The early statutes provided for the appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of these "three principal clerks" for the above respective subdivisions of the General Land Office. At this period there was but one method provided for the disposal of the public lands—that of cash sale. Since then additional methods have been adopted, and the general business of the office has also increased with the growth of the country. There are now ten divisions besides that of the recorder, each of which is charged with the work of an important branch of the business of the Land Department.

There is no difference in the character of the duties and responsibilities of the chiefs of these divisions. The services of all are of equal dignity and importance; the degree of ability and experience required is the same in each case, and the compensation is uniform.

My examination of that department, in connection with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] and other Senators here, including the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL], satisfied me that this change was not only a just one to make, but that it was essential for the proper regulation of that bureau, and the committee were entirely of that opinion, and so are the Committee on Public Lands. I therefore hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a question that I feel a delicacy about discussing. The effect of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is to increase the compensation of eleven of these clerks.

Mr. MORGAN. Very slightly.

Mr. ALLISON. From $1,800 to $2,000.

Mr. MORGAN. Only $200 apiece.

Mr. ALLISON. The effect is further to revise the present legal status of the organization of the Land Office. It is a pretty great increase, and I want to know from the Senator from Alabama if he proposes to make any further amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Not at all.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to say that we increased the salary of the chief clerk of the Government Printing Office from $2,000 to $2,400. Everywhere there have been increases, in all departments of the Government except here. If this had not been done I would not be here to ask for it to be done here; but justice should be done these men who are doing the work the Senator from Alabama has so fully described. It ought to have its right measure of recognition.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to correct the Senator from Kansas in one respect. We have made but very few changes in this bill, but we have made just enough to make it rather awkward for me to make points of order on the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I insist on it on account of the merits of the proposition. Here are three of these chiefs of division who get $2,000, as they have for a great many years. There are eight others who perform exactly the same duties and have exactly the same responsibilities who get $1,800. It is a matter of justice and equality to the kind of labors and the responsibilities of the heads of the divisions.

I wish to say one more word to the Senate about it. We have been losing men from the Land Office year after year who have gone there and become accomplished in the business of the Land Office, who have retired into lucrative practice from the Departments, and we are continually having to educate new men because the compensation that they get there is not sufficient to attract men of the ability and character that is necessary in this Department, and it is very bad policy for us to keep the salary down to $1,800 a year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The thirty-four clerks of class 4 ought to be reduced now to twenty-six, in line 1788.

Mr. MORGAN. That was part of the amendment I offered.

Mr. ALLISON. The footings should be made to correspond with these changes.

Mr. HOAR. The Secretary will arrange the footings.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be done, no objection being made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on the Library to offer two amendments to this bill, on page 17, after line 386. They are the same amendments that were reported and adopted unanimously at the last session, and I am directed again to offer them. The first is:

To enable the Joint Committee on the Library to purchase from the Marquis de Rochambeau the military papers, maps, and letter-books of the Count de Rochambeau, general in the French army in America, $20,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I raise the question of order on that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say that there can be no question of order, because this is reported from the Committee on the Library; it has been sent to the Committee on Appropriations, and all the forms required by the rules have been observed.

Mr. COCKRELL. It does not properly belong to this bill; it ought to go on the sundry civil bill, if any.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say to the Senator that I consulted the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on the Library have no amendments to offer but these two, and this is the clause where appropriations for the Library are properly made. They more properly come here than they would on the sundry civil bill. I prefer, therefore, to offer them here. All the other purchases of books for the Library, and all the other provisions about the Library are contained in this bill, and this is the proper place for the provision.

Mr. ALLISON. I did say to the Senator from Ohio that I was in favor of these two amendments. We put them on the sundry civil bill last year, but they were stricken off in the House. I think still the sundry civil bill is the proper place for them, but I shall make no point on that.

Mr. SHERMAN. By putting them here we give the House and its committees more time to consider them. If there is anything objectionable about them, I do not want them adopted. I prefer to have them in such form that the House can fairly consider them. I do not want them brought in in the hurry-scurry at the end of the session.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have been listening to see if the distinguished Senator from Kansas would not have a few words to say about this.

Mr. INGALLS. I think inasmuch as we have got to buy these papers we had better have them now. They will get more valuable as they get older. We may have to pay $100,000 for them in a few years.

Mr. COCKRELL. In view of that fact and the pertinacity with which it is pressed, I will withdraw the point of order if we can save something by it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now I offer an amendment for the purchase of the papers of the late Matthew H. Carpenter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Supreme Court records?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Supreme Court records. It has been very strongly commended by the Supreme Court. It is—

To enable the Librarian of Congress, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, to purchase the set of records and briefs in cases in the Supreme Court of the United States belonging to the estate of the late Matthew H. Carpenter, the sum of $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to insert, after the word "commerce," page 11, line 234:

Clerk to the Committee on Indian Affairs and clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. And the word "and" after "Agriculture," in line 234, should be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to offer the following amendment on page 77, at the end of line 1862:

Any person who falsely represents himself to be an officer, agent, or employé of the Pension Bureau of the Interior Department, or in such assumed character pretends or assumes to act and perform or does perform in such assumed character any duty or act belonging to such officer, agent, or employé so falsely personated, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000, or be imprisoned for a period not more than two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is legislation.

Mr. ALLISON. One moment. If the Senator objects I shall withdraw it.

The Commissioner of Pensions states to the committee that a great many persons are representing themselves as the agents and employés of the Pension Office who are not such agents or employés, thus imposing on a great many innocent people. It is important to the protection of the proper employés of the office that this provision should become a law. He does not see any other way than to put it on this appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Some law of this kind undoubtedly ought to be passed; but it is the very trouble that exists on all appropriation bills that almost all of our legislation is empirical; it is special; it does not cover the whole class of subjects of the same kind that it ought to cover. Now, there ought to be a law punishing every person who falsely personates any officer or employé of the United States for the purpose of committing any wrong or fraud upon anybody; that is plain enough; and if the Committee on Pensions will report such a bill on Monday or any other day, they can pass any such bill that is general, or if any other committee will do it, applying to everybody, all alike, everywhere, in every Department—because people do it in the Internal-Revenue and in the Department of Justice, I have heard sometimes—it can pass by unanimous consent in two minutes, I have no doubt. But this just illustrates the narrowness of our legislation on appropriation bills. Therefore I make the point of order.

Mr. COCKRELL. And illustrates the position of the Senator from Vermont. When we wanted to make the provision of his bill, the Utah bill, the polygamy bill, applicable to all the Territories and make a general law, he wanted it specific.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does not illustrate that, Mr. President, but I will not waste the time of the Senate in reply.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator in charge of this bill not to raise the point of order while I move an amendment. In line 115, I move, after the word "at," to strike out "one thousand" and insert "fourteen hundred;" so as to read:

For eight skilled laborers at $1,400 each.

I will state the reason why that amendment should be made. I understand these eight skilled laborers are performing all the duties of messengers to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is it? Let it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The proposed amendment is in line 115, page 6, to strike out "one thousand" and insert "fourteen hundred;" so as to read:

For eight skilled laborers at $1,400 each.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. There was an amendment proposed on page 56 to strike out the clause repealing the statute relating to an Assistant Secretary of War and an Assistant Secretary of the Navy. As the amendment did not prevail before, I renew it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to strike out a proviso which will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. On page 56, commencing at line 1352, it is moved to strike out:

Provided, That the provisions of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883," approved August 5, 1882, which authorized the appointment of an Assistant Secretary of War and an Assistant Secretary of the Navy, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. CONGER. Is that subject to a point of order? It repeals a law.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a House provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in the House bill sent here.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire a vote on striking it out.

Mr. VOORHEES. Allow me to inquire if the existing law provides for an Assistant Secretary of the Navy and an Assistant Secretary of War, and this is a provision repealing that law?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; that is it. No appointment has been made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We ought to strike it out, if we follow what we have been doing.

Mr. BECK. Last year the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy by arguments very strong and very persuasive showed us the necessity of their having the right to have an Assistant Secretary of War and an Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. VOORHEES. Why do they not have them?

Mr. BECK. They claim that they have not been able to ascertain yet the persons they are willing to appoint in these places, as I understand; and why we should repeal a law that we passed last year for good reasons is, I confess, the trouble I have. The Secretary of War is a civilian; the Secretary of the Navy is a civilian. They have an organized body of men under them standing up to their own class. The soldiers are banded together; the sailors are banded together; they regard the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy as outside men and enemies of their class. There are many things done that a Secretary has to trust to some one in his absence that ought not to be done, and that he ought to have some supervision of. He should have a confidential adviser to see that his Department is worked properly. That was the main idea.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let me ask the Senator from Kentucky if there is anything in the law that prevents them having the assistance of their own class?

Mr. BECK. There is now, but this is to repeal it. We want to give them a chance.

Mr. VOORHEES. But does the law as it stands now, recently put in, provide that an Assistant Secretary of the Navy or Assistant Secretary of War shall be appointed from any given class of persons?

Mr. BECK. I think not, nor is the appointment of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy from any particular class; but they are civilians.

Mr. VOORHEES. Then why have not the appointments been filled if they are necessary? If there is no limitation, why should not the offices have been filled?

Mr. BECK. I know of no other reason except that they have not been able, as they say, to find a person that they are willing to appoint. No money is spent, but a case might arise where it might become important in consequence of sickness or long continued absence of either Secretary that some one should be there who was a friend of the Secretary who should see that his work went on. If nobody is appointed, no money will be spent and no harm done. I think as we only passed the law last year, we might as well let it stand without repealing it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I voted in Committee of the Whole in favor, I think, of striking out the clause repealing the law, but I wanted to hear what reason there was for a law of that kind, if it had not been found necessary to act under it and make the appointment. I am not clear in my mind now whether I voted right or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on striking out the clause.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1582, page 65, I move to strike out "will" and insert "shall;" so as to read:

Said officer shall have charge of said building, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move on page 74, after line 1800, to add "to be immediately available;" so as to read:

And the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated for clerical force for the sole purpose of disposing of the accumulated work in the General Land Office, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, to be immediately available.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object to that, but there is no need of doing it, because it can not go into operation until the 1st of July.

Mr. ALLISON. After the 1st of July no appointment can be made except under the civil-service law, but I do not understand that the civil-service law is to wait until the 1st of July to take effect.

Mr. HOAR. This would require these men to get up their scheme of examination instantly; it would require them to be ready at once.

Mr. PLUMB. To get so much of it as is necessary to start the machine in the Interior Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from Kansas will not insist on that.

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw the amendment.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 7623) relative to the Southern exposition to be held in the city of Louisville, State of Kentucky, in the year 1883; and

A bill (H. R. 3552) to remove the legal and political disabilities of Anderson Merchant, now of New York, formerly of Virginia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 1078) to authorize the Seneca Nation of Indians of the State of New York to grant title to lands for cemetery purposes;

A bill (H. R. 2013) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Gallus Kirchner;

A bill (H. R. 2871) to provide for the extension of the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway; and

A bill (H. R. 5387) providing for the pay of Rear-Admiral Roger N. Stembel.

UTAH COMMISSIONERS' REPORT.

Mr. BROWN. I offer a resolution to which I suppose there will be no objection:

Resolved, That the Public Printer is instructed to print immediately for the use of the Senate 300 copies of the report and the "rules and regulations" of the Utah commissioners, including the oaths prescribed for voters and office-holders in said Territory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That ought to be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred to that committee.

Mr. BROWN. I ask that it be not referred, because I want to get the printing done so that I can have the document before we finally act on the Utah bill. I have asked the chairman of the committee, and he has told me if I could find them I should have the papers. I have been told they are in the office of the Secretary of the Interior. I telegraphed him yesterday and got no reply. I telegraphed him again today, and he informs me that he has had his clerks copying the papers. It is not exactly certain when we can get them. I suppose each Senator would like to see them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is perfectly right. There is no objection to the printing, but I am a little afraid that it will turn out that this has not been regularly submitted to Congress in such a way as to authorize its being printed as a public document in the possession of the Senate. It may be that it is; but to guard against the possibility of tangling up the accounts and making delay I made that suggestion; but I shall not insist on it.

Mr. BROWN. I am very anxious to have the document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLAIR asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 2506) to prevent false personations of officers, agents, and employés of the Pension Bureau; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO A BILL.

Mr. GARLAND, Mr. MAHONE, and Mr. MCDILL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3552) to remove the legal and political disabilities of Anderson Merchant, now of New York, formerly of Virginia, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ALLOWANCE OF SUPPLY CLAIMS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7321) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not oppose the motion of my friend from Wisconsin because he moves to take up an appropriation bill, otherwise I should ask the Senate to proceed to finish the Utah bill. As soon as the appropriation bill is through with, I shall endeavor to get the floor to make that motion. I was also about to move an executive session for a moment, but I give away.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I have moved that the bill be taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After nine minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and, on motion of Mr. EDMUNDS (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.), the Senate adjourned to meet on Monday at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 24, 1883.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUCK. I ask unanimous consent to call up from the House Calendar House bill No. 7115.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees under the special rule adopted yesterday. The Chair will commence the call at the head of the list of committees.

Mr. PAGE. I suggest that as this rule was only adopted yesterday a great many of the committees have not since had a meeting, and therefore may not be prepared this morning to present any measure under this rule. Thus they may lose their place.

The SPEAKER. As soon as the first call of the committees is completed they will be called again.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to inquire whether the regular order is not the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, upon which at the adjournment yesterday the previous question was operating, and which I presume would come over as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the situation of that bill. At the time of the adjournment last evening the previous question was operating—not upon the passage of the bill, but upon the engrossment and third reading, so that on reaching that stage the previous question will be exhausted. A strict ruling, in the opinion of the Chair, would require the House to proceed now with the consideration of the bill up to the third reading, when it would have to be laid aside and the regular order proceeded with.

Mr. ATKINS. No doubt the Chair is correct; but that is a very strict ruling.

The SPEAKER. That has been the ruling heretofore. The Chair thought that the whole subject had better come up together. The Chair, under the new rule, will call first the Committee on Elections. [A pause.] The next committee is the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. KELLEY. I have here a bill from the Committee on Ways and Means, House bill No. 7597, to admit free of duty articles intended for the national mining and industrial exposition to be held at Denver, in the State of Colorado. I will state that this bill is identical in form with one passed last year.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that under the "Pound rule" no bill can be called up for consideration except such as have been reported and the reports printed, or Senate bills identical with such House bills.

ADULTERATION OF TEA.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to call up a bill (H. R. No. 7486) to prevent the importation of adulterated and spurious teas. I was instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to move to suspend the rules for the passage of this bill——

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman been instructed to call the bill up under this rule? That is the only inquiry the Chair can make.

Mr. RANDALL. This rule was only adopted yesterday. The Committee on Ways and Means instructed me some time since to move a suspension of the rules for the passage of this bill, but by a subsequent vote gave a preference to the bill to reduce internal revenue, which was presented by the committee last Monday. The committee has had no meeting since the adoption yesterday of the new rule; but in my personal intercourse with members of the committee I have found no one to object to this.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman states that he has been authorized by the committee to call the bill up——

Mr. RANDALL. I have not been authorized at any formal meeting to bring the bill up under this particular rule.

Mr. DUNNELL. The committee has not been in session since the adoption of the rule.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman has been authorized to report the bill and bring it before the House.

The SPEAKER. The only question which the Chair regards himself as bound to put is whether the gentleman is authorized to call the bill up under this rule?

Mr. DUNNELL. The committee has had no meeting since the "Pound rule" was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not enter into any controversy. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania states that he is authorized to call this bill up——

Mr. RANDALL. I did not say that the committee had authorized this bill to be called up under this particular rule. I said the committee had had no meeting since the adoption of the rule; but I was authorized to use every parliamentary advantage to secure the passage of this bill.

Mr. KELLEY. That is certainly the case.

The SPEAKER. If that be the instruction of the committee, the Chair will admit the bill.

Mr. KELLEY. That was unquestionably the case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will send up the bill.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. It is important we should understand the operation of this rule. Is it understood that if a majority of the committee without a formal meeting authorize a bill to be called up under this rule it will be received?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be governed by the statement of the gentleman making the proposition. If he states that he is authorized by the committee to call up the bill under this rule, the Chair will recognize him without entering into any controversy. The Chair understands the gentleman from Pennsylvania to state that he has been instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to call up this bill under any parliamentary proceeding of the House and have it considered. That instruction is broad enough in the opinion of the Chair to authorize the presentation of the bill at this time.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The gentleman also states that there has been no meeting of the committee since the adoption of the rule. I have no disposition to resist the presentation of the bill, I merely want to understand what is to be the practice.

Mr. RANDALL. There has been no meeting since the adoption of the rule, but the statement of the Chair as to the position of the case is correct.

The SPEAKER. Before the adoption of the rule, as the Chair understands, the committee instructed the gentleman from Pennsylvania to call this bill up under any rule of the House which might enable him to bring it up for consideration. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up for present consideration the bill which the Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 5387) providing for the pay of Rear-Admiral Roger N. Stembel.

It further announced the passage of the following bills, with amendments in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (H. R. 7314) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 7181) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

It further announced the adoption of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6957) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

It further announced the Senate insisted on its amendments to and agreed to the conference asked by the House on the bill (H. R. 7077) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, and had appointed as managers of said conference on its part Mr. LOGAN, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. RANSOM.

It further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments to and agreed to the conference asked by the House on the bill (H. R. 7191) making appropriation for fortifications and other works of defense and for the armament thereof for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, and had appointed as managers of said conference on its part Mr. DAWES, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. COCKRELL.

ADULTERATED AND SPURIOUS TEAS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, calls up under the rule for action at this time the bill (H. R. 7486) to prevent the importation of adulterated and spurious teas. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person or persons or corporation to import or bring into the United States any merchandise for sale as tea, adulterated with spurious leaf or with exhausted leaves, or which contains so great an admixture of chemicals or other deleterious substances as to make it unfit for use; and the importation of all such merchandise is hereby prohibited.

SEC. 2. That on making entry at the custom-house of all tea or merchandise described as tea imported into the United States, the importer or consignee shall give a bond to the collector of the port that such merchandise shall not be removed from warehouse until released by the custom-house authorities, who shall examine it with reference to its purity and fitness for consumption; and that for the purpose of such examination samples of each line in every invoice shall be submitted by the importer or consignee to the examiner, with his written statement that such samples represent the true quality of each and every part of the invoice, and accord with the specification therein contained; and in case the examiner has reason to believe that such samples do not represent the true quality of the invoice he shall make such further examination of the tea represented by the invoice, or any part thereof, as shall be necessary.

SEC. 3. That if, after an examination as provided in section 2, the tea is found by the examiner not to come within the prohibition of this act, a permit shall at once be granted to the importer or consignee declaring the tea free from control of the customs authorities; but if on examination such tea, or merchandise described as tea, is found, in the opinion of the examiner, to come within the prohibitions of this act, the importer or consignee shall be immediately notified, and the tea, or merchandise described as tea, so returned shall not be released by the custom-house, unless on a re-examination called for by the importer or consignee the return of the examiner shall be found erroneous: Provided, That should a portion of the invoice be passed by the examiner a permit shall be granted for that portion, and the remainder held for further examination, as provided in section 4.

SEC. 4. That in case of any dispute between the importer or consignee and the examiner the matter in dispute shall be referred for arbitration to a committee of three experts, one to be appointed by the collector, one by the importer, and the two to choose a third, and their decision shall be final; and if upon such final re-examination the tea shall be found to come within the prohibitions of this act the importer or consignee shall give a bond, with securities satisfactory to the collector, to export said tea, or merchandise described as tea, out of the limits of the United States, within a period of six months after such final re-examination; but if the same shall not have been exported within the time specified the collector at the expiration of that time shall cause the same to be destroyed.

SEC. 5. That the examination and appraisement herein provided for shall be made by a duly qualified appraiser of the port at which said tea is entered, and when entered at ports where there are no appraisers such examination and appraisement shall be made by the revenue officers to whom is committed the collection of duties, unless the Secretary of the Treasury shall otherwise direct.

SEC. 6. That leaves to which the term "exhausted" is applied in this act shall mean and include any tea which has been deprived of its proper quality, strength, or virtue by steeping, infusion, decoction, or other means.

SEC. 7. That teas actually on shipboard for shipment to the United States at the time of the passage of this act shall not be subject to the prohibition thereof.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the rule provide that the report shall be read before or after objection has been called for?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman desires the report can be read at this time.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish the report read in connection with the bill as well as the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the reading can not occupy longer than five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. It will not take that long.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7085) to prevent the importation of adulterated teas, beg leave to report as follows:

The object of the bill, as originally introduced, and as now reported, with amendments, is to prohibit by law and prevent the importation of spurious or adulterated teas. The necessity of such legislation as will fully protect the consumers of teas in this country against teas which have been deprived of their "proper quality, strength, or virtue by steeping, infusion, decoction, or other means," can not be questioned; but your committee was desirous of so framing the bill as to prevent any serious inconvenience by sudden changes in manner of trading to those engaged in the sale of tea in the United States.

To make sure on this point, the bill originally introduced by Mr. HARDENBERGH, of New Jersey, was submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, whose letter accompanies this report, wherein that officer gives his approval of the object in view.

The bill as reported has been examined by the executive committee of tea trade of New York city and the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, and likewise by others engaged in the tea trade in other sections, and meets with a unanimous indorsement as far as your committee is informed.

The Parliament of Great Britain enacted a law, which took effect on January 1, 1876, a copy of which law is annexed. Your committee therefore unanimously recommend the speedy enactment of the accompanying substitute for the bill H. R. 7085, herewith reported.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 15, 1883.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 8th instant, inclosing bill (H. R. 7085), to prevent the importation of adulterated teas, and requesting my opinion as to the "advisability of passing the bill."

The act provides for the re-exportation of tea found to be adulterated, or so far affected by chemicals as to be unfit and dangerous for use; or for its destruction if the tea shall not be re-exported within a specified time.

The provisions are similar in principle to the legislation already in existence relating to imported drugs, medicines, medicinal preparations, &c., found to be adulterated, or in any manner deteriorated, and inferior in strength and purity to the standard established by the United States, Edinburgh, London, French, and German pharmacopœias and dispensatories, and which therefore are "improper, unsafe, or dangerous to be used for medicinal purposes." Such articles may be re-exported, or, after the expiration of a certain time from the date of their importation, may be destroyed by the collector of customs.

The act upon the subject is to be found in the act of June 26, 1848 (9 Statutes at Large, page 237), reproduced as section 2935 and 2936, Revised Statutes; see also sections 2544, 2558, 2569, 2612, and 2611 of said Statutes.

The provisions of the bill are also analogous to those contained in the inclosed copy of a British act of Parliament (General Statutes, 38 Victoria, page 583) relating to adulterated and exhausted teas imported into Great Britain.

It is for the interest of the public to prevent the importation of adulterated or worthless articles to be consumed as food in the United States; and as it appears to be practicable to enforce the provisions of the bill, the Department, as at present advised, perceives no special objection to the passage of some such provisions as are contained in the bill.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY,
Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives.

[From General Statutes of Great Britain, 38 Victoria, 583.]

From and after the 1st day of January, 1876, all tea imported as merchandise into and landed at any port in Great Britain or Ireland shall be subject to examination by persons to be appointed by the commissioners of customs, subject to the approval of the treasury, for the inspection and analysis thereof, for which purpose samples may, when deemed necessary by such inspectors, be taken and with all convenient speed be examined by the analysts to be so appointed; and if upon such analysis the same shall be found to be mixed with other substances or exhausted tea, the same shall not be delivered unless with the sanction of the said commissioners, and on such terms and conditions as they shall see fit to direct, either for home consumption or for use as ship stores or for exportation; but if on such inspection and analysis it shall appear that such tea is in the opinion of the analyst unfit for human food, the same shall be forfeited and destroyed or otherwise disposed of in such manner as the said commissioners may direct.

Tea to which the term "exhausted" is applied in this act shall mean and include any tea which has been deprived of its proper quality, strength, or virtue by steeping, infusion, decoction, or other means.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEACH. I object.

The SPEAKER. A sufficient number has not objected, and therefore the bill under the rule is before the House at this time for consideration.

Mr. BEACH. I desire to be heard in opposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is first entitled to be heard for five minutes in support of the proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, I have one or two amendments which since the bill was reported have met the approval of the Committee on Ways and Means, and when those amendments are presented they will at once, I believe, obviate all possible objection on the part of one or two firms engaged in the tea trade in New York city to the bill.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Speaker, the other day when unanimous consent was asked on this bill I felt it my duty to object. I objected, not because I was opposed to the end sought by the bill, but because it was in the nature of special and hasty legislation.

I believed then and I believe now that there are features connected with this proposition which should undergo thorough discussion.

When this subject of adulterations was first agitated in England about thirty years ago it gave rise to a commission created by Parliament. This commission prosecuted its work vigorously for two sessions before it was able to bring in a bill. Here the Ways and Means Committee hatch out a bill in a few hours, ask unanimous consent for its passage, even before the report is printed; and that failing, they now seek to pass it in this summary way.

Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to the principle of this bill. I am heartily in favor of it. I believe that Congress has the right, and it is its duty, to stop the importation of all adulterated articles. Such articles are mala in se, and like spurious coin should be suppressed by law. The amount of damage done to the health and pocket of the consumer by the sale of adulterated goods is difficult to estimate. The evil is growing greater and greater every day. Congress has not been asleep to the necessity of checking it. In the Forty-fifth, in the Forty-sixth, and in the present Congress bills have been introduced to stop the manufacture and sale of adulterated food and drink. These bills have made but little progress on account of the doubt that exists as to the constitutional right of Congress to interfere with State matters. A bill was introduced at the last session by my honored colleague [Mr. FLOWER] of New York, which went to the Committee on Commerce. That committee made a report and presented a substituted bill, which in my opinion is far better than the pending one. This report calls attention to numerous instances of adulterations and in passing says (see page 3):

It is useless to increase the number of these samples. It is believed by persons who have examined this subject for the past five years that a large proportion of the substances shipped from the Old World to the New, and which enter so largely into the manufacturing of the foods of this country, are adulterated and impure. It is easy for any one to see that this state of things must affect the general health of our communities.

We have already legislated against the importation of foreign adulterated drugs. The provisions are to be found in the Revised Statutes, sections 293 et seq.

But, Mr. Speaker, I can not attempt to discuss this matter in the limited time at my disposal. I rose simply to urge my objections to the bill in its present shape. It is of special application, relating solely to teas. I would, if the opportunity to amend was accorded, make it of universal application, so as to cover spices, pepper, mustard, coffees, and sugars; in fact, food and drink of every kind and description whatsoever? Why should we confine the bill to adulterated teas? Why not cover all the adulterated articles which come from abroad? Why not shut them all out by one and the same law? Why lumber up the statute-books with special laws? Why legislate for one class and not another?

It may be said that a general law would be difficult to enforce, on account of the difficulty of detecting adulterations. But this is not true. Chemistry and the microscope make detection so simple that the most uneducated person can easily discover adulterations. The points at which foreign articles enter the country are comparatively few in number, and the custom-house officials can cope with the subject without much additional trouble or expense.

I think it safer and better to let this bill lie over until the whole subject can be thoroughly discussed and a proper enactment be made to embrace all adulterated articles.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, this bill has not had full consideration or deliberation I wish to say that it was originally introduced by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARDENBERGH] on the 19th of December, 1882, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. In that committee it was assigned to me, and I have given it every possible research and study. It was reported to this House by the unanimous direction of the Committee on Ways and Means on the 3d of February, three weeks ago. The next day or the day after the bill and report were printed. The gentleman therefore is mistaken when he says the report has not yet been printed.

The objection of the gentleman from New York is not to the bill as it is presented here, because he says it is right in principle and he approves it. His objection is that it does not go far enough, and he desires to include drugs and other articles of importation, in reference to which the committee have not made examination. Therefore I am not authorized on their behalf to accept any amendment going beyond the importation of adulterated and spurious teas, which was the subject they have examined and in reference to which they have submitted a unanimous report to this House.

I yield now, Mr. Speaker, the remaining portion of my time to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I have but a word to say in reference to this bill. It grew out of a conversation which occurred with some merchants about the importation of adulterated and spurious teas into this country. In that conversation it was remarked that so far had this great crime against the American people been perpetrated by foreign nations engaged in the importation of teas into this country that the very excrements of worms were sent over here and sold and went into consumption among the people as tea. Now, sir, I know well that the question of the adulteration of drugs is also a matter of very serious importance. But in these closing hours of this Congress it is, as gentlemen will understand, utterly impossible to expect to get the attention of the committee or the House for a sufficient time to correct these general abuses. We are therefore forced of necessity to limit ourselves to such special cases as may come before us from the committees of the House. If we can correct this wrong in regard to the importation of teas we will have made at least one important step forward and have performed a great duty as well as an act of justice that is demanded by the American people at the hands of an American Congress. It is at least a step forward and we can look to the next Congress for still further security. Let the vote be taken.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FLOWER. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this bill. While it is not general enough in its provision, it is a move in the right direction.

Mr. RANDALL. I now send to the desk an amendment by authority of the Committee on Ways and Means, to be added at the end of the second section. This is prepared in order to meet the objections of one or two large importers of teas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, at the end of section 2:

"Provided, That such further examination of such tea shall be made within three days after entry thereof has been made at the custom-house: And provided further, That the bonds above required shall also be continued for the payment of all custom-house charges which may attach to such merchandise prior to its being released or destroyed, as the case may be, under the provisions of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer a further amendment as a new section to be added to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall have the power to enforce the provisions of this act by appropriate regulation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTEREST ON JUDGMENTS, COURT OF CLAIMS.

The Committee on the Judiciary was called.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. By authority of the Committee on the Judiciary I call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 4437) to amend section 1090 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to interest on judgments rendered by the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 1090 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1090. In cases where the judgment appealed from is in favor of the claimant, or the same is affirmed by the Supreme Court, interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. shall be allowed from the date of its presentation to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment as aforesaid, but no interest shall be allowed subsequent to the affirmance unless presented for payment to the Secretary of the Treasury as aforesaid."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection under the rule to the present consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I submit that I am entitled to five minutes by way of explanation of the bill before objections can be called for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled, if he desires it, before objection is asked for, to have the report read for five minutes.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The language of the rule as modified on yesterday is that the report may be read for five minutes or an explanation in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is correct, and will be recognized before the objection is asked for under the rule.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I could have the report read accompanying this bill, but I can make an explanation perhaps in briefer terms which will be equally satisfactory to the House.

The act of March 3, 1863, chapter 92, section 7, 12 United States Statutes, page 766, provides as follows:

In all cases of final judgments by said court—

Which is the Court of Claims—

or on appeal by the said Supreme Court where the same shall be affirmed in favor of the claimant, the sum due thereby shall be paid out of any general appropriation made by law for the payment and satisfaction of private claims on presentation to the Secretary of the Treasury of a copy of said judgment, certified by the clerk of said Court of Claims, &c.

In the codification of the laws in the Revised Statutes at section 1090 that statute is printed exactly as it was in 1863, except that the word "or" was changed to "and." Whether this was done by a mistake or by design we of course do not know. But the committee think that it does not really change the law, and that it would read properly:

In all cases of final judgments by said court, or in all cases of appeal by the said Supreme Court, where the same shall be affirmed or not reversed.

Now, in some of the States a judgment is superseded when the case is taken to the supreme court, and consequently there is no subsisting judgment, and that may explain why the revisers used the language. The habit has been here in the Supreme Court when a judgment is affirmed to send it back to the Court of Claims for final judgment. Under strict, literal construction of this statute as now printed by Mr. Lawrence it has been held that no final judgment bears interest unless that judgment was also carried to the Supreme Court and there affirmed by the opinion of the court, on the ground that there is no concurrence of final judgment below and affirmance by the Supreme Court, as there is no judgment of the Supreme Court affirming the judgment below. The whole of the change, as will be seen, was made by making this word "or" read "and." "Or" is the word originally used in the statute and is the right word, and the Judiciary Committee report unanimously that it is the proper word. Therefore I am instructed to ask the House to pass this bill so that this change may be properly made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. It was almost impossible to understand what this bill is from the hurried reading of it from the desk. I therefore ask unanimous consent that it be again read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think under this rule, unless by unanimous consent, the bill could again be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent for its reading.

There being no objection, the bill was again reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Committee on Banking and Currency was called. No measure was called up on behalf of that committee.

The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures was called.

ASSAY OFFICE AT DEADWOOD, DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I am instructed by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures to call up from the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the bill (H. R. 1887) to establish an assay office at Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to establish an assay office at Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota, the said assay office to be conducted under the provisions of title 37 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of 1878.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a suitable building at Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota, for the purpose of said assay office, and provide the same with the necessary fixtures and apparatus, at a cost not exceeding $50,000, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether the rule under which this report is made supersedes the rule which requires all bills appropriating money to have their first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does, because it leaves it in the power of five members to object to consideration at all. This is a special rule which allows any bill to be called up; and such a bill when called up is not subject to any point of order, but is only subject to the objection of five members. And it is stated in the rule that it is to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. ROSECRANS. There is a Senate bill of the same tenor which I would like to substitute for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill which the gentleman from California desires to substitute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1004) to establish an assay office at Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to establish an assay office at Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota, the said assay office to be conducted under the provisions of title 37 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of 1878.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a suitable building at Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota, for the purpose of said assay office, and provide the same with the necessary fixtures and apparatus, at a cost not exceeding $50,000, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks that the report be read. That will be done under the rule.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. There is a parliamentary inquiry which I desire to make. I suppose the gentleman from California is not entitled to bring the Senate bill before the House unless he is instructed by his committee so to act.

The SPEAKER. Of course not.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I am instructed by the committee so to act.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1887) to establish an assay office in the city of Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota, respectfully report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass.

It was shown that the city of Deadwood, in the Black Hills, Dakota, is the principal city of that region, and in the midst of the gold mines. Although these mines have been discovered but for a short time and are now in the infancy of their development, the product of gold for the year ending June 30, 1881, was $4,500,000, and the amount will be much larger for the year ending June 30, 1882. The total product of these mines deposited in the mints and assay offices of the United States is shown to have been $10,644,000 in gold, up to June 30, 1881.

There are a great number of undeveloped mines of gold and silver and very rich placer diggings, and it is the opinion of your committee that the product of the precious metals will be greatly stimulated by the establishment of an assay office at this point.

Mr. HASELTINE. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question. Is there objection?

More than four members objected.

MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

The Committee on Commerce was called.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland, was recognized.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE. In this call will not the reports of committees take precedence in the order in which they have been authorized by the committees?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not exactly understand the gentleman's point.

Mr. WHITE. Is it in the discretion of the Chair to recognize one member of a committee in preference to another?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes one member on behalf of the Committee on Commerce, who states that he is authorized to call up a bill.

Mr. WHITE. I was authorized by the Committee on Commerce at the last session to call up a bill which is now on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. That would not bring it under the rule.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I call up from the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the bill (H. R. 657) to increase the efficiency of the Marine-Hospital Service.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to have the ruling of the Chair on the question of privilege or of order which I raise. I make the point that I am entitled to report the bill which I was instructed by the Committee on Commerce last session under this rule to call up. It is a prior order of the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. But that was under another rule; not the same rule we are acting under now at all.

Mr. WHITE. I was instructed to bring it up whenever I could.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] is recognized, and the Chair understands is authorized by the Committee on Commerce to call up the bill which he has indicated. The Chair can recognize but one member on behalf of a committee.

Mr. WHITE. But I raise a question of order on which I desire the ruling of the Chair. The Speaker decided this morning a similar question for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I will suggest to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE], that if he wants an explanation he should address himself to me.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the bill. Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. WHITE said: I object to the reading of more of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is not in order. The Clerk will finish the reading of the bill.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, which is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the corps of medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service shall hereafter consist of the Supervising Surgeon-General, who shall hereafter be designated as director-general, thirteen surgeons, one medical purveyor, and not to exceed twenty-five passed assistant and assistant surgeons.

SEC. 2. That all original appointments into the Marine-Hospital Service shall be made to the grade of assistant surgeon, and shall be made by the President, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and no person shall be so appointed until he shall have passed a satisfactory professional examination before a board of medical officers convened for that purpose.

SEC. 3. That no assistant surgeon shall be promoted to the grade of passed assistant surgeon until he shall have served for a period of three years, and shall have passed a satisfactory professional examination.

SEC. 4. That vacancies occurring in the grades of director-general and medical purveyor shall be filled by selection from the surgeons, and vacancies occurring in the grades of surgeon and passed assistant surgeon shall be filled by promotion from the passed assistant and assistant surgeons, respectively; and all such selections and promotions shall be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 5. That the compensation of the medical purveyor and of surgeons shall be $2,500 per annum; for passed assistant surgeons, $1,800 per annum; and for assistant surgeons, $1,600 per annum; and this shall be in lieu of all other compensations or emoluments whatsoever, except and provided that when serving at a hospital, quarters, fuel, and lights shall be furnished where there are quarters belonging to the United States; and all salaries shall be paid from the marine-hospital fund.

SEC. 6. That the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, the medical purveyor, surgeons, passed assistant surgeons, and assistant surgeons in the service at the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 7. That when serving on boards or other duty with officers of the revenue-cutter service surgeons shall have the same assimilated rank as captains, passed assistant surgeons the same as first lieutenants, and assistant surgeons the same as second lieutenants.

SEC. 8. That at ports where the number of sick and disabled seamen applying for relief is not large enough to warrant the assignment of a regular medical officer the director-general may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, enter into contract with a private physician to act in the stead of a medical officer at such ports. The compensation of physicians serving under contract shall in no case exceed $1,000 per annum, and shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury according to the extent of the services required.

SEC. 9. That hospital stewards shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury not to exceed one for each marine hospital or relief station of the first class: Provided, That when in any hospital the number of patients exceeds sixty an additional steward may be appointed. No person shall hereafter be appointed steward unless he shall produce evidence that he is skilled in pharmacy and qualified to act as apothecary. The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized to employ such engineers, attendants, and laborers as may be necessary for the proper management of the hospitals, and he is authorized to fix the rates of compensation for persons so employed; and stewards, engineers, attendants, and laborers shall be paid from the marine-hospital fund.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to appoint such clerks and copyists in the office of the director-general as may be necessary, not to exceed ten of the former and two of the latter, and he is also authorized to appoint one messenger and three laborers; and persons so appointed and employed shall receive the same compensation as other employés of the same classes in the Treasury Department, and their compensation shall be paid from the marine-hospital fund.

SEC. 11. That the director-general, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to detail a passed assistant or assistant surgeon to act as chief clerk, and to detail a steward to act under the direction of the medical purveyor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read. [Mr. WHITE rose.] For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. WHITE. I desire to make a statement as a member of the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. As to what?

Mr. WHITE. As to the consideration of this bill at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not try a question of that kind. It must stand on the statement of the member calling up the bill.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman desires to make an explanation in a matter personal to himself it will come in better after this call.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to say the committee has had no meeting——

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I state that I was authorized to call up this bill; and I do not choose the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] shall interpose himself between the House and any statement of mine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks that under the rule the report be read, and the Clerk will now read it.

The Clerk began the reading of the report, but before concluding,

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland, said: The five minutes allowed under the rule will not be sufficient for the reading of the report. I can make an explanation in less time.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend from Maryland will be entitled to five minutes under the rule.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I know that very well. The report can not be read in the five minutes allowed by the rule, and I think I can perform my duty most intelligibly by making an explanation.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] can occupy the remainder of the time allowed for reading the report in an explanation.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. How much time?

The SPEAKER. Three minutes.

Mr. WHITE. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to make an explanation in lieu of the reading of the report.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. The House will observe that the three sections of this bill simply put in form of law the Treasury regulations now in force.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand this time is being occupied instead of reading the report, but it does not do away with the right to object.

The SPEAKER. Not at all.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. This hospital service, as members know very well, is maintained by a tax on the sailor; and excepting a law which authorizes the appointment of a surgeon-general, the entire service is under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. From time to time Treasury circulars have been issued regulating the number of assistant surgeons and the mode of their assignment to duty.

This bill provides that the existing officers and the whole hospital service as now regulated by Treasury circulars shall be regulated by law, and the various sections of this bill are merely to give the force of law to the Treasury circulars now in existence. There is no increase of expense, no increase of officers; none authorized now or hereafter.

The bill merely makes this service a legal organization, and requires the President and the Senate to make the appointments which are now made by the Secretary of the Treasury. The bill merely puts in the shape of law the Treasury circulars now in force.

This bill has been framed upon the recommendation of the Treasury Department, and in consequence of an inspection of the whole hospital service by two competent civil inspectors. It provides for no increase of force and no increase of expense.

Mr. KING. Does this bill continue the present officers in service?

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. No longer than they would now be continued in office. The bill provides for a proper examination of the surgeons before they are appointed, and also provides that they shall be appointed by the President and Senate instead of by the Secretary of the Treasury as now.

The SPEAKER. As many as are opposed to the present consideration of the bill which has been read will rise and stand until counted. [Counting.] There are six gentlemen rising, and the bill is not before the House for consideration.

Mr. CANNON. How much time of the hour is left?

The SPEAKER. About six minutes.

Mr. TUCKER. The Speaker just now announced that six members objected to the consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE.] I was standing here but did not intend to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was not counted. There were three on one side of the House and three on the other objecting.

Mr. MCLANE, of Maryland. I would ask the Chair to submit the question again.

The SPEAKER. If there is any doubt about it, the Chair will again submit the question. As many as are opposed to the consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE] will rise and stand until counted. [Counting.] Evidently more than a sufficient number, and the bill is not before the House.

AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER. The next committee in order is the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. ANDERSON. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. VALENTINE] has a bill to present to the House; he was in his seat a moment since.

Mr. VALENTINE. I am instructed by the Committee on Agriculture to call up House bill No. 6920, to create an agricultural commission, reported from the Committee on Agriculture with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill, but, before concluding,

Mr. VALENTINE said: I understand that the hour is about out, and if the bill can be printed in the RECORD I will not ask for its reading now. It will have to be read again in the morning before being acted upon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would not like to have another committee called this morning.

Mr. VALENTINE. No, sir, I would not. Let the Clerk go on and read the bill.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That a commission is hereby created, to be called "the agricultural commission," which shall consist of nine members, neither of whom shall have any interest whatsoever, directly or indirectly, in any company or corporation performing any part of the work of a common carrier.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint nine commissioners, one of whom, the first named, shall be the president of the commission, and one of whom, to be chosen by the commission, shall be its secretary. The commission may employ a stenographer and a messenger, and in the event that its investigations are made by committees, each to consist of not less than three commissioners, it may employ two additional stenographers and two additional messengers. The commissioners shall receive as compensation for their services, each at the rate of $10 per day, when engaged in active duty as such, and actual traveling and other necessary expenses; and said compensation and expenses, together with the necessary expenses of the commission, shall be audited and paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of said commission to thoroughly investigate the movement of the agricultural products of the United States from the points where produced to their final market, the actual cost of such movement to the common carrier thereof, the charge to the shipper by the carrier, and all matters which practically affect the difference between the price received by the producer of a given article and the price paid therefor by its consumer. And the words "agricultural products," as herein used, are to be understood in their broadest scope, and as including all crops, animals, or articles sold from American farms.

SEC. 4. That in the execution of this duty said commission, either as a whole or by a committee of three, may visit such places in the United States as it shall deem expedient. And it is hereby empowered to investigate the books and papers of any company or corporation performing in the United States the service of a common carrier of agricultural products; and in order that full and adequate justice shall be had between said company or corporation and the people said commission shall investigate and report upon all questions relating to the establishment and maintenance of reasonable and just interstate transportation tariffs; and said commission is empowered to issue subpœnas for the attendance of witnesses, to administer the oath thereto, and to take the testimony, under oath or otherwise, of any owner, officer, agent, or employé of any company or corporation performing said service of a common carrier, and the testimony of other persons touching any point of the general inquiry herein assigned to the commission. Such witnesses shall receive the compensation and mileage of witnesses before a district court of the United States. And in case any person, when duly summoned, shall willfully fail or refuse to appear and testify before said commission or one of its committees, it shall be the duty of the judge of the district or circuit court of the United States for the district or circuit in which said commission or committee is then sitting, and upon its application, to issue an attachment for such witness and compel him to attend before the commissioners and give his testimony upon such matters as shall be lawfully required by them; and said court shall have power to punish for contempt as in other cases of refusal to obey its process and order. The commission shall hold its first meeting within forty days from the passage of this act, and shall have power to make such rules and regulations as it may find necessary for the best performance of its duty.

SEC. 5. That the commission shall make final report to Congress of the results of its investigations, and the testimony taken in the course of the same, not later than the first Monday in December, 1883; and it shall cause the testimony as taken to be printed from time to time and distributed to members of Congress by the Public Printer; and shall also cause to be printed, for the use of Congress, 2,000 copies of its final report, together with the testimony, and such recommendations for protecting the agricultural interests of the United States by cheapening and regulating the cost of the transportation of agricultural products as it may deem most effective.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to create a commission to investigate and report upon the transportation of agricultural products, and for other purposes."

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I make the point that the hour has expired.

The SPEAKER. The hour has expired.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEIRCE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6900) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the contingent expenses of the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

SANDWICH ISLANDS SUGAR.

Mr. BELMONT, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the House all correspondence between officers of the Treasury Department or between those officers and any other person or persons, and all orders or decisions by the Department respecting the execution of so much of the Hawaiian treaty of 1875, and the law of 1876 to enforce the same, as relates to Sandwich Islands sugar.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to give notice that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads will on Tuesday next report the final post-route bill. Gentlemen who wish post-routes included in the bill will be kind enough to send memoranda thereof to the committee-room.

SOUTH CAROLINA ELECTION CONTEST—LEE VS. RICHARDSON.

Mr. MILLER. At the request of the chairman of the Committee on Elections [Mr. CALKINS], I submit the report of that committee on the contested-election case of Lee vs. Richardson, from the first Congressional district of South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The resolution accompanying this report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Samuel Lee have leave to withdraw his papers; and this case is dismissed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. This report will be printed and will lie over.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I submit the views of a minority of the Committee on Elections in the case just reported upon. I ask that these views be printed with the majority report.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the views of the minority of the committee will be printed in connection with the report.

There was no objection.

SOLDIERS' HOME, WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HENDERSON, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments, the bill (S. 1821) prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was ordered to be placed on the House Calendar and the accompanying report printed.

COINAGE.

Mr. BELFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the testimony of the Director of the Mint taken by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures be published for the use of members of the House.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask unanimous consent that the naval appropriation bill be taken from the Speaker's table, and, with the amendments of the Senate, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KETCHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the District of Columbia appropriation bill, now on the Speaker's table with amendments of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and the amendments ordered to be printed.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I am directed by the Select Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River to submit the report which I send to the desk. I ask that the report, together with the testimony, be printed for the use of the House and referred to the Committee on Commerce. I will state that certain gentlemen of the committee desire to submit minority views.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the report, together with the accompanying papers, including the testimony, will be printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH rose.

Mr. THOMAS. Before this matter is finally disposed of, I desire to ask leave to file the views of the minority.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That was precisely the point to which I desired to call the attention of the Chair. The chairman of the committee [Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan] asked that leave; but I presume the Chair did not hear his statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed the views of the minority were ready to be submitted now.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. They will be handed in within twenty-four hours.

The SPEAKER. The views of the minority, according to the usage, will, when presented, be printed with the majority report and take the same course.

Mr. THOMAS. As the report just presented has not been examined by those members of the committee desiring to present minority views, I ask that the time within which those views may be filed be extended beyond the usual twenty-four hours.

The SPEAKER. Then they will have to be printed separately. That is a matter to be settled by gentlemen themselves.

SOUTHERN EXPOSITION, LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to present two reports from the Committee on Ways and Means. The first is the bill (H. R. 7623) relative to the Southern exposition to be held in the city of Louisville, State of Kentucky, in the year 1883.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have this bill considered at the present time?

Mr. KELLEY. I would be very glad to have it considered now. It simply provides, in accordance with past precedents, for admitting free of duty, under Treasury regulations, goods intended for this exposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all articles which shall be imported for the sole purpose of exhibition at the Southern exposition at Louisville, Kentucky, to be held in the year 1883, shall be admitted without the payment of duty, or of customs fees or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles as shall be sold in the United States, or withdrawn for consumption therein, at any time after such importation, shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed on like articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of importation: And provided further, That in case any articles imported under the provisions of this act shall be withdrawn for consumption, or shall be sold without payment of duty as required by law, all penalties prescribed by the revenue laws shall be applied and enforced against such articles and against the persons who may be guilty of such withdrawal or sale.

SEC. 2. That medals, with appropriate devices, emblems, and inscriptions, commemorative of said Southern exposition, and of the awards to be made to exhibitors thereat, be prepared at some mint of the United States, for the board of directors thereof, subject to the provisions of the fifty-second section of the coinage act of 1873, upon the payment of a sum not less than the cost thereof; and all the provisions, whether penal or otherwise, of said coinage act against the counterfeiting or imitating coins of the United States, shall apply to the medals struck and issued under this act.

SEC. 3. That with the approval of the Director of the National Museum, any portion of the collections thereof may be exhibited at said Southern exposition, permission to remove the same from the National Museum being hereby granted: Provided, That said removal can be made without loss or expense to the Government. And, upon the same conditions, permission is also granted for the exhibition of articles in charge of other bureaus and Departments of the Government.

SEC. 4. That upon the passage of this act the Secretary of State shall notify the consuls, consular agents, and other representatives of our Government in foreign countries of the time and place of holding said Southern exposition, together with the fact that all articles intended therefor will be admitted free of duty, as provided herein.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL MINING AND INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION AT DENVER.

Mr. KELLEY. I now ask by unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Ways and Means the bill (H. R. 7597) to admit free of duty articles intended for the national mining and industrial exposition to be held at Denver, in the State of Colorado, during the year 1883, for present consideration.

Mr. BELFORD. It is precisely similar to the bill which has just been passed and it does not take a cent out of the Treasury.

Mr. KELLEY. The same bill precisely.

Mr. HOLMAN. If it is similar to the bill just passed, I do not object to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all articles which shall be imported for the sole purpose of exhibition at the national mining and industrial exposition to be held at the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, in the year 1883, shall be admitted without the payment of duty or of customs fees or charges under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles as shall be sold in the United States or withdrawn for consumption therein at any time after such importation shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed on like articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of the importation: Provided further, That in case any articles imported under the provisions of this act shall be withdrawn for consumption or shall be sold without payment of duty as required by law, all the penalties prescribed by the revenue laws shall be applied and enforced against such articles and against the persons who may be guilty of such withdrawal or sale.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BELFORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MORNING HOUR DISPENSED WITH.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now move that the morning hour be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

The SPEAKER. The House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with sundry amendments. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the legal representatives of Hon. Andrew S. Herron, of the sixth Congressional district of Louisiana the sum of $5,000.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 59.

Mr. KING. I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has voted, and the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. We might as well have the yeas and nays at once.

Mr. WASHBURN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a suggestion to the House, and I believe by unanimous consent it will indulge me for one moment. By the vote taken a moment ago it would seem that this amendment would be voted down. There is a paragraph in this sundry civil appropriation bill paying to the legal representatives of the late Dr. Updegraff $6,000 for one year's salary for the Forty-eighth Congress. I ask the House to allow this bill to be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations and that clause stricken out, so we may pass the bill without doing such injustice as will be done if the paragraph relating to the estate of Dr. Updegraff is allowed to remain in the bill while that relating to the legal representatives of Mr. Herron is omitted. For myself I would prefer that both should be eliminated from the bill.

The SPEAKER. Discussion is not in order.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask by unanimous consent the bill may be recommitted. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] in charge of the bill to consent to its being recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, so that the clause paying the legal representatives of Dr. Updegraff $6,000 may be eliminated from the bill.

Mr. ATHERTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment.

Mr. ATKINS. Then I hope that this House will do for the estate of Mr. Herron what has been done in this bill for the estate of Dr. Updegraff.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. ATHERTON. I hope the House will give us a chance to vote on both paragraphs.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. This bill having gone beyond its second reading, is it not in order to move that it be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to strike out the paragraph paying $6,000 to the Updegraff estate?

The SPEAKER. It may later on.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to say, Mr. Speaker, a single word, and I hope there will be no objection to my doing so. I believe this case of Mr. Herron stands precisely on the same ground as that of Dr. Updegraff. If one remains in the bill the other should be there too, and I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. McCOOK. And so do I.

Mr. HISCOCK. I believe they both stand on the same ground.

Mr. ATHERTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent. I said yesterday that I did not believe as an individual member of the Committee on Appropriations this amount should be voted to the estate of Dr. Updegraff, and that it was only reported by that committee in consideration of the precedent which had been established. If both paragraphs, that for the Herron estate as well as that for the Updegraff estate, can be voted out, very well; but as that can not be done, and the paragraph relating to the estate of Dr. Updegraff remains in the bill, I hope then that both will be inserted.

Mr. JOYCE. And I hope they will both be kept in the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WASHBURN. I desire to ask whether there is any way under the parliamentary practice to make a motion to strike out the $6,000 voted to the estate of Dr. Updegraff?

Mr. MILLER. Only by recommitting the bill with instructions to the committee to strike it out.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the pending amendment, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 53, noes 150, not voting 88; as follows:

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. MASON with Mr. HEWITT of New York.

Mr. CORNELL with Mr. NOLAN.

Mr. ERRETT with Mr. BELTZHOOVER.

Mr. CROWLEY with Mr. WARNER.

Mr. SKINNER with Mr. LATHAM.

Mr. PACHECO with Mr. CABELL.

Mr. BARR with Mr. DAVIS of Missouri.

Mr. WEBBER with Mr. WISE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HENDERSON with Mr. TOWNSHEND of Illinois.

Mr. NORCROSS with Mr. WILLIAMS of Alabama.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, with Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. MULDROW.

Mr. PARKER with Mr. SIMONTON.

Mr. TALBOTT with Mr. MCCOID.

Mr. CANNON with Mr. HAMMOND of Georgia, on this vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, with Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina, on this vote.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, with Mr. DUNN, on this vote.

Mr. VAN AERNAM with Mr. KLOTZ, on this vote.

Mr. DWIGHT with Mr. BENJAMIN WOOD.

Mr. ATHERTON. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. CULBERSON. I object; let us have them read.

The Clerk read the names of those voting, after which the result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now ask unanimous consent of the House that lines 1855, 1856, 1857, and 1858 be stricken from the bill, being the following words:

To pay the legal representatives of Hon. J. T. Updegraff, deceased, late member of the Forty-seventh Congress and member-elect to the Forty-eighth Congress, $6,000.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I object.

Mr. HISCOCK. We will report upon the deficiency bill, if this request is acceded to, an amount covering the salary of Mr. Updegraff for the unexpired portion of his term in the present Congress. And I therefore say to the gentleman from Ohio who rises to object to the unanimous consent asked that at the proper time, if objection is now made and insisted upon to the proposition which I have submitted, I shall move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to have these lines stricken out, and therefore it will be seen that we can reach the object which I think is proper to be accomplished in that manner. Instead, however, of wasting time by going through that formality, I hope this consent will be given.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will be able to judge whether it is wasting time or not when the House is called upon to take action on the gentleman's motion. I object for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects. The Clerk will read the next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House to pay the officers and employés of the House of Representatives borne on the annual and session rolls on the 3d day of March, 1883, one month's extra pay at the compensation then paid them by law, which sum shall be immediately available.

The question was taken, and the Speaker decided by the sound the "ayes" had it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 117, noes 27.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. REAGAN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order tellers.

Mr. SPARKS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I hope that we may have a yea-and-nay vote on this proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the point of order is withdrawn that no quorum has voted.

Mr. SPARKS. Then I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, 17 members only voting in favor thereof.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. HOLMAN. Count the other side.

Those opposed to taking the vote by yeas and nays were counted, and the Speaker announced that 135 members had risen.

So the yeas and nays were refused; tellers on the yeas and nays were refused, and the amendment as reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now demand the previous question on the passage of the bill; but pending that I desire to ask if it is now in order to move to recommit the bill to the committee with instructions?

The SPEAKER. It is in order, with or without instructions.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand the objection is to be withdrawn to the amendment I indicated being made by unanimous consent. I therefore repeat the request, that by unanimous consent the words I have suggested be stricken from the bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Before withdrawing the objection I desire to say a word. I deem it unjust to withhold this payment from the heirs of Mr. Herron if it is allowed to the heirs of Mr. Updegraff; but the House has otherwise determined. I do not want to be understood, however, in withdrawing this objection as expressing the opinion that the action of the committee was not a just and generous thing. It was an act of grace on the part of the committee, it is true; but it is by grace only that the most of us will be saved, if at all; and I stand by my vote in the committee and in the House in favor of the proposition to pay to the families of these deceased Congressmen who died with the harness on the sums named in the bill.

Mr. ATHERTON. The grace had better come out of your own pocket, then.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that the lines he has indicated be stricken from the bill by unanimous consent?

There being no objection, the lines from 1855 to 1858, inclusive, were ordered to be stricken from the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. This being a general appropriation bill, under the standing rules of the House the vote must be taken on its passage by yeas and nays. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 186, nays 25, not voting 80; as follows:

Mr. BELFORD with Mr. HOOKER.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin, with Mr. JONES, of Texas.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I withdraw my vote, being paired with Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I desire to call up a privileged report from the Committee on the Judiciary, in the matter of an additional member from the State of Nebraska.

Mr. PAGE. I have been instructed by the Committee on Commerce, at the first opportunity after the bill just passed, the sundry civil bill, should be disposed of, to call up the river and harbor bill. But as the gentleman from Georgia has an important matter which he desires to submit to the House, and I find that many members here were not expecting the river and harbor bill to be brought up to-day, I desire it to be postponed till Monday; and I give notice now that on Monday morning I shall move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER. Some motion might be made on Monday that might preclude the gentleman from proceeding with the bill in that way.

Mr. PAGE. I did not hear distinctly the statement of the Chair. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and other members of the select committee relative to appropriations for the improvement of the Mississippi River have stated to me that their report which has been submitted to the House to-day will be printed by Monday. Many members desire to see that report in print, and of course I do not care to bring up the river and harbor bill until every one is ready to act upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remind the gentleman that next Monday may be suspension day.

Mr. PAGE. I have talked that matter over, and as near as I can figure it out motions to suspend the rules will not be in order till Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair at present is of a different opinion.

Mr. COX, of New York. I suggest to the gentleman from California that inasmuch as the report of the Mississippi River Committee will not likely be printed till Tuesday, he give notice to bring up his bill on Tuesday.

Mr. PAGE. I do not desire to call it up now so as to antagonize the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND]; but I give notice that I shall call up the bill on Monday.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from California allow me to make a short statement as to the Mississippi River matter? Reference has been made to the character of the improvement on the Mississippi River. On my motion a resolution was adopted by the House addressing to the Secretary of War an inquiry as to the condition of the works at Lake Providence Reach and Plum Point Reach. The Secretary of War in response to that resolution reported that as to Lake Providence no damage had been done. I have just received a telegram from the War Department, from General Wright, the Chief of Engineers, informing me that a report has been received this morning in relation to the damages at Plum Point and is now in course of transmission to the House. The following is the telegram:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., February 24, 1883.

Hon. G. D. ROBINSON:

Report in relation to damages at Plum Point sent to Secretary of War this morning. In it Captain Knight states 1,475 feet of dike, or 7 per cent., carried away.

H. G. WRIGHT.

It is very important we should have that report before the river and harbor bill is acted on.

Mr. REAGAN. I suggest that if we now proceed to consider the river and harbor bill we can go on with it until the report is received. The Mississippi item is in the latter portion of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. But we do not want to be limited to the five-minute debate on that important question.

Mr. COX, of New York. It can not be taken up without some preliminary motion. I myself will move to postpone it.

Mr. PAGE. There is nothing to postpone; I have not called up the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I understand that by consent it will go over.

Mr. COX, of New York. I call for the regular order.

ADDITIONAL MEMBER FROM NEBRASKA.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the privileged question called up by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], being the report of the Committee on the Judiciary on the subject of an additional member from Nebraska.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman want more than the resolution of the committee read?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I desire to have the report and resolution read; the resolution is at the end of the report.

The SPEAKER. It would take a long time to read it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I do not ask for the reading of the testimony.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that it would take from an hour to an hour and a half to read the report.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that by unanimous consent the report can be printed in the RECORD, and the gentleman can state the substance of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia will give direction to the matter.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I had consulted with the members of the Committee on the Judiciary, who thought that the report had better be read so that members might be better informed how to vote. But I have no disposition to consume time unnecessarily.

I will therefore, at the suggestion of members, ask that the Clerk read Exhibit A, being the resolution of the House under which the action of the committee was had, and that the entire report be printed in the RECORD as if read.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk then read Exhibit A; and the entire report is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the matter of Thomas J. Majors's claim to be seated as a "member contingent" from Nebraska, submits the following report:

That the committee was imposed upon, and thereby induced to report favorably in the case, is conceded by all. Mr. WILLITS, who made the report, before the investigating committee made this statement:

"The essential question of fact controlling the action of the majority of the committee was the incompleteness of the census of 1870, upon which the apportionment of representation to Nebraska was based. Affidavits were used to show how inefficiently the census of that year had been taken; but the strongest evidence of that fact was the alleged census of 1872 by the State, by which it was made to appear that the population in 1872 was nearly 228,000; and this, coupled with affidavits that the immigration for 1871 had been light, demonstrated, as it was thought, conclusively that an accurate census in 1870 would have given a fraction over the 131,425—the basis of a single Representative—sufficiently large to have entitled Nebraska to another Representative. Hence the certified copy of the census of 1872 was an important factor in the conclusion arrived at." (165.)

The misinformation was in presenting the census of 1874 for that of 1872, when none had been taken for the latter year.

The House directed this committee to "learn the facts touching this matter" and report "at its earliest convenience, at any time, how this misinformation occurred, and who is responsible therefor."

Much testimony has been taken under that authority, a copy of which is hereto attached. It furnishes all the information believed to be necessary to answer the question propounded. A chronological statement of facts taken therefrom will greatly aid in making that answer. We proceed to give it, noting in parentheses from time to time the pages at which the facts are treated.

On the 1st of February, 1870, the act for taking the United States census went into effect. (29.) On the 2d of March, 1870, the Legislature of Nebraska passed a law requiring two Representatives to be elected in November, 1870, one to be called "member of Congress contingent," and to "be entitled to a seat only in the event that Congress may declare Nebraska entitled to one additional member." (29.)

Mr. La Masters was elected such "member contingent" at that election.

The census was finished in January, 1871, and showed Nebraska's population to be but 122,923. The act of apportionment of Representatives took effect on the 2d of February, 1872. Under it the population necessary for a Representative was 131,425. But it gave Nebraska one Representative, as required by the Constitution.

The lowest fraction of the ratio to which a Representative was by the act allowed was 85,928 to Rhode Island. Under a supplemental act of Congress, approved the 30th of May, 1872, nine other Representatives were allowed (as stated in the report in favor of it), "in order to save eight States from a diminution in the number of their Representatives." Under that, Vermont, with a fraction of 67,701, Florida, with a fraction of 56,323, and New York, with a fraction of 45,736, had an additional Representative each; though none was allowed to South Carolina, with a fraction of 48,481, nor to West Virginia, with a fraction of 47,739, over the representative ratio. (30.)

Mr. La Masters, so elected "member contingent" in 1870, never applied for admission. The reason given by Messrs. Hawes and Majors for his failure was that he had an office in the Internal-Revenue Department which he would not quit. The true reason, we think, was that he was satisfied that he had no right to his seat under the law. In the evidence of Hawes and Majors his election is put as in 1872, but it is proved to have been in 1870.

La Masters ceased to hold his internal-revenue office on the 2d December, 1872.

No other election for "member contingent" occurred in Nebraska till October, 1874, when Pat. O. Hawes was so elected to the Forty-fourth Congress. In the Forty-third Congress, on the 8th December, 1874, Mr. Crounse, of Nebraska, introduced a bill (H. R. 3845) to allow Nebraska an additional member, and it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It was there referred to a subcommittee on the 11th of December, 1874, but no action on it appears.

The Forty-fourth Congress, to which Mr. Hawes had been elected, began its session on the first Monday in December, 1875. On the 17th of that month Mr. Crounse presented Mr. Hawes's papers, and they were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. On the 10th of January, 1876, Mr. KNOTT introduced papers relating to Mr. Hawes's case, and they were referred to the same committee. (134.)

While his case was there pending Mr. Hawes presented a brief, a printed copy of which is in the evidence. It stated that in 1870 Nebraska had but fifty counties, but that out of her unorganized territory, which then was enumerated at 235, she had since 1870 organized nineteen counties, which, at the time he spoke (in 1876) he said contained over 60,000 inhabitants.

That brief invited attention to affidavits of the governor of Nebraska; George H. Roberts, her attorney-general; J. T. Hoile, United States marshal; Joseph T. Allen, one of his deputies, and other prominent citizens of Nebraska, giving opinions as to the inaccuracy of the census of 1870 in their State. (74.)

As to the State census it held this language:

"Reference is made to the certificates of the secretary of the State of Nebraska, first, showing the population under the State census of that portion of the State organized into counties at the time the United States census was taken, and to the other certificate of that officer, showing the population of the counties organized out of the territory reported as unorganized in the ninth United States census.

"These certificates are from the records of the office of the secretary of the State of Nebraska, and exhibit a difference between the ninth census of the United States and the State of Nebraska of over 160,000 inhabitants. Taking this very palpable mistake in the census of 1870, in the unorganized portion of the State of Nebraska, and reasoning from analogy, it is but fair to presume it is as incorrect in other respects and particulars as it is in reference to the unorganized territory." (78.)

That he did not present any certificate as to a census of 1872 seems clear from the fact that in his brief, made in 1876, he spoke of the census as one—

"Completed about two years ago, and returns made afterward, showing, according to the certificates of the secretary of state of Nebraska, hereto attached, her population to be 228,000." (73.)

His brief concluded with a note that "the proofs referred to in the foregoing are now on file in the Judiciary Committee." (80.) Mr. Hawes swears that he had school statistics, about twenty affidavits, &c., none of which were copied in his brief, but all of which he left with the committee. No report was ever made upon his case, nor does anything else appear about it in the records.

The constitution of Nebraska made in 1866 provided for a State census in 1875 and decennially thereafter. That of 1875 was taken, and on the 15th of February, 1877, her Legislature passed the following resolution, namely:

"Whereas the census of the State of Nebraska taken by the Federal Government in the year 1870 was incomplete and imperfect, failing to show the actual number of people then being in the State; and whereas the increase of population in the State since that time has been unprecedented in rapidity; and whereas the people of Nebraska have elected an additional member of the Forty-fifth Congress: Therefore,

"Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Nebraska, That our Senators be instructed and our Representatives be requested to use all honorable means to procure the passage of a law providing for the admission of said member." (Laws of Nebraska, 1877, page 256.)

In October, 1876, Thomas J. Majors had been elected "member contingent" to the next Congress. A called session thereof began in October, 1877. On the 29th of November, 1877, Mr. Welch, the Representative from Nebraska, introduced a bill (H. R. 774) to allow her an additional member after 3d March, 1877, because, as was alleged in its preamble, the United States census of 1870 was incorrect, and because by "the State census since taken," &c., "it is shown that said State has sufficient population to entitle it to an additional Representative in Congress."

It was referred to the Judiciary Committee on the 19th of March, 1878, and was then referred to a sub-committee. The sub-committee reported 20th May, 1878. Pending consideration of the case, Mr. Majors submitted a brief, which is copied in the evidence. (80.) The body of it is almost a literal copy of Hawes's brief. The quotation from Hawes's brief as to certificates and the affidavits and the note are exactly copied. The principal differences are these: He changed the language about the State census "completed about two years ago," &c., and though he used Hawes's language as to affidavits, and printed with his brief one of them, he printed none dated as early as 1875 except that one of Governor Furnas. He printed one from Smith and one from said Joseph T. Allen, and a certificate of Thayer, governor of Wyoming, but all these were dated in 1878.

Mr. Welch had, on the 11th of February, 1878, obtained leave to withdraw the Hawes papers (136), and Mr. Majors swears that this was to use them in his case (58), and that he used such certificates as Hawes had, but is not sure whether he or Welch filed the same. (59.)

Hawes's brief, after speaking of the enumeration of the unorganized Territory in 1870, said:

"Since that time there have been organized out of this unorganized Territory nineteen different counties, showing, under the State census, a population of nearly 60,000 people." (74.)

The brief of Majors put that thus:

"In a portion of this same Territory, organized into nineteen counties between 1870 and 1872, a State census, taken under an act of the Legislature of 1872, returned a population of nearly 60,000 people." (80.)

This is the first introduction of "1872" as the date of the State census. Mr. Majors was interested in having the date "1872" instead of "1874." But no certificate of any census was printed with that brief.

In June, 1878, a majority of the sub-committee, by Mr. LAPHAM, reported in favor of seating Mr. Majors. Mr. Stenger reported adversely, and his report was adopted by the committee. A minority of five reported favorably. To their report were attached nine affidavits, but none which had been used by Hawes, except one, of Hoile, United States marshal, and all except that were dated between the 27th of February, 1878, and the 31st of May, 1878. It had also a copy of what purported to be the State census of 1872, duly certified by Gosper, secretary of state, on the 20th November, 1874. Its statement and arguments were practically a restatement of Mr. Majors's brief.

These majority and minority reports were made on the 10th June, 1878, and made the special order after the morning hour for 11th December, 1878. But in September, 1878, Mr. Welch died. Mr. Majors was elected his successor, and was sworn in as such on the 2d of December, 1878, and his claim for a seat in that Congress as a "member contingent" was heard of no more. He served out Welch's term.

Mr. Majors was elected to the Forty-sixth Congress as "member contingent," but never filed any credentials. So far as we know none were ever issued.

He was again elected to the Forty-seventh Congress. His commission was filed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It was there being considered, off and on, until the 24th of March, 1882, when the committee determined to report in his favor.

Mr. Majors printed a brief for this application. (127.) It was like the last, except that "certificates are" was changed to "certificate is," and "exhibit" was changed to "exhibits," and the population of the nineteen counties was reduced from 60,000 to 35,000. It is said he had this in the sub-committee room, but it does not appear that any of this committee saw either of the three briefs till this investigation disclosed them.

On the 1st of April, 1882, Mr. WILLITS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted a report (No. 911, first session Forty-seventh Congress) favoring the seating of Thomas J. Majors as an additional Representative from Nebraska in the Forty-seventh Congress. (6.) The report alleged that the United States census of Nebraska in 1870, which gave her only 122,993 population, was grossly wrong, that it ought to have been 200,000 or more, because a census taken by the State in the spring of 1872 showed that Nebraska had in 1872 227,684 population. The only evidence which could have brought the committee to that conclusion was said printed copy of what was called such census of 1872, purporting to have been certified by John J. Gosper, secretary of state of Nebraska, on the 20th of November, 1874, contained in said House report No. 923 of the Forty-fifth Congress. (30.)

There was a minority adverse report. But that did not attack the correctness of the alleged census of 1872. No reason to doubt its genuineness or fairness had then appeared. But on the 11th of April, 1882, the writer stated to the Committee on the Judiciary that he had discovered that what purported to be the census of 1872 was in fact the census of 1874, and that no State census was taken and compiled in 1872. After investigation the committee, on the 28th day of April, 1882, directed Mr. WILLITS to ask the House to pass the following resolution (5):

"Whereas since the report of the Committee on the Judiciary in favor of seating Mr. Majors as an additional member of the House of Representatives from Nebraska was made to the House doubts have arisen as to whether what was presented to the committee as a duly certified copy of the census of that State for the year 1872 was not in fact its census of 1874, and whether any census of that State had been taken at all compiled for 1872; and

"Whereas the basis of that report was the opinion that the aggregate population of Nebraska, shown by the certified copy of the census produced, was its population for 1872, and not for 1874:

"Resolved, That said bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, with power to send for persons and papers, to learn the facts touching this matter, and that it report at its earliest convenience, at any time, how this misinformation occurred and who is responsible therefor."

It was not presented until the 21st of June, 1882, and was then passed by the House.

On the 24th June, 1882, a sub-committee began taking testimony and continued during the last session of Congress and during this session. (See the evidence attached.)

WHO RESPONSIBLE.

Hawes seems to have originally presented the certified copy of the State census of Nebraska as that of 1874. That it was the census of 1874 all now admit. The certificate of Gosper, secretary of state, marked it at the top "Census of 1874," and certified that it was taken "in the spring of 1874." It was published as the census of 1874, in the Nebraska house journal of 1875, and in Curley's Nebraska (page 98), which was deposited in the Congressional Library in February, 1875. Mr. Hawes must then have known that it was the first census of his State since the United States census of 1870. In his brief, made in 1876, as already stated, he described it as a census taken "about two years ago." He spoke of nineteen new counties made since that census. It is now known to us, and probably then was known to him, that part of those counties were organized in 1873.

Mr. Hawes made many loose and incorrect statements in that brief, but did not make any false statement as to the date of the State census. His mention of the incorrectness of the United States census of 1870 seems not to have been to show that it was so far wrong as, if righted, would have then allowed Nebraska an extra member, but only as a reason why, under the correct census of 1874, such member should then be allowed under it. Such was the view of the Legislature of Nebraska, as shown by the resolution of 1877, ante (30), and Mr. Crounse's bill, ante.

MR. MAJORS.

Mr. Majors first applied and filed a brief in 1878, between 31st May and 10th of June. By that time this census had been also published as the census of 1874 in the journals of Nebraska's Legislature for 1877, in the third volume of Johnson's Cyclopedia, deposited in the Congressional Library on the 6th of September, 1876, and in the annual report of the secretary of state of Nebraska for 1877.

He had the certified copy of the census (published as that of 1872 in H. R. 923, ante) in his possession. (59.) Welsh withdrew it from the House files for Mr. Majors's benefit.

On the 11th February, 1878 (136), Mr. Majors was in Washington urging his admission. Hawes was away sick. (161.) After Messrs. VALENTINE, Hawes, and Majors had testified in this investigation, when all supposed the original certificate of the State census, published in the report as that of 1872, was lost, it was found among the House records. It is the same which Hawes had in 1876, for the footing, "227,923," is in Hawes's handwriting, but the figure "4" in "1874," at the top and in the certificate had been changed to a "2." This is plain even to a casual observation. That certificate is attached to the original report of the majority and minority of the committee. When the report of Mr. Stenger was written, so little attention had been paid to the date that he left a blank therefor. It was filled with the figures "1872." His argument would have been practically the same had "1874" been inserted in lieu of "1872," for he demurred and stood upon the question of law.

Mr. LAPHAM (now Senator) wrote the minority report. In it he had interlinéations and erasures. He had Mr. Welch or Mr. Majors to have it copied. Who wrote the copy is not known. Welch is dead. When Mr. LAPHAM received the copy he added thereto:

"In confirmation of the views heretofore expressed, your committee refer to a portion of the affidavits submitted, hereto annexed, and also to a certified copy of the census of 1872, also hereto annexed."

He and those who agreed with him then signed his report. After that the affidavits and census certificate were attached. Who attached them we know not. After they were attached Mr. LAPHAM made the proper indorsement to identify the report, delivered it to the House, and it was printed. (161.) (See report 923 ante.)

The Hawes brief of 1876 spoke of the population of nineteen counties, made "since the last census" of the United States. The United States census of 1870 enumerated fifty-three counties, while that called the State census of 1872 (but really of 1874) enumerated but fifty-nine counties. But nine other counties existed in 1874 which were not enumerated in said census of 1874. How did he get the number nineteen? The laws of Nebraska created new counties which could not be organized till they contained two hundred inhabitants each. The censuses of 1870 and 1874 covered forty-nine organized counties. But sixty-eight counties were enumerated in the censuses of 1860, 1870, and 1874. Eighteen were created but not organized prior to the census of 1874. (Four of that eighteen were not organized till 1873, in January, April, May, and July.) One other, Calhoun, enumerated in 1860, was not enumerated in 1870 or 1874. Deducting from the whole number, sixty-eight, the organized number, forty-nine, makes nineteen for the remainder. (112.)

The statement in Hawes's brief may have been literally true when he spoke in 1876 that they had been organized "since the last census," but was obviously false when made by Majors's brief to have been organized "between 1870 and 1872." And mark that that was the first mention of "1872" as the date of the State census by any paper appearing in the case.

Mr. Majors copied Mr. Hawes's gross falsehood that these nineteen counties contained 60,000 inhabitants. In fact, by the census of 1874, all those not in the said forty-nine contained but 29,038 inhabitants. In his last brief he substituted 35,000 for 60,000. (179.) Neither Hawes nor Majors could name the counties. Hawes swore he had handed a list to the committeeman, Mr. Hurd. The tabulation at page 112, made long before the original certificate was found, named fifteen counties organized in 1871, 1872, and 1873, but never enumerated till 1874. When the orginal certificate of the census was found (on 22d July, 1882), the counties appeared numbered thereon, in pencil, from 1 to 44, inclusive, leaving those identical fifteen names unnumbered. (161.) Who made the numbers does not appear.

When Mr. Majors testified on the 6th of July, 1882, he said he was uncertain whether he had the actual possession of the original certificate printed in report 923, ante. (59.) But when Mr. Hawes was testifying on the 12th of July, 1882, about that original and was asked whether Richardson County was not "estimated" and not actually enumerated, he did not know. But Mr. Majors interrupted him with "my recollection is that it was." (105.)

When the original certificate of the State census was afterward found, the word "estimated" was found opposite "Richardson," but crossed so as not to be printed. (160.) This had been suggested in the minority report because its population was even 15,000. (41.)

Mr. Hawes swore that he left with this original certified census fifteen or twenty affidavits. (64-159.) Mr. Majors's brief quoted the exact language of Hawes as to the affiants, &c. He also swore that he remembered J. T. Allen's. He however used none but Hoile's, and obtained a new one from Allen. None other of the old lot appears but one of Governor Furnas. All the others used by Mr. Majors were dated in 1878, and no paper attached mentioned any date for the State census.

The minority report in this Congress against seating Mr. Majors was submitted to the committee on the 18th of February.

On that day the following dispatch came to Washington, District of Columbia, namely:

LINCOLN, February 18, 1882.

To THOS. J. MANNERS,
National Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

No State census taken in Nebraska for 1872.

S. J. ALEXANDER,
Secretary of State.

On the same day the office here notified the office at Lincoln that "Thos. J. Manners" was not found, and received reply that that dispatch was to "Thos. J. Majors." On the 20th of February, 1882, it was delivered to Mr. Majors. He claimed that the dispatch was "bulled" or erroneous, and had it duplicated. Its duplicate was delivered to him on the 22d of February, 1882.

On that day he received two other dispatches; each was dated 22d February, 1882, at Lincoln, Nebraska, addressed to Thos. J. Majors, at the National Hotel here, and signed by S. J. Alexander, secretary of state. The first was:

"No census taken for 1870; relying on United States to take same. No blanks furnished in 1871."

The other was:

"The first census taken, according to our records, was in seventy-four. Telegraph now what you want."

He avoided showing the dispatch of the 20th February to Messrs. CULBERSON and WILLITS, though asked to do so, claiming that it was unintelligible. (163-166, 164.)

On the same day—20th February, 1882—he procured the affidavits of Hawes and George H. Roberts, ex-attorney-general of Nebraska. Hawes's affidavit stated:

"That no census was ever taken by the State authorities until 1872; that a certified copy of that census was filed before the Judiciary Committee of the Forty-fourth Congress, over the seal of the secretary of state. Affiant desired to have the census of 1874 filed, but did not obtain it. Affidavits were filed to this effect at the time and are now on the files of the committee, showing the number of school children and other data in reference to the population of some of the leading counties." (39.)

Roberts's affidavit first explained why the State census was not taken in 1870 and 1871, and then said:

"That this affiant, as attorney-general of said State, at the request of the secretary of state thereof, prepared in the latter part of the year 1871 a circular letter of instructions to the various precinct assessors of said State, and in conformity with the provisions of the act of 1869, above referred to, under the provisions of which a fairly accurate enumeration of the inhabitants of said State was had in the year 1872.

"And further affiant saith not."

Mr. Hawes swore that before making his affidavit of the 20th of February he and Mr. Majors had this conversation, namely:

"MAJORS. I want you to make an affidavit in relation to my case in the House. I want to fix the date of the census.

"HAWES. It was called the census of 1872.

"MAJORS. When was it taken?"

Hawes said he could only say that it was called the census of 1872, and that that was all he knew. And Mr. Majors replied, "That is all I want to know." (55.)

Mr. Majors showed Mr. WILLITS the dispatch of Alexander, dated 22d February, "No census taken for 1870; relying on United States to take the same. No blanks furnished in 1871." But being told that was not satisfactory, he obtained, by Mr. VALENTINE, Alexander's certificate, over the great seal of state, as follows:

STATE OF NEBRASKA,
Secretary of State:

LINCOLN, March 1, 1882.

DEAR SIR: No State enumeration under act of Legislature approved February, 1869, until 1872; a certified copy of which was furnished under seal of State by my predecessor, J. J. Gosper.

[SEAL.] S. J. ALEXANDER,
Secretary of State

Hon. E. K. VALENTINE, M. C., Washington.

Thus fortified, Mr. Majors, concealing the knowledge that no State census was taken till 1874, allowed the committee to be deceived by his papers, and on the 24th of March, 1882, to agree to report in his favor. And they did so report on the 1st of April, 1882.

These reports, majority and minority, were published and accessible to everybody interested. Mr. Majors had them. When, on the 11th of April, it was charged that this census of 1872 was the true census of 1874, and that none was taken in 1872, what was Mr. Majors's conduct? He wrote and telegraphed Alexander. Neither of them produces the letter nor telegram, though asked to do so. Majors swears that he sent Alexander the report and wrote him (2-12-61)—

"That the question had been raised as to whether it was the census of 1872 or the census of 1874, and urged upon him the necessity of corroborating my (his) statement or the attitude which I (he) was in, because that was to me (him) the vital question." (61.)

On the 13th of April he telegraphed Alexander: "Stay reply to census inquiries; see letter and Schwenk."

He got Schwenk to go to Nebraska, after furnishing him a copy of the reports and explaining fully the situation. Schwenk arrived at Lincoln on the evening of the 15th of April, 1882. He told Alexander what was wanted, and why, and gave him Majors's letter. Alexander informed him that he had a letter from Majors that day, but that he did not know whether the printed copy cut from the report and sent him by Majors was the census of 1872. But after discussion Alexander agreed to copy it, leaving the figures "1872" in the certificate blank. He did so copy it, leaving such blank, and without the caption, "Census of 1872," and delivered it duly sealed by the great seal of state to Schwenk, he promising to write to Majors explaining why Alexander would not put in the date. Schwenk swore that he so wrote to Majors, and sent him with his letter the paper blank. (See his testimony.) Majors swears that he destroyed the letter, but that it contained no such statement and that the paper reached him with the date "1872" inserted. Alexander swore that he expected Majors to fill it up on information as to the true date which he might acquire here, and show it only to one member of this committee. (4.)

Schwenk swore that he did not expect that Majors would show it to any one but Mr. HAMMOND, thinking that if he was convinced opposition would cease. That certificate was dated 15th of April, 1882. On that day Schwenk telegraphed Majors: "Got home to-night, found all well." They testified that it had been agreed that Schwenk should telegraph that all was well if he got the satisfactory papers. The certificate was somewhat delayed. On the 20th of April, Alexander telegraphed Majors: "The certificate was forwarded the 16th." It had arrived here on the 18th at 10 o'clock p. m. Upon receiving it Majors opened it, told Hawes that it was the census of 1872, but did not show it to him. Afterward he came to the Capitol and delivered it to Mr. WILLITS, of the Judiciary Committee.

But though this certificate was so duly solemnized, the evidence of the committee showed it was false, and on the 28th of April, 1882, the resolution to request the House for authority to investigate was passed in committee as stated.

Mr. Majors, in a carefully prepared written statement put in evidence on the 12th of July, 1882, made this statement, namely:

"Learning that there was still a doubt about the census in question, I concluded I would go home and personally examine the records, of which fact I notified Judge WILLITS and Hon. E. K. VALENTINE. On my way to Nebraska I saw by the dispatches that the report was, by the request of the chairman, recommitted; and after my arrival at home, by a letter from the secretary of state, I learned that the census was not perfected in 1872, whereupon I wrote Mr. VALENTINE, so informing him. This was the first information that came to me that the certificate of the secretary of state was not genuine.

"If I had thought that there was even a suspicion that I had perpetrated this fraud I would have at once returned to Washington and demanded an investigation. That I was anxious, earnest, and possibly overzealous in my efforts to supply the committee with all needed information required to satisfy them of the justice of the State's claim to an additional Representative in Congress, which was required of me in conformity with the demands of my State, is doubtless true; but that I ever perpetrated this fraud and deception upon the committee knowingly I most solemnly deny." (101.)

Alexander had written him the exact facts. (104.) On the 13th of May, 1882, Schwenk had written him.

The letter exhibited from Schwenk reads as follows (in print):

"House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., 188 "); dated in writing May 15, and "2" after the 8: "Friend Tom: Val. seen the commity to-day, and they will not hold off any longer than Monday, when they will introduce their resolution. I have written to Alexander, and he must fix up an old copy, pretending to be from Gosper, so that he can produce it, and as Pat has filed his affidavit when you was here, it will bear out the copy, and Alex. can produce it and say that he took this for correct, as Pat will say that he paid Gosper $15 for the certificate, and that Gosper stated that he had to write to every county clerk, it will make a plausible story. Now, Tom, don't fail to attend to this. I have not mentioned anything to anybody, so I need not to be mentioned in connection with the matter, and it will cause no contradictory statement. Now, Tom, don't fail with this matter, and see that Sy. attends to this. Yours, Schwenk. P. S.—Destroy this." (106.)

Mr. Majors handed the letter to Alexander, the secretary of state, to read. He declined reading it, saying he presumed he knew its contents, as he had had a letter from Schwenk. Mr. Majors had testified on the 6th of July and said nothing about that letter. He filed his written statement, dated 12th July, and said nothing on the subject. It was after that that a direct question forced its production. After he ceased and another witness (Hawes) had testified and told nothing about it, Mr. Majors asked to make this statement about that matter and it was allowed:

"Mr. MAJORS. I expect that I ought to say this, in reference to this last letter, as to why I did not produce it before. It was written to me in a confidential way, and I had some hesitation—some compunctions of conscience—about presenting it, and it is purely accidental that I happened to have that letter with me. I presume my proper course would have been to have sent that letter to the committee when I first received it, but my reason for not doing that was that I had already informed Judge VALENTINE of the exact state of facts as they were, in a previous letter that I had written to him, being the one he has testified to this morning.

"By Mr. HAMMOND:

"Question. Do you mean in another than the one you have already mentioned?

"Answer. No, sir; the same one, and I wish he could lay his hand upon it. I informed Mr. VALENTINE about the circumstances.

"Q. State your recollection of the words of that letter.

"A. My recollection is—though I am not positive about it—that I recited the facts I had obtained, corroborating exactly the facts. They had always been discussed between Judge Valentine and myself, and accepted as the census returns of 1872, neither of us having had a doubt about it. I went home without any doubt on the question. My recollection is that I stated to him that 'the worst possible fears had been realized,' or something of that kind. That is my recollection of the substance of that letter. Therefore, feeling that the committee, through him, had a knowledge of the facts, I allowed the matter to drop.

"Q. Did he ever inform you that he had communicated it to the committee?

"A. No, sir; he did not. But then I had no doubt but what he would, and he also says that he did. Judge Hawes makes a suggestion to me that reminds me of another fact. When I showed him the letter, I did it with reference to presenting it, and I also presented the letter to Judge VALENTINE.

"Q. When did you show it to them?

"A. My recollection is that I showed it to Mr. Hawes on last Saturday, and Mr. VALENTINE last Sunday. Mr. Hawes advised me not to present it at that time.

"Mr. HAWES. The reason I did that was because it was a private and confidential letter." (108.)

Soon after testifying, on the 12th of July, 1882, Mr. Majors left Washington. Mr. Hawes appeared as his attorney at each subsequent meeting of the sub-committee during last session. (154.) The evidence was printed for the use of the committee during last session, and some copies were distributed. Many of its points have been published throughout the country, yet no testimony has been offered this session but the following:

Mr. Oliver, an attorney at law in Washington, asked the committee to examine a Mr. Davis and General Bowen to show that when Mr. Majors received the certified census in writing from Alexander the date was inserted, and not blank, as Schwenk had testified. (168.)

He was examined. His testimony was plainly manufactured by him for the occasion and without understanding the situation. Its point was that he and General Bower, of Nebraska, were here with Mr. Majors when he received and opened the envelope containing the paper, and spoke of its date apparently having been tampered with by erasure.

The fact is that the certificate has no such appearance, that General Bowen was not here after the 3d of March, 1882, and the certificate of Alexander was not made till the 15th of April, 1882. (See evidence of Davis and Bowen.)

So much for Mr. Majors.

MR. VALENTINE.

When Mr. Majors came to this Congress he procured Mr. VALENTINE to present the case to the Judiciary Committee upon the false census printed in report 923. Although that census had by that time been also published as the census of 1874 in the Nebraska legislative journal of 1879, in Johnson's Nebraska, and in the report of Alexander, secretary of state, it does not appear that Mr. VALENTINE knew that it was, or that he had seen either of those publications of it. He swore that he had not.

PAT. O. HAWES.

The brief filed by Mr. Hawes in 1876 contained several false statements. We mention some:

1. That the State caused her census to be taken by a law passed in 1872, because the United States census of 1870 was believed to be wrong. (73.)

2. That in "the unorganized territory in 1860, according to the eighth census, there were 1,765 inhabitants; ten years afterward, in the same territory, under the ninth census of 1870, we have a report of only 235 inhabitants." (74.)

3. "Since that time (1870) there have been organized out of this unorganized territory nineteen different counties, showing under the State census a population of nearly 60,000." (74.) The footing of the census, 227,684, was nearly 4,000 too large. All these were repeated in Mr. Majors's brief in 1878 (80), except that "since that time" 1870 was made to read "between 1870 and 1872." They were accepted by the committee as true, and the reports, majority and minority, of 1878 so treated them. (See report, page 30, of evidence.) They were accepted in this Congress as true until the report of the minority. Then it appeared that a law of February, 1869, required a State census to be taken by the county officers in that month of each year, and no other law had been passed on the subject. (40.) It showed that fifteen counties were in this census, called that of 1872, which were not in that of 1870, and that part of them were not organized till 1873, and showed the law for organizing new counties. (41-42.)

This excited inquiry. Instead of the unorganized territory in 1860 being "the same territory" as was called unorganized territory in 1870, nineteen new counties had been enumerated, organized out of that territory, and as such in 1870, which were not in existence in 1860 (Compendium Ninth Census, 68). And other errors in these statements have been already pointed out. Yet while so near the truth that minority report did not disclose the false date of the census of 1874. As stated, it had not been suspected when the reports were made on the 1st of April, 1882.

But what was then unknown to the committee we have shown was known to Mr. Majors. At least he had been put upon notice as early as the 22d February, 1882, even if he did not change the date of the original census in 1878 from "1874" to "1872."

And we believe Mr. Hawes, after he learned that the census was accepted as that of 1872, undertook to keep up that false understanding, knowing it was false.

It would be hard to believe that he could have forgotten so essential a fact in a case begun by him. He knew well the importance of the date. He was interested in having it 1872. Dr. Schwenk swore that Mr. Majors told him not to tell Hawes about his going to Nebraska, because Hawes was "hanging around here with the expectancy that if he, Majors, got into Congress Hawes would come in for his pay." (145.) That "pay" would have been over $10,000. To show what Mr. Hawes thought we quote from his evidence, page 159:

"When I came here last winter, in February, I had some conversation with one or two gentlemen from Nebraska, and I said that from what I could understand Colonel Majors would be seated in this Congress; that I had consulted with leading Senators on the Republican side of the House and one or two Democratic Senators, and they informed me that whatever the House would do in the matter the Senate would also do, for the reason that it was a subject that attached and related to the House itself, and that as the House, under the Constitution of the United States, was the sole judge of its members, they would concede anything to the House that it would claim, and that when the bill would pass the House granting an additional Representative to the State of Nebraska and authorizing the seating of Colonel Majors, I proposed getting some of my friends in the House to amend the act before it would get to the Senate, providing that I should be allowed my pay as a member of the Forty-fourth Congress.

"Some of Colonel Majors's friends heard of it, became indignant about it, and said it would spoil the whole thing, and kill it entirely. I said I did not care whether it did or not; that I had spent two years of my life and a good deal of money in pressing the claim of Nebraska, and had just as good a right to be paid as Tom Majors or anybody else. We had some words—that is we talked it over pleasantly, and finally I told him I would give that idea up. If he got in I would take my chances on getting paid, and I thought that would be the end of it, but it made a sort of unfriendly relation between us. I was in his room frequently, but there was not that cordial relation that ought to have existed between us. I think that if Colonel Majors had consulted me about this whole matter there never would have been this difficulty."

When informed by Mr. Majors that he needed evidence, he made the affidavit already quoted, calling it the census of 1872, when he knew it was not.

He argued that this census could not have been taken in 1864, because the officers were not elected till November (53, 54), ignorant of the fact that the law required the officers in office to take it in the spring of each year. He testified that:

"The census that we had here, on the basis that I claimed from, was taken at odd times all the way from 1871 and 1872 until that copy was filed. It was not taken in one year." (53, 54.)

That may have been true of the "certificates" filed by him originally, but now gone. But he knew that Mr. Majors was now claiming on a "certificate" saying it was all taken in the spring of 1872.

He said he wrote his affidavit and he testified about it as follows:

"Question. While you were making the affidavit, why did you not explain to the committee that what you produced as the census of 1872 was taken in 1872 and 1873, and that there was nothing complete in the office?

"Answer. That was not what Tom Majors said he wanted.

"Q. What did Majors say he wanted.

"A. I will tell you. I met Tom Majors at the National Hotel, and he said: 'I want you to make an affidavit in relation to my case at the House. I want to fix the date of the census.' Says I, 'It was called the census of 1872.' He said, 'When was it taken?' I said that I could only say that it was called the census of 1872, and I told him that was all I knew. Said he, 'That is all I want to know.'

"Q. Why did you not state in the affidavit that it was called the census of 1872?

"A. It is the census of 1872 practically. It was commenced in 1872 and did not close up until 1874—part in 1872 and part in 1873—just as I told you, and just as John Gosper says; because it was commenced then, like the Forty-fourth Congress. It is called the Forty-fourth Congress, though it lasts two years.

"Q. You say further in your affidavit, 'I desired to have the census of 1874 filed, but did not obtain it.'

"A. I wanted the census taken after the assessors were elected in the fall of 1874, so that I could see the difference between the population when that census was taken and this census which I filed. I wanted to see the growth of the State, and from the growth of the State from the time this was taken to the time that was taken, to have further proof as to this census.

"Q. You did not file that because you could not obtain it?

"A. I tried to get it. They said it was not complete. That was the answer I met with. I wanted to say, Mr. HAMMOND, about the census of 1874, under the provisions of the census of 1874—from the time the assessors came in up to the time their taking closed—it would show the difference in the increase in the population from the time the first census was commenced, and show the discrepancy between that and the census of the Government.

"Q. You further say in that affidavit, 'Affidavits were filed to this effect at the time;' that is, to the effect that you could not get the census of 1874.

"A. I did not intend to say that." (55.)

He had sworn on the 6th of July that Gosper, the secretary of state, who certified the census, had told him before he got his certificate of 20th of November, 1874, "that that census had been taken from the commencement up to the time it was filed" (53); he subsequently stated that he supposed it was called the census of 1874 in the books, because not completed till 1874, and by Gosper called that of 1872, because begun in 1872. (72.)

On the 15th of July he was again examined, and testified as follows, at page 106:

"The fact that the census was compiled in 1874 by Gosper does not make it the census of 1874.

"Question. Everybody else seems to admit that what we have is not a census of 1872 but that of 1874. How is it that you vary from everybody?

"Answer. No, I do not vary from everybody else. It is called the census of 1872, because it was compiled then first.

"Q. Everybody else seems to concede that it was not taken until the spring of 1874.

"A. I never saw the figures, but I have seen men who are of good reputation for truth and veracity who have told me that they have examined the returns.

"Q. But not of all the State?

"A. But it commenced in 1872.

"Q. And that is the reason you insist upon its being the census of 1872?

"A. Yes, sir; my theory is that it was taken all the time from 1872 to 1874.

"Q. So I understand; but you differ from everybody else.

"A. You take one of these buildings down here, for instance, and the builder puts the date upon it on which it was commenced; they always put the date on when they commence, and never that on which the house is completed. I have observed that, and there is the same reason in calling that the census of 1874 that there would be in dating the house at the time of its completion.

"Q. But the question at issue is, when did the enumeration occur?

"A. Well, it occurred as much in 1872 as it did in any year after that up to 1874.

"Q. That is your opinion?

"A. Well, is it not an easy matter to send for Alexander and have him give the exact returns?"

He advised Mr. Majors not to show that vile letter of Dr. Schwenk, "because it was private and confidential." (108.)

S. J. ALEXANDER, SECRETARY OF STATE.

He was the keeper of the great seal of the State of Nebraska, and of its records. He had searched and found no census compiled in 1872, nor before 1874, and so telegraphed Mr. Majors, February, 1882. The returns of but nine counties for 1872 were in his office (123, 124, 125), and they were wholly unlike those in the same counties for 1874. He had published this census as that of 1874 in his last official report, copied from the report of his predecessor. It was published as that of 1874 in the State journals. He knew the issue, and yet sent a telegram to Valentine (165) to make us believe it was taken in 1872, and followed that by a certificate dated 1st March, 1882, for the same purpose, and attached thereto the great seal. (48.)

He telegraphed Mr. Majors, 22d of February, 1882: "The first census taken, according to our records, was in '74." (164.) He corresponded with him by telegram and letters, and can produce none of them. In April, 1882, he was told by two letters from Mr. Majors what he needed, and deliberately attached his seal to a copy of the printed census which was in question, except that he left the date blank, expecting it to be filled up by Mr. Majors to meet the exigencies of the situation. (See his testimony, page 4.) Comment is useless.

DR. SCHWENK.

It is not material whether Dr. Schwenk filled the blank or transmitted it to Mr. Majors to be filled. Under the circumstances he was particeps criminis to issuing the paper, so solemnized, to be so used. If it was only to be shown to one member of the committee, as he swears (140-142-143-144-147), the wrong was the same. His letter to Mr. Majors (103) forbids any charitable construction on his connection with this matter.

GEORGE H. ROBERTS.

It will be remembered that Hawes's briefs called attention to an affidavit of "Hon. George H. Roberts, attorney-general of the State" (74); that Majors's brief did the same (80); but that instead of producing the one used by Hawes, Majors had another made on the 9th of March, 1878 (see it in full at page 13). It said "affiant was a resident of Otoe County at the time of taking the last census; that owing to the detention of the books and papers necessary to commence the taking of the census of said county of Otoe, that the work was hurriedly and very imperfectly and inaccurately taken, and that affiant has good reason to believe, and does believe, that the same state of facts existed in every county in the State." (13.)

The minority report in this Congress disclosed that the census of Otoe County, therein mentioned by him, by the United States in 1870, showed 12,342 population, while the State census of 1872, so called, showed a population of 12,380. (41.)

In that affidavit, dated 9th March, 1878, he swore that "he is, and for nearly six years has been, the attorney-general of the State of Nebraska." (13.) The last stated that he was attorney-general in 1871 and 1872. (39.) The fact is he became attorney-general in January, 1871, was succeeded by Mr. Webster in January, 1873, and was re-elected in October, 1874, and qualified in January, 1875. (See house journals of Nebraska.)

In that of 1878 he swore that he had "made a canvass of the State every year since 1870, and has resided for a long time past in the extreme western portion of the State, and that he has enlarged facilities for forming an accurate judgment of the population of the State." (13.) In that made the 20th of February, 1882, he swore "that this affiant, as attorney-general of said State, at the request of the secretary of state thereof, prepared, in the latter part of the year 1871, a circular letter of instructions to the various precinct assessors of said State, and in conformity with the provisions of the act of 1869, above referred to, under the provisions of which a fairly accurate enumeration of the inhabitants of said State was had in the year 1872." (40.) He could have had no other purpose than to have this committee act upon the census, then before it at Majors's instance, as the State census of 1872.

Now, we have the only returns of any census of 1872 in the secretary of state's office, in which such returns belong. (42.) They are of nine counties. We give their names and population by the enumerations of the United States in 1870 and of the State in 1872, 1874, and 1875, respectively:

Counties.	1870.	1872.	1874.	1875.
Boone	.....	227	798	966
Buffalo	193	939	2,106	2,861
Cedar	1,032	1,208	1,817	*1,979

Total	3,596	7,815	19,135	20,605

*Estimated.

Nor do we understand how Mr. Roberts could believe that the census before this committee, in February, 1882, was that taken in 1872, when we consider that he canvassed the State year by year from 1870 to 1878, and this was constantly a question in Nebraska's politics; that besides this census of 1874 (called here falsely that of 1872) censuses had been taken in 1875 and 1876, and the State Legislature had, in 1877, passed a resolution as to a contingent member of Congress, based on these last censuses, and that the census of 1872, taken during his term of office and under his special direction, was manifestly incomplete and never compiled.

The majority report of 1st April, 1882, called attention to five counties whose enumeration for 1870 seemed to them to be grossly wrong. (7.) The minority report sought to answer that by facts from Johnson's Nebraska. (42.) One of those counties was Adams. Johnson had declared that it was organized on the 12th of December, 1871, that it had had 19 inhabitants in 1870 and 3,096 in 1875; that the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad during the summer of 1871 went through the county to its junction with the Union Pacific Railroad, and was completed to the county seat, Juniata, in June, 1872, and that the Saint Joe and Denver Railroad joined the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad in 1873 at Hastings. (Johnson's Nebraska, 193, 195, 196.) And it stated that A. H. Bowen was, on the 12th December, 1871, elected superintendent of schools in that county. (Id., 195.)

The letter of Mr. Roberts to General A. H. Bowen on the subject, dated 23d March, 1882, asked him to state that he was the superintendent of schools for that county in the affidavit which he was asked to make. Either Mr. Roberts knew that fact from memory or from reading it. If from memory, he ought to have remembered the fact that in December, 1871, it had barely two hundred inhabitants (42), and could not, in February, 1872, when, if at all, the census of that year was taken, have had 2,694 inhabitants. If he read it, he must have read the other facts or others like them. In his letter of 23d March, 1882, to Bowen he stated as a fact that its population was but nineteen in 1870 and in 1872 2,694, and said, "We do not believe that this increase took place within the time mentioned, but, on the contrary, believe that the population of Adams in 1870 was nearly as great as it was in 1872." We think he knew that no such increase had taken place between the census of 1870 and the year 1872. Why was that letter "confidential?" Why was the information to be used only in argument?

The committee did not agree to report until the next day, the 24th of March.

Then, in an undated postscript, he told Bowen of the result so favorable to Majors, and urged him to send the affidavit if it could be made. Why did he doubt whether it could be made?

And then he added another postscript that "whatever statement made will be held in the hands of our friends, and will not be a matter of record."

We recall that Mr. Alexander swore that he expected his false certificate of 15th April, 1882, to be shown to but one member of this committee (4); that Schwenk so intended and was indignant because it was shown to the whole committee. (140, 142, 143, 144, 147.)

Much light is now cast upon the secrecy promised in Mr. Roberts's letter, and the secrecy expected by Alexander and Schwenk. Each illuminates the other. (See Bowen's evidence, 175.)

What further light may be cast by the last letter from Roberts to Bowen, if Bowen's evidence correctly describes its purport, can but intensify the clearness of our convictions as to Mr. Roberts's connection with this matter.

CONCLUSION.

We report, therefore, that Thomas J. Majors is responsible for the misinformation which induced this committee to make the report of 1st April, 1882 (No. 911, first session Forty-seventh Congress), and that he was aided therein by S. J. Alexander, secretary of state of Nebraska, by Pat. O. Hawes, and Dr. P. Schwenk and George H. Roberts. And we report that the testimony of Davis is false.

And we ask the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be, and he is hereby, required to furnish a printed copy of this report, including the evidence, to each of the following officers: The district attorney of the District of Columbia, the Attorney-General of the United States, and the governor of the State of Nebraska, that they may take such action as they may deem suitable to the gravity of the wrongs committed by the persons whose conduct is in this "conclusion" set forth.

EXHIBIT A.

FORTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
In the House of Representatives, June 21, 1882.

Whereas since the report of the Committee on the Judiciary in favor of seating Mr. Majors as an additional member of the House of Representatives from Nebraska was made to the House doubts have arisen as to whether what was presented to the committee as a duly certified copy of the census of that State for the year 1872 was not in fact its census of 1874, and whether any census of that State had been taken and compiled for 1872; and

Whereas the basis of that report was the opinion that the aggregate population of Nebraska, shown by the certified copy of the census produced, was its population for 1872, and not for 1874:

Resolved, That said bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, with power to send for persons and papers, to learn the facts touching this matter, and that it report at its earliest convenience, at any time, how this misinformation occurred, and who is responsible therefor.

Attest:

EWD. McPHERSON, Clerk.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Expecting that the whole report would be read, I had not intended to enter into any explanation whatever of this matter. Nor shall I now go fully into it, unless some objection shall be made to the conclusion at which the Committee on the Judiciary have arrived and the resolution reported by the committee.

We were plainly imposed upon by false testimony. The imposition was discovered and promptly reported to the House, and the House authorized us to inquire who was responsible for the imposition, and to that end to send for persons and papers.

We have taken a volume of testimony, consisting of one hundred and eighty or more printed pages. We have examined every witness suggested by any party implicated. These parties have all been examined, some of them over and over again. This testimony has all been in print for distribution for a month past, most of it ever since the last session of Congress. Up to this day, so far as I know, there has been no intimation of opposition to be made on the floor of this House to the resolution of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The conclusion that we arrived at was that Thomas J. Majors is responsible for the misinformation which induced the committee to make the report on the 1st of April, 1882; and that he was aided therein by S. J. Alexander, secretary of state of Nebraska, by Pat. O. Hawes, Dr. P. Schwenk, and George H. Roberts. And we report that the testimony of Davis was false. We ask the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be, and he is hereby, required to furnish a printed copy of this report, including the evidence, to each of the following officers: The district attorney of the District of Columbia, the Attorney-General of the United States, and the governor of the State of Nebraska, that they may take such action as they may deem suitable to the gravity of the wrongs committed by the persons whose conduct is in this "conclusion" set forth.

I will state, in short, that the wrongs complained of were these: In order to make the argument good in favor of an additional member from Nebraska it became important to show that the census of that State taken by the United States in 1870 was grossly wrong; that it had been imperfectly taken, and that had it been correctly taken the State would have been entitled to two members in this House instead of one.

The proof submitted to make that claim good was what purported to be a census taken by the State in 1872 and certified by the secretary of that State. It turns out and is proved beyond controversy that the census so certified was the census of 1874, and that the "4" in the certificate of the secretary of state was changed to a "2" in order to make it appear that it was a census taken two years nearer the time of the United States census of 1870 than it was actually taken.

The committee, upon the evidence before them, have reported that Mr. Majors made that change, and the argument and reasons of the committee for that report are contained in the report submitted to the House. They also find that Mr. Hawes aided Majors in concealing that change after he knew it was made.

The substance of that part of the testimony is this: Hawes swears that he was called on by Majors to make an affidavit that that was the census of 1872; that he told Majors that it was "so called," and that was all he knew about it; that Majors said, "Very well; that is all I want to know." Hawes made the affidavit, and when we asked him why he did not explain that it was "so called," he undertook to avoid it by this kind of testimony: He says, "It was begun in 1872 and taken all the way along up to 1874; and we called it 1872, like you call a public building commenced this year (1882) and not finished until ten years from now a building of 1882."

The way Mr. Schwenk became connected with it was this: After the committee made its report (it was before we had discovered this imposition), upon inquiry about the State census of 1871, Mr. Alexander was called on and certified that there was no census taken in 1871. He sent an official certificate, over the seal of the State, that there was no census taken till 1872, of which we had a certified copy over the signature of his predecessor and the State seal. It turned out that Alexander had prior to that time telegraphed to Mr. Majors that there was no State census taken till 1874. Majors, finding that trouble, sent Schwenk as a messenger to Alexander with a letter, and the product of it all was that Alexander copied the old bogus census which we had in print before us and certified it to be the census of 1872. He swears that when he certified it he refused to put in the year, telling Schwenk that he did not know that that was the right year, but he swore that he knew it might be filled up to suit the case; that he supposed Mr. Majors had evidence enough here on which he could fill the blank.

Schwenk swears that he delivered it to Majors in blank. It was delivered to us filled up. Majors swears that he received it filled up; but all agree that it was not filled up when it left the secretary of state's office. The handwriting shows that it was not filled up by Alexander before it left with the great seal of Nebraska on it. When Majors found out that we had the official report of this man Alexander published last year, that that was the census of 1874, and that there was no census of 1872 taken; that we had it printed in six books, four of them published by authority of the State of Nebraska, that it was the census of 1874; finding that they were about to be discovered, he (Majors) went out to see Alexander. Schwenk wrote to him from here to Lincoln, Nebraska, a letter, the vile language of which I will not quote, but the substance of which was a request that Alexander copy off that old, false certificate and make it conform to what it really was in print; that here Hawes's affidavit would make it a plausible thing, and to say nothing about it, that he and Majors might not be caught in any contradictions of each other. And he asked him to burn that letter. That letter by fatality was preserved, and got into the hands of the committee. I take no time to state Roberts's connection with this matter, nor to expose Davis's falsehoods. I have stated the substance of this whole matter. We did not feel at liberty as a Judiciary Committee to investigate what crimes, if any, had been committed. We thought that was the province of the officer whose business it is to prosecute; that we would fulfill our duty in reporting to the House that these men were responsible for this fraud and this wrong, and asking the House to refer to the prosecuting officers the questions as to what action ought to be taken in the premises.

Mr. Speaker, unless some opposition be manifested to this report and resolution I do not wish to occupy further time. I will, however, reserve the remainder of my time to see whether there be any opposition. In the mean time if there be any member of the Judiciary Committee or other person who would like to say anything upon this subject I would be glad to have him speak.

I ask the Clerk to read from page 16 of the report the two paragraphs under the heading "conclusion."

The Clerk read as follows:

We report, therefore, that Thomas J. Majors is responsible for the misinformation which induced this committee to make the report of 1st April, 1882 (No. 911, first session Forty-seventh Congress), and that he was aided therein by S. J. Alexander, secretary of state of Nebraska, by Pat. O. Hawes, and Dr. P. Schwenk and George H. Roberts. And we report that the testimony of Davis is false.

And we ask the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be, and he is hereby, required to furnish a printed copy of this report, including the evidence, to each of the following officers, the district attorney of the District of Columbia, the Attorney-General of the United States, and the governor of the State of Nebraska, that they may take such action as they may deem suitable to the gravity of the wrongs committed by the persons whose conduct is in this "conclusion" set forth.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. If no gentleman desires to be heard upon this matter I wish to occupy no further time in its statement and will call the previous question on the adoption of the resolution just read.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I suggest that the paragraph just read by the Clerk, preceding the resolution submitted by the committee and containing the names of persons referred to in the resolution, be considered a part of the resolution.

There was no objection.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANDERSON MERCHANT.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration at this time a bill which has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary to remove the political disabilities of Anderson Merchant.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3552) to remove the legal and political disabilities of Anderson D. Merchant, now of New York, but formerly of Georgia.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That all legal and political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States be, and the same are hereby, removed from Anderson D. Merchant, now of New York, but formerly of Georgia.

The amendments reported by the committee to strike out in the title and in the bill the letter "D" after "Alexander," and to strike out in the title and in the bill the word "Georgia" and insert "Virginia," were agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Has this bill been reported from a committee?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANNING. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has this man asked for the removal of his disabilities?

Mr. RANDALL. The report will answer that question. As it is brief, I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3552) for the relief of Anderson Merchant, having considered the same, respectfully report:

That Anderson Merchant was appointed a lieutenant of artillery, United States Army, in 1848, and served until 1861, when his resignation was accepted.

He served in the confederate army, reaching the rank of colonel.

Since 1865 he has resided in New York city, and has been engaged in mercantile pursuits. Mr. Anderson has filed a written application to have his disabilities removed.

The committee recommend that the bill do pass, with the following amendment: On sixth line, strike out letter "D" between the word "Anderson" and the word "Merchant;" and on seventh line, strike out the word "Georgia" and insert in its place the word "Virginia."

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I see that this bill provides for the removal of "legal and political disabilities." I do not know exactly what is meant by "legal" disabilities.

Mr. MANNING. The bill is drawn I believe in conformity to the statute.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Might not "legal disabilities" cover some disability which Congress would not care to interfere with?

Mr. MANNING. It covers nothing but disabilities incurred by this man on account of having been an officer of the United States before the war, and afterward a soldier of the confederate army.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Let me inquire whether it would not be sufficient to provide for the removal of the disabilities incurred, leaving out the qualifying terms?

Mr. MANNING. In a moment I will look at the constitutional provision.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It is not a matter I care about; rather a matter of form.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the House for consideration.

Mr. MANNING. It was drawn in conformity to the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. Under the Constitution this bill requires a two-third vote.

The bill was passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. TALBOTT, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6957) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. SHERWIN. I now call up the special order, being the bill (H. R. 6158) to aid in the support of common schools.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to inquire, Mr. Speaker, whether the special order for the bill granting pensions to the soldiers of the Mexican and Florida wars does not take precedence of the special order referred to by the gentleman from Illinois?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the bill reported by the Committee on Education and Labor by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SHERWIN] is prior in time.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. This bill was made the special order on the 20th of January, while the other was made the special order for the first Tuesday of February.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to take up and consider at this time a bridge bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield for that purpose?

Mr. SHERWIN. I can not yield.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me inquire, Mr. Speaker, whether this bill is not subject to the point of order that it must, under the rule, have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is a special order.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the special order?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It is provided in the special order that it shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and that was done at my suggestion.

Mr. SPRINGER. As I understand, then, the bill is up for consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is right if it is to be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the order as it appears upon the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 20th day of January, 1883, immediately after the morning hour, be assigned for the consideration in the House, as in Committee of the Whole, of H. R. 6158 (Report 1214) a bill to aid in the support of common schools, to be continued from day to day until completed, subject only to revenue and appropriation bills and prior orders.

Mr. SPRINGER. I should like to know whether it is intended by the gentleman from Illinois to press this bill to a final vote to-day?

Mr. SHERWIN. I do not expect a vote to-day.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Let the bill be read before the debate begins.

Mr. SPRINGER. I should like to have a definite answer, so it may go into the RECORD as to whether this bill is to be pressed to a final vote to-day.

Mr. SHERWIN. No; we will not press it to a vote to-day. Now, Mr. Speaker, let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas it appears from the Tenth Census that one-eighth of the people of the United States are totally illiterate, and it seems that those States in which illiteracy exists to the greatest extent are not at present able to provide by local and State taxation for the adequate support of common schools to meet the emergency; and

Whereas the general welfare and perpetuity of our whole country depend upon the intelligence of all its citizens, and it is deemed to be the duty of the General Government to aid temporarily in the support of common schools: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c.*, That for five years next after the passage of this act there shall be annually appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000,000 to aid in the support of free common schools, which amount shall be known as the common-school fund.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall annually apportion to the several States and Territories the said sum of $10,000,000, according to the number of their respective populations of ten years old and upward who can not read and write, as shown by the Tenth Census of the United States, which report shall be submitted to the Commissioner of Education.

SEC. 3. That before any State or Territory shall be entitled to receive its share of said fund it shall have provided by law for the free common-school education of all its children of school age, without distinction of color, for at least three months in each year, from the funds provided for schools under the laws of said State or Territory; and in no case shall any State or Territory be allowed out of said fund a greater sum than such State or Territory shall have expended during the previous year for the common-school education of the children of such State or Territory, exclusive of the amount received from the United States, and exclusive of the sums paid for grounds, school buildings, or repairs on the same: Provided, That separate schools for white and colored children shall not be considered a distinction of color.

SEC. 4. That an amount not exceeding 5 per cent. of the sum apportioned to each State and Territory may be used by them for the education of teachers in normal schools, teachers' institutes, or otherwise.

SEC. 5. That it is hereby further provided that before any State or Territory shall be entitled to receive its share of said fund it shall have complied with the following conditions:

First. That it shall have applied all moneys by it previously received under the provisions of this act in accordance therewith.

Second. That it shall have caused to be made such reports to the Commissioner of Education concerning the condition of the schools in the same, on or before the 1st day of August of each year, as said Commissioner of Education, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall deem desirable; and shall especially report for each county as follows: The number of public schools of every grade; the whole number of days actually taught in each during the year preceding; the total amount received from State taxes and from local taxes and the total amount expended for educational purposes in the preceding year; the total amount expended for white and colored schools separately; the number of public-school buildings owned and hired, and the character, condition, and value of the same; the number of children, white and colored, male and female, in attendance on the public schools, and the length of attendance; the number of male and female teachers, white and colored, employed at the same time and at different times in the same year, with particulars as to qualifications of same; the number of school libraries and the number of volumes therein; the branches taught and the text-books used; the total wages paid teachers, male and female, white and colored.

SEC. 6. That the Commissioner of Education shall prepare forms of such blanks as shall facilitate the making of the reports herein provided for, and transmit the the same to the State and Territorial authorities.

SEC. 7. That in such States and Territories as shall maintain separate schools for white and colored children the money so apportioned shall be divided according to the respective number of such white and colored children in such State or Territory.

SEC. 8. That no part of the money so received from the United States shall be expended in the purchase of real estate, the construction or repair of school buildings, or in paying the salary of any public officer not engaged in teaching.

SEC. 9. That in case any State or Territory shall misapply or misappropriate the money, or any part thereof received under this act, or shall fail to comply with the conditions thereof, or to report as herein prescribed, such State or Territory shall forfeit its right to any subsequent apportionment by virtue hereof until the amount so misapplied or misappropriated shall have been replaced by such State or Territory and applied as herein required; and until such report shall have been made, all money so retained and not paid to such State or Territory shall be kept separate in the Treasury until disposed of by Congress.

SEC. 10. That on or before the 1st day of September of each year the Commissioner of Education, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall certify to the governor of each State and Territory whether it is entitled to receive its apportionment under this act, and if so entitled, the amount of such apportionment; and it thereupon shall be entitled to receive the same; but such certificate shall not be issued until all the requirements of this act referring to the duties of the officers of such State or Territory shall have been complied with.

SEC. 11. That the amount apportioned to any State or Territory, and certified as herein provided, shall be paid on or before October 1 of each year, upon the warrant of the Commissioner of Education, countersigned by the Secretary of the Interior, out of the Treasury of the United States, to such officer as shall be, by the laws of such State or Territory, entitled to receive the same.

SEC. 12. That the Commissioner of Education shall annually report to Congress the information received by him from the reports of the school officers of the several States and Territories provided for herein, together with such recommendations as will in the judgment of the Commissioner subserve the purposes of this act.

SEC. 13. That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $10,000,000 for the year commencing September 1, 1882, which shall be apportioned as directed herein; and those States and Territories which have provided by law for the free common-school education of their children of school age, without distinction of color, shall be entitled to their apportionment of said sum, all other requirements precedent to the right to receive such apportionment being hereby waived for the year 1882.

SEC. 14. That any State signifying its desire that the amount allotted to it under the provisions of this act shall be appropriated in any other way for the promotion of common-school education, in its own borders or elsewhere, its allotment shall be paid to such State to be thus appropriated: Provided, That its Legislature shall have first considered the question of its appropriation to the general fund for use under the provisions of this act in States and Territories where the proportion of illiterate persons is more than 5 per cent. of the whole population.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to inquire whether it is now in order to move to postpone the consideration of this bill for thirty days?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITE in the chair). The gentleman from Illinois is recognized, and the gentleman from Indiana, therefore, is not upon the floor to make any such motion.

Mr. STEELE. Would a motion to recommit be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair has already stated, the gentleman is not in possession of the floor to make the motion. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SHERWIN] is entitled to the floor, and will proceed with his remarks.

Mr. SHERWIN. Mr. Speaker, the bill which has just been read for the information of the House is the unanimous report of the Committee on Education and Labor. The subject of national aid to education is by no means a new one. Before this Government was organized, before the Constitution was adopted, a resolution was passed by the Congress of the Confederation setting apart six hundred and forty acres of land in every township for the support of the common schools of the States thereafter to be admitted into the Union. In the language of Webster those words set forth and declared it to be a high and binding duty of Government itself to support schools and advance the means of education on the plain reason that religion, morality, and knowledge are necessary to the common good and to the happiness of mankind.

From that time to the present, upon the admission of every new State, except Maine, Vermont, Texas, Kentucky, and Tennessee, and upon the organization of every new Territory that law has been recognized and followed. And since 1848 every State that has been organized has been granted 1,280 acres of public land in every township for support of common schools. The total number of acres so granted amounts to 67,983,922. In addition to that amount there has been 1,119,440 acres granted to universities; and 1,680,000 acres to agricultural colleges, besides a large amount of land-scrip issued for 7,830,000 acres in further aid of idustrial and agricultural colleges, making a grand total thus donated by the Government for educational purposes of all kinds of 70,783,361 acres. Congress has also granted swamp lands amounting to over 47,000,000 acres to fourteen Western and Southwestern States, a great portion of which has been set apart for the support of the common schools of the different States.

But, Mr. Speaker, Congress has not confined itself to the granting of public lands for the support of education or for common schools. It set apart the proceeds of the sales of the public lands in certain States to be paid over to those States for the support of schools, the money realized therefrom amounting in the aggregate to $2,997,234; and of that amount the State of Missouri received nearly one-third, or a sum amounting to $1,008,321, in cash, and my own State of Illinois received $713,495. In addition to this, the surplus revenue that was distributed to the different States in 1836 was a large portion of it carried to the support of the common schools. So that in many States a munificent permanent provision has been established which goes very far toward the support of the schools in those States without the aid of local taxation.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, this is the first time, or the first attempt I should say, that has been made to make a direct appropriation from the public Treasury in support of this system which has thus been indirectly, as I have shown, carried on for many years. The object of the present bill, as I have said, is to make a provision for the support of the school system throughout the whole country. Heretofore this aid has been in lands or it has been in the proceeds of the public lands to a few of the States only, those new States which contained lands belonging to the Government, none of the original thirteen States or Maine or Vermont, Kentucky or Tennessee having received any aid. This bill proposes to make an appropriation which shall be divided among all of the States, and to make that distribution on the basis of illiteracy. In that it is a departure, but it seems to me that the urgent need which exists should be recognized by this House—I am certain that it is recognized by many of the thinking men of this country—that the time has come for the National Government to give aid in imparting instruction to the large class of illiterates in our own midst. The aspect of society has greatly changed within the last twenty-five years. In the Northern States, those States that we called the free States, we have had a school system in operation which was universal, which was free, and which afforded ample means of instruction to the people. By means of it the proportion of illiteracy to population has been reduced to less than in any other part of the country; but recollect that that was the result of the growth of two or three hundred years.

In Massachusetts within ten years from the time of its first settlement a system of common schools was inaugurated and education was made compulsory. And so it has grown in all of the Northern States in a similar way until the result has been that illiteracy is comparatively extinguished. But in another part of our common country, unhappily having a different social system, while in theory free schools were established, in fact they did not exist. While those States admitted after the adoption of the Constitution received their due proportion of the public lands, still no effective system of public schools existed there and could not exist by reason of the peculiar character of their social system. And we find consequently growing up there a race of people different in educational acquirements, to teach whom it was, under that old system of which I speak, held to be a crime. But in the exigencies of war it became necessary to change that system, and there was lifted to citizenship over 4,000,000 of these people, without any traditions of education, without any desire for education, existing in utter ignorance and darkness. The nation not only made them free, but it became necessary, it was supposed in the wisdom of the statesmen of that time, not only to make them free, but to make them citizens, and consequently the ballot was bestowed upon them.

It trusted that their loyalty, that their devotion to that country which had made them free would neutralize the effects of the ignorance and barbarism that now surrounded them. But when the first census was taken after the close of the war and the figures were put before the country it was seen how thick was that darkness. And from that time till now every President of the United States has urged upon Congress some action in this matter. Thinking men, educational men everywhere, and many influential papers of the country have been endeavoring to press upon Congress to act in this matter. And now that this Tenth Census is laid upon our tables we see that but little impression has been made upon that illiteracy. We see that while the percentage of illiteracy has been decreasing but a small per cent., the number of illiterates has increased instead of decreasing. Now, as this Government is founded on the intelligence of its citizens, as that has been our boast from the organization of the Government until now, as it has been the burden of all our patriotic utterances, we owe it to ourselves to see to it that this blot upon our country shall be expunged as soon as possible.

It is said in opposition to this bill that the Government should not supervise or interfere with the school systems of the different States. Any one who has read the bill knows that it does not undertake in any measure to interfere with the school system of any State within this Union. It proposes to have this money paid over to the State authorities, the same authorities that expend the money raised by the States themselves for school purposes; that it shall be expended under their laws, by their officers, as each State shall see fit, except that there shall be no discrimination in its expenditure in regard to color, and except that none of it shall be used to support sectarian or religious schools. It goes no further. It utilizes the machinery that already exists; it uses the engines that are already constructed in the different States for the purpose of expending this money. And the committee believe, after full investigation, if this money was paid over to the different States it would be used honestly and that it would be honestly and justly expended for the purpose for which it is appropriated. We had before us men of national reputations who had examined the school systems of that part of the country which is to receive the greater proportion of this money. They had examined the laws, they had become personally acquainted with the school officers of those States; and it has been the universal opinion of those gentlemen that any money appropriated by the Government for the support of common schools will be as honestly and carefully expended in that portion of the country as any other.

I would refer here to the opinions of Mr. Smart, who has been a State superintendent of schools in the State of Indiana, and who has spent a good deal of time in several of the States South—four different States—establishing teachers' institutes. He declares before the committees of the Senate and the House that he made a special examination upon the point to which I have referred, and that he is fully satisfied that any money appropriated will be carefully and honestly expended.

I refer to the opinion of Rev. Dr. Mayo, who has traveled through that region for the last two years, as given in the appendix to our report; and he bears out that opinion.

I refer to the opinions of Dr. Gregory, not in print, however, a gentleman from my own State, who was president of our agricultural college, and has been State superintendent of instruction in the State of Michigan, who also declares that from several months' sojourn there he is confident this nation has no greater duty before it than to put the hand to the wheel and say that aid shall be given in extirpating that mass of ignorance that exists there; and he further adds that in his belief an appropriation so given will be honestly and judiciously expended.

We had before our committee the superintendent of instruction of the State of South Carolina, a man who has given several years of earnest, ardent work to fostering a public-school sentiment in that State, where it is so much needed; a man who is thoroughly acquainted with it; and he declares that it is simply impossible for the people of South Carolina to provide sufficient educational facilities to educate all its people, let them try as hard as they may. He gives us figures to show it, and declares that the tax levied in the State of South Carolina for schools is larger than the taxes for all State purposes combined, and that the tax levied in the city of Charleston, South Carolina, for the support of schools is a larger percentage than that levied in the city of Boston for its schools. And I will add that this gentleman, who was so active in the matter of education in his State, was last year elevated to the office of governor of that State; and I am told by gentlemen who have been there that his interest in the cause of education was the reason he was nominated and the reason he was elected.

We had also before us the superintendent of public instruction of the State of Georgia, a native of that State, a gentleman who has devoted the last ten years of his life to the cause of education, and he declares it as his opinion, based on a full knowledge of the situation, that the State of Georgia could not of itself without some assistance provide that system of education that was necessary in the present emergency. I will read from his statement a few remarks to show the progress that has been made in that State. He says:

I want to say to you, gentlemen, that in the State of Georgia, under my administration of ten years, the entire loss of school fund will not foot up more than about $6,000. In an administration covering ten years there has not been a single dollar misapplied with that exception that I know of. We try to make it do the greatest possible amount of good. We try to manage it with the greatest economy. We admit to our schools all who want to enter them. We commenced in 1871 with a school attendance of 48,000. We have gone gradually upward. The second year we had 83,000, the next year 136,000, the next year 156,000. I shall not follow the statistics along. Year before last (my year's work has not been footed up, as the returns are not all in) we went up to a school attendance of 236,000. We have never failed to gain as much as 9,000 in any year. We have gone over that in attendance every year, and the colored people have proceeded pari passu with the whites in their attendance. They commenced with 6,000 and went up, according to the last return, to 86,000 colored children in our schools. There is no discrimination made; no man can afford to do it in an office in my State. So strong is the school sentiment in favor of the administration of exact and equal justice that no man can afford to do it. We are struggling to do the very best we can with our limited means.

We had before us the superintendent of public instruction of the State of Maryland, and his testimony was to the same effect. He indorsed all that had been said by the gentleman to whom I have referred, at the same time declaring that he was old-fashioned enough to think that the State ought to do nothing that the private individual could do as well. And he further said:

I am willing to carry it further and to say that the National Government should do nothing that the State government can do as well, but all history and all experience prove to us that the individual is not able to educate his children. He has never done it in the history of the world; the State must come in and aid him in the work; and I think we have proved abundantly that in our Southern States at all events the State is not able to do the work of education. Therefore I say it is the duty and the privilege of the National Government to come in and help the States to do that which they are willing but are not able to do.

I give these as samples of the testimony that was taken before us. All agreed upon that one point, and we knew and did not need to have it asserted that they are needy in these Southern States, and absolutely can not provide at present the means necessary for sustaining sufficient public schools without assistance.

After the first year's appropriation no further payments can be made until the authorities of each State shall have filed with the Commissioner of Education a report as to the amount of money expended by and under the laws of the State, the number of teachers and of pupils of both races attending the schools, the amounts appropriated for each, the length of time schools have been open, and such other information as will enable Congress to know year by year whether the money is being expended in a proper manner, and also to be informed of the progress and state of education whenever the money is expended.

I wish in this connection to refer to some statistics that I have taken from the report of the Commissioner of Education, to show comparatively what has been done for schools in different States in the North and in the South. As appears from that report there was expended per capita of the school population during the year 1880 in Massachusetts $14.91; in Mississippi, $1.56; in California, $12.44; in North Carolina, 98 cents; in Illinois, $6.70; in Alabama, 96 cents; in New York, $6.34; and in Georgia, $1.08.

I will now give the expenditure per capita upon the average actual school attendance. There was expended in Massachusetts in 1880 $19.66 per capita of school attendance; in Mississippi, $2.70; in California, $27.35; in North Carolina, $2.34; in Illinois, $15.68; in Alabama, $3.17; in New York, $18.16; and in Georgia, $3.31.

Now, I desire to call attention to a brief statement of the annual expenditures for school purposes in a few of the States as shown by the report of the Commissioner of Education. I take States as nearly alike in population as I can find them. The total expenditure for school purposes in New Jersey, with a population of 1,131,116 was, in 1880, $1,928,374; in Alabama, with a population of 1,262,505, the total expenditure for school purposes was only $375,465. It would therefore appear that New Jersey, with less population than Alabama, expended more than five times as much for school purposes.

Now, the question will arise, why did New Jersey expend so much more than Alabama? I will give the assessed valuation of those two States as shown by Spofford's Almanac. The assessed valuation of New Jersey was $606,415,561; the assessed valuation of Alabama was $120,000,000. The assessed valuation of New Jersey was about five times as great as that of Alabama. Therefore it will be seen that although the proportion of expenditures for school purposes in Alabama was so small, so insignificant, so insufficient for the purpose, yet, according to its assessed valuation, it was as great as in the State of New Jersey.

Minnesota, with a population of 780,773, expended for school purposes in 1880, $1,706,114; while Arkansas, with a population of 802,535, expended in that year for school purposes only $238,056.

Mr. OATES. For what year does the gentleman give the expenditures for the State of Alabama?

Mr. SHERWIN. I give it for the year 1880, and obtain my figures from the last report of the Commissioner of Education.

Mr. OATES. In the year 1881 Alabama expended over $400,000.

Mr. HERBERT. I will ask the gentleman again to state what was the total expenditure in 1880 of the State of Alabama?

Mr. SHERWIN. It was $375,465. I have given the expenditures in Minnesota and Arkansas, with their respective populations. It will be seen that Minnesota, with a considerably less population than Arkansas, expended more than seven times as much for school purposes. The assessed value of Minnesota was $258,055,643, and of Arkansas $86,892,541; about three times as much in Minnesota as in Arkansas.

I will now compare the State of Wisconsin with the State of North Carolina. Wisconsin, with a population of 1,315,947, expended for school purposes $2,230,772; while North Carolina, with a population of 1,399,750, expended only $352,892.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. What year was that?

Mr. SHERWIN. Eighteen hundred and eighty. Wisconsin, with less population than North Carolina, expended more than six times as much for school purposes. The assessed valuation of property in Wisconsin was $438,971,811, and in North Carolina $142,918,186. There was more property assessed in Wisconsin five times over than in North Carolina.

I will make one more comparison. California, with a population of 864,694, expended for school purposes $2,864,571; while Louisiana, with a population of 939,946, expended for school purposes only $480,320. California, with considerably less population than Louisiana, expended about six times as much for schools. The comparative assessments in those two States are, in California, $469,645,058, and in Louisiana $149,635,805; or more than three times as much in California as in Louisiana.

I think this fully substantiates the testimony given before the committee by the school officials and gentlemen to whom I have referred, that these Southern States are really now doing as much comparatively for schools as are the older States with older school systems, although at first glance it would seem that they are not endeavoring to do what some may think they ought to do.

I want now to call the attention of the House to one other matter. Look at the Southern States, with two distinct races which do not mix; the children of the two races do not attend the same schools. Separate schools must be maintained for the two colors, and that increases the expenditure for schools and makes it more important that these matters should be taken into account in extending this aid for school purposes.

We may say that it ought not to be so; that those who brought about this state of things ought to suffer for it. But the fact exists; and this is a national question, not a State question; because when men come up and deposit their ballots for electors of President of the United States it affects Illinois as much as South Carolina, if the ballot is not intelligent, if it is not honest, if it is not republican. I will say that the same disparity existing in the States to which I have referred exists in all these States.

Now, upon the point that these States are not doing what they ought to do I wish to occupy a few moments. In 1850 there were in the schools of the South 3,947 colored pupils; in 1860, 3,003; in 1870, 1,397,216; and in 1880 the number had gone up to an enrollment of 2,963,856.

As another indication of progress in this respect I may mention that while in 1870 there were in those States four publications devoted to educational objects, there were in 1880 nineteen. In the Northern States there were in 1870 twenty-one and in 1880 forty-six. In the Northern States the number of these publications had a little more than doubled, while in the South they had more than quadrupled. I hope it is understood that I am referring to the South in no invidious sense. We know that the mass of ignorance unhappily exists there, and that 75 per cent. of this appropriation, if made, will go there.

The number of pupils in the public normal schools of the South in 1870 was 4,668; in 1880, 5,097. In private normal schools there were in 1880, 6,386; as to 1870 we have no statistics. It will thus be seen that in 1880 there were 11,483 pupils in the normal schools of the South—a large increase in the course of ten years.

In 1880 there were 1,566,640 more pupils in attendance in the South than there were in 1870, and there were 19,481 more teachers employed in teaching. In 1880 the expenditure was $972,030 more than in 1870.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me at this time to ask him a question?

Mr. SHERWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. To what extent is this increased expenditure for education in the South due to the voluntary contributions from the North? Or do these statistics include only expenditures made by State or municipal governments?

Mr. SHERWIN. Only those made by the public.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. The figures do not include those institutions founded by donations from churches and private individuals?

Mr. SHERWIN. They do not include any charitable contributions at all. They do not include, for instance, the expenditures of the Peabody fund or the Slater fund.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Or of the churches?

Mr. SHERWIN. Or of the churches. The contributions to which the gentleman refers, while praiseworthy and excellent, are but a drop in the bucket to the amount which ought to be expended.

It may be asked, if this progress is being made, what is the need of the National Government making this appropriation? There is great need. You will recollect the situation. It is abnormal. It is outside of any experience of States that have had a free-school system for many years. There were in 1880 nearly 7,000,000 black people in those States, and the number to-day is probably considerably larger. It is to be remembered that a large proportion of these are adults, beyond the aid of schools. It is to be remembered that there were children born in families that could not read and write and had no desire in many instances to read or write. There was no family impulsion toward education. They could not realize themselves the darkness in which they existed. They have not been able to aid themselves as would a similar number of persons transplanted for instance from Massachusetts into Iowa or Minnesota.

The public administration in this matter has all been done by the hardest work—from the bottom. And although there has been progress from nothing to what we now see, the fact still exists that in three or four States of this Union more than 50 per cent. of the men over 21 years of age can not read the ballots which they cast. After all the progress that has been made, the fact still exists that there are in those States nearly a million and a half—1,354,974—adults of 21 years of age and upward who can not read their ballots.

Mr. McMILLIN. While the gentleman is on this point I would like to call his attention to one of the provisions of this bill. It is claimed that this measure will inure to the benefit of the colored people of the South.

Mr. SHERWIN. Of all illiterate persons, but more especially of the colored people.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman a moment ago was speaking especially of the colored population; and I desire to call attention to one provision of this bill which will prevent their getting from this measure the benefit which it is claimed to be intended to give them. Section 3 provides:

And in no case shall any State or Territory be allowed out of said fund a greater sum than such State or Territory shall have expended during the previous year for the common-school education of the children of such State or Territory, exclusive of the amount received from the United States, and exclusive of the sums paid for grounds, school buildings, or repairs on the same.

Now, coming from the South, I think I am in a situation to judge correctly as to this matter; and I believe that under this provision the appropriation will be so curtailed that the Southern States will not receive as great a proportion of this fund when distributed as will the people of the North.

I wish in this connection to state that the extent of the exertion of the Southern people in behalf of the education of the people of this class is not known to the country. The State of Kentucky, in which I formerly lived, not only permitted them to attend the public schools, but appropriated every dollar that was raised from a negro in any way, or from any part of his taxation, to the education of his children, a privilege that is not given to any other class of people in the United States by any of the States so far as I know.

Mr. MONEY. Will the gentleman permit me to answer my friend from Tennessee on that point?

Mr. SHERWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONEY. The danger apprehended by my friend from Tennessee will not happen. I am myself responsible for that clause in this bill. I am from a State where the blacks are largely in the majority, and I put it in there to stimulate the efforts of the Southern States to educate their illiterates. I did it for the express purpose of putting these States on their metal; for I wanted them to realize, as I believe they do to a great extent, the necessity for this action. [Mr. MCMILLIN rose.] Permit me to finish. I will also say to the House, under the provisions of this bill these States will get liberally of the amount of $10,000,000 to be expended throughout the limits of the Republic, and that they will in nowise be cut off by that provision. It is to prevent a relapse on the part of the South and will stimulate them to do better if possible.

I know, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the effort made to-day in Mississippi and other States of the South to educate illiterates of both sexes. I know what has been done in all the States South to cure this evil crying to Congress for redress, because it is beyond the power of the several States to heal it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Mississippi forgets the fact they have been legislating for a class of five or six millions of people who were turned loose upon the South by an act of the Government about fifteen years ago without money enough to buy a hat for each individual.

Mr. MONEY. I do not forget that fact.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I am afraid——

Mr. MONEY. It is because I was mindful of that fact this bill is about to provide for the education of those people who were brought into citizenship without any knowledge of its responsibilities or its privileges. It is to give them the advantages they ought to have. It is to meet the obligation the Government owes to its citizens to educate them to a sense of their duties and responsibilities that this bill is reported. It does not have the effect my friend from Tennessee mentions, but it will have the effect, I beg to assure the House, of providing for the education of these people that the States themselves are incompetent to do in their own behalf.

Mr. DUNN. This is an important case and I would like——

Mr. SHERWIN. I can not yield if this is to come out of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will come out of the time of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DUNN. I wish to ask a question. This bill provides that "in no case shall any State or Territory be allowed out of said fund a greater sum than such State or Territory shall have expended during the previous year for the common-school education of the children of such State or Territory." My State, through the general fund of the State, expends about $325,000. The counties and school districts expend about $450,000. Now, will that State be credited with the district fund levied by the district but collected by the general collector and paid out by the district?

Mr. MONEY. It is so in my own State.

Mr. MCMILLIN. There is no account in the State treasury of the amount so expended by the county, and no accurate estimate can be made of that amount without new legislation.

Mr. SHERWIN. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, in what the gentleman has said about the efforts made by the Southern people in the cause of education during the last five or six years I subscribe to every word of it. I believe from the information that has come to us that in most cases the people of these States where the most of this illiteracy exists are doing all they can, that they are making herculean efforts to provide the means of education; but I do take issue with that gentleman on one point, although it is irrelevant to the line of this discussion, and I refer to what he has said about the State of Kentucky. Until this year the State of Kentucky has had no free-school system such as is contemplated by this act, and if it had gone into effect one year ago that State would not have obtained a dollar, in my opinion, under this bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. My friend from Illinois can not deny my statement.

Mr. SHERWIN. I am happy to state that now they have such a system.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman from Illinois is mistaken. The State of Kentucky has always had a system of education for black as well as for white, as much as any other State in the Union. In my own city of Louisville to-day the school buildings in which blacks are educated are of as great value and as magnificent in proportion and as well kept in every particular as the buildings for the education of the whites. They have expended hundreds of thousands of dollars, not only by State action but by individual and city action, for the benefit of the blacks.

Mr. SHERWIN. I know that is true. I know that in the city of Louisville, for instance, they have made splendid provision for the support of the common schools; but until within the last six months, as I understand it, the laws of Kentucky provided for no regulation with reference to the education of the blacks other than that they should have such proportion of the tax for the support of their schools as they themselves paid. In other words, the tax for the support of the colored schools did not come out of the general fund and was consequently very limited. But that has been changed. Our committee had before it on yesterday the superintendent of education of that State, who said that was the fact, and that the law had been but recently adopted. There is another small State, I will say in answer to the gentleman from Kentucky, that I understand has not such a school system as will entitle it to any portion of this fund provided by the National Government.

Mr. KENNA. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. In some of the States the law provides a sort of local option in regard to the education of children. A State fund is provided and also a local fund, and the question as to how much school, or whether any, shall be had depends upon a sort of local option in some of the States where these local school funds are raised in the different magisterial districts. The question therefore that I wish to put to the gentleman from Illinois is this, whether under this provision of the bill "before any State or Territory shall be entitled to receive its share of said fund it shall have provided by law for the free common-school education of all its children of school age, without distinction of color, for at least three months in the year, from the funds provided for schools under the laws of said State or Territory," &c.? Now, I wish to ask whether under that provision a State whose law is in the condition described would get a part of the fund which is recommended by the committee for distribution under the law? Whether, in other words, such State would come within the provisions of this act?

Mr. SHERWIN. The same point was raised by the gentleman from Tennessee. Let me say to the gentleman that that was also raised in the committee, whether in collecting the amount expended for school purposes in different States the amount raised by local taxation in districts, counties, or towns, as the case may be, should be considered, and it was so considered in the committee, because wherever there is a local-option law making provision for educational purposes it is after all a part of the State law, and we so looked upon it and determined in our judgment that any fund raised by any district or township under State law was a State fund for this purpose.

Mr. KENNA. But the difficulty is that the bill provides as in this third section to which I now refer, and which I have quoted, that the State must have provided absolutely for at least three months of schooling before it can receive any part of the money set apart for educational purposes by the provisions of the bill. Now, some of the magisterial districts in States may have failed to comply with this local-option provision of the States, and the schools in some instances may not have been kept up for the length of time specified here. In that condition of things it strikes me that this section of the bill would operate to bar such States from any portion of the fund unless it is amended as I think it should be.

Mr. SHERWIN. The committee would have no objection to an amendment which would make the point clear. The intention of the committee was just as the gentleman from West Virginia desires.

Now, the basis of the distribution of this fund, in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, let me say, is upon the total illiteracy as developed by the census; not of the illiteracy of school children alone. It was purposely put upon the total illiteracy, because it is well known that the illiteracy of the adults is much larger in that region than elsewhere in the United States. The committee therefore, in preparing this bill, sought to fix the basis of illiteracy upon the whole population, and we desire therefore to take the largest proportion, so as to give, if possible, as wide a measure of relief as could be given. It selected that basis which would send a large amount of money into those States, and I will repeat that we took the tables of illiteracy as shown in the census of 1880, which will control during the whole term for which this appropriation will be made. It will last for the entire five years. We do not take a census every year to show the illiteracy of the country, and this bill provides that the distribution shall be made upon the basis of illiteracy as shown by the last census. Gentleman are aware that there are many adults throughout the region of country to which I now refer who are necessarily illiterate; and this will result in carrying a large amount of money for the support of schools to that part of the country.

The statistics show that 17 per cent. of all persons over ten years of age in the United States can not write.

All of the late slave States except Missouri, which has only 13.4 per cent., are above that amount, Delaware and Maryland being near it with 17.5 and 19.3 per cent., respectively. But in every one of the late slave States over 50 per cent. of the colored population are illiterate. The white population of the three States just mentioned approximate in ability to read and write the same class of our population in States which are not classed as illiterate, the percentage being, respectively, in Missouri 10.5, in Delaware 9.1, and in Maryland 8.1 of the white population who can not write.

But there are eight States, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia, which have over 40 per cent. of illiterates of all classes, white and black. The percentage of illiterates among the blacks in the State of Alabama is 80.6. Almost the whole colored population are illiterate. In Florida 70.7 are illiterate. Now, I wish to reflect upon these figures in connection with any objection that may be made as to the propriety of this appropriation on the ground that the statistics show that there is progress in the South on the question of education. I admit that there has been progress. If there were no progress that case would be absolutely hopeless after eighteen years of freedom. But after all that, after that period of freedom, we find still Alabama with 80.6 per cent. of illiteracy, 70.7 in Florida, 81.6 in Georgia, 79.1 in Louisiana, 75.2 in Mississippi, 77.4 in North Carolina, 78.5 in South Carolina, and 73.7 in Virginia.

Nearly four-fifths of all the colored people in those States, beginning with North Carolina and following the seaboard and the Gulf to the Mississippi, are illiterate. There are four other States which are nearly as bad—Tennessee, Texas, Arkansas, and Kentucky. The percentage of colored illiterates in those States is 75 per cent. in Arkansas, 70.4 per cent. in Kentucky, 71.7 per cent. in Tennessee, and 75.4 per cent. in Texas. After all that has been done for education, after all the progress that has been made, this is all the progress we can show; nearly four-fifths of the colored population in dense ignorance.

Mr. McMILLIN. Do I understand this to include the scholastic population?

Mr. SHERWIN. All above ten years of age.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then the gentleman must remember a large proportion of them were raised in slave times when there was no education for that race.

Mr. SHERWIN. I stated that. We recognized that fact. It is a lamentable fact, but we have to look it in the face. The total population over 10 years in the twelve States was 3,447,174. Of these 2,951,662 are illiterate—those over 10 years of age. Now, add to this 1,386,542 white illiterates, and you have a total of 4,338,204 illiterates in a population over 10 years of age of 9,991,162 in these twelve States alone.

I wish also to give some statistics upon the number of illiterate voters in the Southern States.

Number of males in the late slave-holding States 21 years of age and upward who could not read and write in 1870 and 1880.

White	217,371
Colored	850,032
1880—
White	410,550
Colored	944,424
Total number of illiterates of voting age in the late slave-holding States in 1870	1,167,303
Total number of illiterates of voting age in the late slave-holding States in 1880	1,354,974
Increase of illiterate voters in the South from 1870 to 1880	187,671
Increase of illiterate whites of voting age from 1870 to 1880	93,279
Increase of illiterate colored people of voting age from 1870 to 1880	94,392
Total number of males of voting age in the South in 1880	4,154,125
Total number of illiterate males of voting age in the South in 1880	1,354,974

Thirty-two and three-tenths per cent. of the voters in the South are illiterate.
Of the illiterates 69.7 per cent. are colored and 30.3 are whites.

The State of Alabama has 120,858 illiterate voters, and its popular vote in 1880 was 151,507. The State of Georgia has 145,087 illiterate voters, and its popular vote in 1880 was 155,651. The State of Mississippi has 111,541 illiterate votes, and its popular vote was 117,078. Louisiana has 102,932 illiterate votes, and its popular vote was 97,201.

Is there any man in this House who does not recoil as he faces these figures and reflects upon the state of the schools, the social condition, and the material status of those regions?

Twenty years have passed since the proclamation was issued which made these black men free. Nearly seventeen years have passed since they were clothed with the rights of citizens of the Republic. Thirteen years have almost passed since the ballot was intrusted to their loyal but ignorant hands.

As the nation, guided by the Republican party, bestowed one after another these inestimable boons upon the colored race, the world applauded and we took much praise unto ourselves. The Republican party has gloried and does glory in these acts as the consummation of its policy. As the Republic could not live half slave and half free we determined that it should be all free and that it should survive. It does survive, free in deed as well as in name. But the fact remains that we bestowed freedom and citizenship and the ballot not only as acts of the highest justice to the colored race, but as means of saving the Union and perpetuating the Constitution. But we added to the body-politic a mass of ignorance so stupendously great that were it not animated by constant loyalty and uniform obedience to law would corrupt all law and subvert all order. The nation owes it to itself by every consideration for its own safety, it owes it to the colored man by every consideration of justice, to aid in dispelling that ignorance and placing within his reach the means of education. The States where it most obtains are not able to deal with it as it should be dealt with. It is a national question. It should rest upon the national conscience. It should arouse us to immediate action.

We can not palter with our plain duty in this matter without inviting danger and incurring the severest retribution. Eighteen years have passed since our internal struggles ceased. They have been years of quietude and plenty. Our enormous debt has been disappearing with marvelous rapidity; our revenues are munificent and beyond all our needs. There are no reasons of finance why the nation should not make this appropriation, and yet to-day we hesitate. We see nearly one-half of all the people of twelve States steeped in ignorance, a condition which tends to perpetuate itself and debase us all, and yet we hesitate. We see a million and a quarter of voters in those States with ballots in their hands which they can not read, ballots which carry with them the destiny of all the millions of this land, and yet we hesitate.

Urged by simple justice to the weak and unfortunate, the lowly and ignorant, by profound regard for our traditional national policy, by all our hopes for future national progress and glory, by an earnest solicitude for public safety and the honor and virtue of society, we should hesitate no longer.

Mr. Speaker, it may be said, Will not this take more money than they can expend? Now, one word on that point. Is it or is it not too large an appropriation? The total amount raised by taxation for school purposes in the whole country, as shown by the census report in 1880, was $75,574,048. Of this amount there was raised in the slave-holding States $9,276,126. The amount per capita of the entire population raised in the Northern States was $2.09. Had the Southern States raised as large an amount per capita, it would have amounted to $38,692,292, or more than four times what they actually did raise. If they raised only the same amount this year as they did the census year, and to that added the amount raised by this bill, they would have still to raise two and one-third times as much. So there is no danger your appropriation will be too much for the object sought to be accomplished. Yet how much greater is the need for this expenditure there than in the Northern States?

There is one other reflection in connection with this subject. The census revealed the fact in South Carolina that the increase of the colored population there in the last decade was 43 per cent. while the increase of the white population was only 35 per cent. At that rate of increase within twenty-five years the white race will be substantially extirpated or completely overshadowed numerically.

There are now two to one of the black race in South Carolina. In the State of Mississippi they increased 46 per cent. in the last decade while the increase of the whites was much less. The colored population of Mississippi at the same rate of increase would in twenty-two years be double what it was in 1880.

Now, then, here is this mass of ignorance. But it has the ballot in its hand. It has the right to vote, whether it can read its ballot or not. The obstruction of any man's right to vote should be punished, no matter if that ballot be ignorant or the effect of it be demoralizing. The remedy, if there be one, is in education, else republican government is a failure.

But, Mr. Speaker, human nature is the same everywhere. And if we, under a different social condition, were in the place of the people where this illiteracy exists in such great masses, if we were confronted with the problem that they confront, if we owned the soil, if we had the bulk of the property, if our property paid the taxes, I think we should object to be governed by a lawless, corrupt, and ignorant population if it outnumbered us two to one. Means will be found for subverting the citizen's right to vote if ignorance exists. The black man, I believe, has continued true to the Government. I believe generally he has performed his political duties in a praiseworthy manner; certainly much beyond what we had any right to expect from his condition of ignorance. But one great reason for this is because of his attachment to a party that gave him his freedom. Now, then, when that party shall have dissolved, as all parties do dissolve, when his attachment to that party shall have been severed, when he can look no longer to the leaders of that party for his light, when he is subject to any new organization that comes up, then will obtain an increased reign of corruption, of bribery, of confusion, of anarchy and chaos, unless such a degree of intelligence shall have been attained to by them as shall make them entirely competent in themselves to govern wisely. For with knowledge and with the possession of property, which also follows the possession of knowledge, conservatism will come.

It is but natural that it should be so. And it is for this Congress and for this nation to look the fact in the face to-day and provide for it, before the emergency shall come upon us. It is our duty to provide that there shall be intelligence instead of ignorance; that there shall be the light of knowledge instead of the darkness that now rests upon the people of twelve States of this Union.

One objection to this appropriation was that the States could not be intrusted with the expenditure. I think I have demonstrated that this is as safe as anything in the way of legislation.

It has also been stated as an objection that aid from the General Government would cause the States to relax their efforts. This bill has been framed to prevent that state of things. We provide that no State shall receive any of this bounty unless it shall expend of its own money as much as it receives from the General Government. We provide furthermore that no State shall receive any of this money unless it shall provide for at least three months' school in each year. There are therefore two conditions to precede the receiving of this money by the States. The States must levy a tax on their own behalf and must provide for schools for at least three months of the year before it can receive any of the bounty from the General Government. I think that is sufficiently far to go and will answer all the objections that have been made that the States would relax their efforts in this behalf.

Now, will any of this money be wasted? We have provided that not one cent of this fund from the General Government shall be expended for salaries of officials or for the building of school-houses. It has been claimed that this bill will breed a lot of officials in Washington and in the several States to run these schools in grand fashion. Now, I think that an additional clerk in each State will be all that is sufficient to carry this law into effect, and I believe that two additional clerks in the Bureau of Education will be all that will be required here.

It has been said, as an objection to this bill, that communities having an earnest desire for education will find means to secure it without help from outside. This seems to me a very shallow objection. It takes money to run schools—to educate children; and if the money can not be had there can not be schools. It is demonstrated that in at least twelve of these States the money can not be had in sufficient quantities for this purpose; there must be help from the outside.

I know, and have already said, that in communities having traditions and desires for education among people who understand putting in operation the machinery for educational purposes, much more can be done than in communities having none of these qualifications, as is the case in the States where this illiteracy exists. I know, too, that education is largely a matter of growth, that it can not always be compelled. But it can be nourished by appropriations. Here is an example in the District of Columbia. At the close of the war there were in this District no public schools worthy of the name. There was here a large colored population as ignorant nearly as that population in some parts of the South. But colored schools have been established here by the bounty of the Government by direct appropriations made from the Treasury. There are now here magnificent school buildings, including a high-school building, for the use of these people, who have responded in such a way as to show themselves worthy of this expenditure. It ought to be a matter of pride with Congress that it has built up such a system. The same stimulus would ultimately be given in the Southern States if this proposed aid were extended.

It has been objected that this bill contemplates a system of high schools. It contemplates no such thing. It proposes to establish merely a system of common schools for elementary education, not a fancy education.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman allow me to offer an amendment now, so that it may be under discussion?

Mr. SHERWIN. I must decline to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The bill will be read by sections for amendment.

Mr. SHERWIN. As soon as a proper sentiment is established in favor of this system, as soon as the methods of conducting the schools have become ingrained among the people, as soon as this mass of illiteracy is broken and this darkness to some extent dispelled, the nation could, I think, withdraw its aid and leave the work entirely to the people. I do not believe in any interference by the National Government in any sense with education in any of the States, except that in this emergency we should give aid from our abundance while the emergency lasts. We should extend this aid not only as a matter of justice to those communities, but as a matter of safety to the nation at large. Look at the nations of Europe. We have been boasting of our intelligence, yet many of the countries under despotic or kingly government have to-day better systems of education than we have. The Kingdom of Wurtemburg, according to a census taken about three years ago, had within its borders no illiterate persons above the age of 10 years. Education is compulsory there, and every person over the age of 10 years could read and write.

In the year 1878 every recruit to the army of Germany could read and write. Could the same be said of our Army? In Denmark, in Norway, in Sweden, in Germany, in the Netherlands, and in England, there are compulsory laws in the matter of education. France is awakening, and is expending an immense amount of money for educational purposes. When she obtained republican government, her wise statesmen at once saw that it could not exist without a system of free schools, and large sums are being appropriated from the national treasury year by year for this purpose. The prime minister of that country adds to his title that of minister of education. In England, until a few years ago, there was no public-school system, but they saw that they were deteriorating, that they were becoming weak, and they have put into operation a system of free schools which I think is better than ours to-day—a system supported partly by funds of the national government and partly by local rates. But under the law there must be schools; and children between the ages of 6 and 14 must attend. In 1879—I have no later figures on this point—there was expended for schools in England and Wales $23,875,000, of which $9,140,000 came from the national treasury.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that is all I have to offer on this question, and I hope the bill will be discussed and that at the earliest practicable time we may have a vote upon it. I shall endeavor to press it to a vote at the earliest moment.

And now before closing I wish to read the eloquent words of President Garfield's inaugural address upon the subject before us:

> But the danger which arises from ignorance in the voter can not be denied. It covers a field far wider than that of negro suffrage and the present condition of the race. It is a danger that lurks and hides in the sources and fountains of power in every State. We have no standard by which to measure the disaster that may be brought upon us by ignorance and vice in the citizen when joined to corruption and fraud in the suffrage.
> The voters of the Union who make and unmake constitutions, and upon whose will hangs the destinies of our governments, can transmit their supreme authority to no successors save the coming generation of voters, who are the sole heirs of sovereign power. If that generation comes to its inheritance blinded by ignorance and corrupted by vice, the fall of the Republic will be certain and remediless.
> The census has already sounded the alarm in the appalling figures which mark how dangerously high the tide of illiteracy has risen among our voters and their children.
> To the South this question is of supreme importance, but the responsibility for the existence of slavery did not rest upon the South alone. The nation itself is responsible for the extension of the suffrage, and is under special obligations to aid in removing the illiteracy which it has added to the voting population. For the North and South alike there is but one remedy. All the constitutional power of the nation and of the States and all the volunteer forces of the people should be summoned to meet this danger by the strong influence of universal education.

[During the remarks of Mr. SHERWIN, at the expiration of the first hour,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman will have further time, if he desires it.

Mr. SHERWIN. I would like a little more time.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to continue his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SHERWIN] to proceed? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SHERWIN] if he contemplates taking a vote on this bill to-day?

Mr. SHERWIN. I was asked that question before, and in response to the inquiry I indicated an intention not to have the vote taken to-day. But I should like to have it taken to-day.

Mr. REAGAN. The vote had better be taken to-day or it never will be taken.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Let it be taken right off.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SHERWIN] if at the beginning of this discussion he did not say there would be no vote taken to-day?

Mr. SHERWIN. I did say so.

Mr. ROBESON. And gentlemen have gone away with that assurance.

Mr. WILLIS. If there is not a vote taken on this bill to-day it will be lost. I ask the gentleman to announce that there will be a vote taken.

Mr. ROBESON. But the gentleman has announced the other way.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman has already announced that there would be no vote taken to-day, and I know of half a dozen gentlemen who have gone away with that expectation.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not understand that there has been any such announcement.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, there was such an announcement made.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. In response to a question by his colleague [Mr. SPRINGER], the gentleman distinctly announced that there would be no vote taken to-day.

Mr. HISCOCK. I know of half a dozen gentlemen who have gone away with that expectation.

Mr. WILLIS. I regret that the announcement has been made.

Several MEMBERS. The bill will go over.

Mr. WILLIS. But if it goes over it will be lost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that there is no amendment pending to the bill and the Chair knows of no reason why the vote should not be taken to-day.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Did not the gentleman in charge of the bill state that there would be no vote taken to-day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not know anything of that.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Allow me one word. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], the colleague of the gentleman who has charge of the bill, asked that gentleman whether there would be a vote taken to-day. The gentleman in charge of the bill said there would be no vote taken to-day. His colleague then asked him to announce it loud enough to be heard by others, and the announcement was repeated.

Mr. SHERWIN. I will state that at the beginning of this discussion I was requested by several members not to press a vote on this bill to-day, and I told them that I would not do so. I said a few moments ago that I would like to have the vote taken to-day, but I also stated that I had announced that I would not ask for it.

Mr. WILLIS. Let me ask the gentleman at what time he expects the vote to be taken on this bill?

Mr. SHERWIN. On Monday.

Mr. WILLIS. It can not be taken on Monday, for that is suspension day; it is one of the last six days of the session.

Mr. REAGAN. If there is no vote taken on this bill to-day, there will be no vote taken on it at all.

Mr. WILLIS. With the permission of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SHERWIN] I desire to submit this proposition, which I ask the Speaker to submit to the House; that a vote be taken on this bill next Monday; that will settle the whole question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to any arrangement being made about any time for a vote upon this bill. It has already been announced by the gentleman in charge of the bill that no vote would be taken on it to-day. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERWIN. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I shall call for a vote on this bill at the first opportunity.

Mr. HISCOCK. After to-day.

Mr. SHERWIN. After to-day; and I shall call for the previous question this evening before adjournment.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. SHERWIN then resumed and concluded his remarks.]

Mr. CLEMENTS rose.

Mr. BISBEE. Several gentlemen desire to be heard on this bill, and wish to leave the Hall, and if the Chair will recognize me I will yield to them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Georgia, who is a member of the committee and on the opposite side of the House to the gentleman from Illinois who has just taken his seat.

Mr. WILLIS. I understood the gentleman from Illinois to be willing to yield to me for five minutes.

Mr. SHERWIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I will yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WILLIS. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS], my colleague on the Committee on Education and Labor, for the opportunity of saying this much on the pending bill to aid in the support of common schools.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Education and Labor I had intended when this bill came up for discussion to present some facts and statistics in its behalf. The whole subject, however, has been fully and exhaustively treated by my friend on the committee from the State of Illinois [Mr. SHERWIN.] The only point to which I will call the attention of the House is this, that we are within six days of the end of this Congress, and I wish, therefore, to appeal to the friends of this measure—and I believe they are in the majority on both sides of the House—to expedite as far as possible its consideration, and by general understanding let the previous question be ordered on it to-day.

Within a few days, as I have said, Congress will adjourn, and this bill, if passed on next Monday, must, as we know, go to the Senate and there be acted on. Probably it will come back to the House and go to a conference committee, and therefore I urge upon gentlemen as far as practicable to limit their remarks. Votes are more eloquent and more effective than any speeches we can make. I will not, therefore, occupy the time of the House, although I had intended to present a tabular statement of the amounts which have been appropriated by the various Southern States for educational purposes as a persuasive argument in favor of further aid. I had intended to show the amount given by previous acts of Congress for the establishment of agricultural colleges.

I had intended to show how the great States of Ohio and Illinois and of the Northwest, through beneficent legislation similar to this, have secured such a magnificent system of public-school education in their midst. The Representatives of those States on this floor will be found, let us hope, among the most active and willing supporters of the bill which our committee has presented.

I had hoped to have an opportunity to say something as to the constitutionality of this bill as well as its rightfulness and expediency. But, sir, I will forego for the present any such discussion lest from want of time my opportunity may be lost. Without detaining the committee, I again call upon the true friends of this measure to see to it that the previous question shall be ordered before we adjourn to-day, so that upon next Monday we can have a vote upon its final passage.

Mr. CLEMENTS addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. UPSON asked and obtained unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some remarks prepared by him upon the provision of the tariff bill relating to the duty on wool; also some remarks upon the general subject of the tariff. [See Appendix.]

REPEAL OF INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXES.

Mr. FLOWER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7636) to repeal certain internal taxes, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] will be kind enough to yield a moment further I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, so that it may be printed in the RECORD and go over till Monday. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] desires it should take that course; and it is so understood. The proposed rule may be printed in the RECORD. That is all that is necessary. [Cries of "Read!" "Read!"]

The SPEAKER. If desired, the report may be read.

Mr. HOLMAN and others. Let it be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the proposed rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

During the remainder of this session it shall be in order at any time to move to suspend the rules, which motion shall be decided by a majority vote, to take from the Speaker's table House bill No. 5538, with the Senate amendment thereto, entitled "A bill to reduce internal-revenue taxation," and to declare a disagreement with the Senate amendment to the same, and to ask for a committee of conference thereon, to be composed of five members on the part of the House. If such motion shall fail, the bill shall remain upon the Speaker's table unaffected by the decision of the House upon said motion.

The SPEAKER. This proposed rule will go over under the practice.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1078) to authorize the Seneca Nation of Indians of the State of New York to grant title to lands for cemetery purposes;

A bill (H. R. 2013) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Gallus Kirchner;

A bill (H. R. 2871) to provide for the extension of the Capital, North O Street and South Washington Railway; and

A bill (H. R. 5387) providing for the pay of Rear-Admiral Roger N. Stembel.

SUPPORT OF COMMON SCHOOLS.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6158) to aid in the support of common schools.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] is recognized.

Mr. PAGE. Will not the gentleman yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. WHEELER. I will yield for that motion provided I have the floor when this bill is taken up next Monday.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to yield for a motion that the House adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER. I did not yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to say distinctly that he yielded for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER. I was willing to yield to the gentleman from California for that motion, provided I could have unanimous consent to occupy the floor on Monday when this bill is again taker up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can only say that under the practice the gentleman would be entitled to the floor when the bill comes up again.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman will go on now.

Mr. WHEELER. I decline to yield unless it is understood that I shall have the floor on Monday. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the bill to aid in the support of common schools, on which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WHEELER addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. SHERWIN. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to yield to me to demand the previous question.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois to demand the previous question on the bill.

Mr. SHERWIN. I make that motion.

Mr. ROBESON. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order that it is not in order to demand the previous question until this bill has been considered by sections.

The SPEAKER. The bill is in the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. As in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has been recognized to submit the motion.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point that the bill must be first considered as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union by sections for debate and amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois has not the right to demand the previous question on the pending bill.

The same point of order has been made frequently before on similar special orders, and it has been held that the consideration of a bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole does not cut off the power of the House to close debate.

Mr. KENNA. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his demand for the previous question so as to enable me to offer an amendment to the third section. As the bill stands the State of West Virginia and some others would not realize any advantage from it. A mere formal amendment will cure the defect and make the bill accomplish what it was originally intended to do.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask that the special order in reference to this bill be read.

Mr. ROBESON. It is that the bill is to be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, and I do not think it ought to be rushed through without any opportunity to amend it.

The SPEAKER. The object of taking the bill out of the committee was to apply the practice of the House to its consideration. It may be read by sections because of the condition of the special order that provides it is to be considered as in Committee of the Whole. But the House has the power to order the previous question upon it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask that the special order be read.

The SPEAKER. There is no dispute about the condition of the special order. It may be read, however, for the information of the House, if desired.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 20th day of January, 1883, immediately after the morning hour, be assigned for the consideration, in the House as in Committee of the Whole, of H. R. 6158 (Report 1214) a bill to aid in the support of common schools, to be continued from day to day until completed, subject only to revenue and appropriation bills and prior orders.

Mr. ROBESON. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to know whether, when the order provides that this bill shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, the right to five minutes' debate and to the reading of each paragraph of the bill and the right to submit amendments under the five-minute rule does not remain to the House?

The SPEAKER. That question is not properly presented at this time.

Mr. ROBESON. I present it now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the previous question——

Mr. ROBESON. Can the previous question be ordered in the House when operating as in Committee of the Whole until that bill has been read by paragraphs for amendment and has been opened to the five-minute debate?

Mr. WILLIS. That question has been decided in the House two or three times already.

The SPEAKER. That question is not a new one. It has been before the House frequently. The right to the previous question is a right within the House itself. If the House votes it down the bill will be considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROBESON. Is the motion to adjourn in order?

The SPEAKER. That is of course in order.

Mr. ROBESON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kentucky on the left.

Mr. WHITE. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question upon this bill and holds the floor while the Chair is deciding that point. Now, what I wish to ask is this, is it in order for a member to move to adjourn while the gentleman from Illinois holds the floor? He submits a proposition and the Chair is ruling upon the proposition. The Chair has not yet decided the question, and I submit that pending that decision the gentleman from Illinois still holds the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided the question and holds that the gentleman has the right to demand the previous question. But having stated that proposition, and that question being before the House, the gentleman does not longer hold the floor as against the right to make a motion to adjourn, which is a privileged motion. He is not proceeding to debate the question which has been stated; he only demands the previous question. Pending that demand the motion is made that the House adjourn. That is a privileged motion and the Chair must entertain it.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that the gentleman from Illinois has made a motion for the previous question, and pending that motion the gentleman from New Jersey moves that the House do now adjourn. What I wish to inquire is, if the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey be voted down will not the motion of the gentleman from Illinois be immediately in order?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. Then I appeal to the gentleman from New Jersey to let us have the previous question ordered before he presses the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ROBESON. No, I insist upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WHITE. Then let us vote down the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope that will be done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the motion to the House.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 65, noes 57.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 31 members voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 82, noes 80, not voting 129; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. GUENTHER with Mr. DEUSTER.

Mr. MOREY with Mr. GUNTER.
Mr. WATSON with Mr. PHISTER.
Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. GIBSON.
Mr. CALKINS with Mr. HARRIS of New Jersey.
Mr. VALENTINE with Mr. DAVIDSON.
Mr. SHULTZ with Mr. HOBLITZELL.
Mr. URNER with Mr. MCLANE of Maryland.
Mr. RYAN with Mr. MANNING.
Mr. HOUK with Mr. TALBOTT.
Mr. WAIT with Mr. FORNEY.
Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. MOSGROVE.

Mr. COOK. I withdraw my vote. I am paired with Mr. VAN VOORHIS.

Mr. WATSON. I am paired on political questions. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MOREY. I voted inadvertently. Being paired I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BEACH. I change my vote from "no" to "ay." For the first time since I have been a member of the House I vote for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. WILLIS. I object.

The names of members voting were read.

IMPROVEMENTS ON MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Pending the announcement of the vote on the motion to adjourn,

The Speaker, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in response to the House resolution of February 17, 1883, calling for information in relation to damage done by flood or otherwise to improvements at Plum Point Reach and Lake Providence Reach, Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VAN HORN. I desire to submit a report——

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, which is the announcement of the vote on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a question as to the integrity of the roll-call. I wish to know if the name of Mr. HASKELL is recorded.

Mr. HILL. I change my vote from "no" to "aye."

A MEMBER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey has a right to change his vote before the announcement of the result.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I change my vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to ask a question in connection with the roll-call. I understand that Mr. HASKELL is recorded by mistake as having voted. I am told he was not in the Hall and did not vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not go into a question of fact as to that. The Chair is informed by the Clerk there was a response to Mr. HASKELL'S name on the first call.

Mr. WILLIS. I am informed that is a mistake, of which, I suppose, no gentleman here would desire to take advantage.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not investigate that.

SUPPORT OF COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. LYNCH, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD amendments which he proposes to offer to the bill (H. R. 6158) to aid in the support of common schools, as follows:

At the end of section 5 add the following:

"Third. That in all States and Territories, including the District of Columbia, where white and colored children are educated in separate schools, the teachers in such schools shall be of the same race as the majority of the pupils who may attend said schools, except in localities where suitable and competent white or colored teachers, as the case may be, can not be obtained.

"Fourth. That no distinction shall be made in the employment of teachers on account of sex, religion, or politics.

"Fifth. That no distinction shall be made on account of race or color in the levy and collection of taxes for school purposes under the constitution or laws of any State or Territory, nor in the distribution thereof."

Section 9, line 6, after the word "hereof," insert the following:

"Until the conditions prescribed in section 5 of this act shall have been complied with, and."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to receiving the report which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VAN HORN] desires to submit? The Chair is informed it is important it should be made to-night. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MILLER. I have a report which I am directed to make by the Committee on Elections. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the announcement of the vote on the motion to adjourn, except that the Chair usually before adjournment submits personal requests of members.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. DAVIDSON, on account of sickness.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks on the tariff. [See Appendix.]

EXPENSES IN CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] submitting a report of the Committee on Elections in the matter of expenses in contested-election cases in former Congresses? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

On motion of Mr. MILLER, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Elections was discharged from the further consideration of all claims for expenses in contested-election cases which arose in former Congresses, and the same were referred to the Committee on Claims.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. S. S. COX: The petition of John A. Gleason, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOXEY: The resolutions adopted by the Legislature of Indiana, asking that the time for filing applications under the arrears-of-pension act be extended—to the same committee.

By Mr. FLOWER: The petition of R. A. Parmentor and others, for passage of a resolution providing for the repeal of article 11 of the amendments to the Constitution—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FROST: The petition of citizens of Saint Louis, Missouri, urging the passage of the resolution providing for the repeal of article 11 of the amendments to the Constitution—to the same committee.

By Mr. HALL: The petition of citizens of Rye, New Hampshire, protesting against the transfer of the revenue-marine service to the Navy Department—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HEPBURN: The petition of citizens of Council Bluffs, Iowa, relative to the duty on tin-plates and sheet-iron—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. J. S. RICHARDSON: The petition of John S. Kennedy, for payment of salary, mileage, and expenses in Thirty-ninth Congress—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. R. M. MCLANE: The petition of D. C. Gilman and others, of Baltimore, Maryland, in favor of the Signal Service system as at present organized—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of Rev. Campbell Fair, D. D., and other ministers of Baltimore, Maryland, representing about 20,000 people, in favor of a new policy of the Government in its treatment of the Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MOREY: The resolutions adopted by the Wool-Growers' Association of Greene County, Ohio, relative to the duty on imported wool—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PRESCOTT: Paper relating to the pension claim of Margaret Carrigan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REED: The petition of F. W. Guptill and others, asking that a pension be granted to Mary A. Hickey—to the same committee.

By Mr. STONE: The petition of Goodrich Porter and others, of Haverhill, Massachusetts, protesting against an increase of duty on tanned goat-skins—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WASHBURN: Memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, asking immediate adjustment of land grants to railroads in that State—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, two petitions signed by residents of the valley of the Red River, praying for the improvement of the navigation of said river—severally to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WEBBER: The petition of E. J. Horton and others, protesting against the transfer of the revenue-marine service to the Navy Department—to the same committee.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 26, 1883.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. GROVER presented the credentials of Joseph N. Dolph, chosen by the Legislature of Oregon a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1883; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

REGENT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication, which was read:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 21, 1883.

SIR: With grateful thanks for the honor you have done me, I respectfully decline the appointment as a regent of the Smithsonian Institution announced by you a short time since.

Very respectfully, yours,

GEO. F. EDMUNDS.

Hon. DAVID DAVIS,
President pro tempore of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be filed. The Chair appoints Mr. MORRILL in place of Mr. EDMUNDS.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of April 14, 1882, certain information in relation to the number of farms or plantations sold in the States of Virginia, Florida, Arkansas, and Tennessee under an act entitled "An act for the collection of direct taxes in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1862, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Joint resolution in relation to suppressing disease among cattle.

Whereas contagious pleuro-pneumonia in cattle is prevalent in the States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Delaware, Maryland, and the District of Columbia; and

Whereas all efforts for its suppression by the States where it exists have been unsuccessful in arresting the spread and progress of said disease, and which has become so prevalent as to threaten and endanger the entire cattle interests of the country; and

Whereas our export trade in live cattle has been damaged to the extent of many millions annually by the embargo laid by European governments on account of the said disease: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the question has assumed national importance, demanding the immediate attention of Congress.

We would therefore respectfully call the earnest attention of our Senators and Representatives to the fact, and ask them to take such measures as will bring the subject up for action before the close of the present session.

SAM. S. FIFIELD,
President of the Senate.
EARL P. FINCH,
Speaker of the Assembly.

STATE OF WISCONSIN,
Department of State, ss:

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, Ernst G. Timme, secretary of state of the State of Wisconsin, do hereby certify that the foregoing has been compared by me with the original in this office, and that the same is a true and correct copy thereof, and of the whole of such original.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal, at the capitol, in the city of Madison, this 23d day of February, in the year of our Lord 1883.

ERNST G. TIMME,
Secretary of State.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a memorial of O. Clark and Henry S. Martindale, of Story County, Iowa, and the memorial of Henry Ten Eyck, of Cazenovia, Madison County, New York, protesting against the passage of a bill to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SLATER presented a petition of citizens of Coos County, Oregon, praying an appropriation for the continuation of the improvements at the mouth of the Coquille River, in that county; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Umatilla County, Oregon, praying for an equalization of bounty to soldiers of the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Umatilla County, Oregon, praying that one hundred and sixty acres of the public lands be granted to each soldier of the late war who was honorably discharged; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BUTLER presented a concurrent resolution of the general assembly of South Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
Legislative Department.

Concurrent resolution relating to the repeal of the 10 per cent. tax on State banks.

Whereas the present banking capital of this State is wholly inadequate to the wants of the people; and

Whereas the existing condition of affairs in this particular is attributable to the act of the Federal Congress, approved March 3, 1865, which levies a tax of 10 per cent. per annum on the circulation of all banks chartered under State laws; and

Whereas the provisions of said act have accomplished the purposes for which they were adopted, and are unwise and should no longer remain on the statute-books:

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives in Congress be requested to use their best efforts to secure the repeal of said act at the earliest day possible.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolution be transmitted by his excellency the governor to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 20, 1882.

Resolved, That the house do agree to the resolution.
Ordered, That it be sent to the senate for concurrence.
By order.

JOHN T. SLOAN,
Clerk House of Representatives.

IN THE SENATE, December 22, 1882.

Resolved, That the senate concur in the resolution.
Ordered, That it be returned to the house with concurrence.
By order.

T. STOBO FARROW,
Clerk of Senate.

In accordance with the terms of the above concurrent resolution, we have the honor to transmit you copies of the same.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN T. SLOAN,
Clerk House of Representatives.
T. STOBO FARROW,
Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I have in my hand the petition of Enoch Spencer, of the city of Worcester, Commonwealth of Massachusetts, late a private in Company G, Forty-second Massachusetts Volunteers, praying for a special act giving him a pension, for reasons which he states very fully in the paper. This petition is addressed "to the honorable the Committee on Pensions of the United States Senate;" but it is manifestly intended as a petition to the Senate. I move that it be received and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GROVER presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Portland, Oregon, praying an appropriation for the improvement of the bar of the Columbia River, Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PENDLETON. I present a petition of the Cotton Exchange of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for an appropriation for the continuance of the Signal Service cotton-belt observations. I believe the appropriation for that purpose has been eliminated from the sundry civil appropriation bill in the House of Representatives. Therefore I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a resolution of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, favoring the repeal of internal-revenue taxes, with the exception of those on tobacco, spirits, and fermented liquors, and favoring the abolition of stamps on bank checks, proprietary articles, and matches; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LAPHAM. I present a memorial signed by a large number of citizens of the State of New York who are the owners of a large portion of the tracts of land known as the Des Moines River lands in Iowa, who have acquired their titles from the State of Iowa through the grant from Congress, remonstrating against the passage of the bill now pending before the Senate on that subject. I move that the memorial lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of the establishment of a mail-route between the village of Esdaile and the post-office of Herbert, in the county of Pierce, and the establishing of a tri-weekly mail-service thereon; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair also presents a joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin in relation to suppressing disease among cattle; similar to the one presented by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON]. Without being read, it will lie on the table.

Mr. CONGER. I present and ask to have read to the Senate a remonstrance of citizens of Dakota assembled at Grand Forks. It has been sent to me as there is no Senator from Dakota. I wish to have it read and printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have it read or merely printed in the RECORD?

Mr. CONGER. I ask to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read, if there be no objection.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

GRAND FORKS, DAKOTA, February 25, 1883.

Senator OMAR D. CONGER,
Washington, D. C.:

Following resolution passed at immense mass-meeting here to-night. Citizens Lower Red River Valley mass-meeting assembled Grand Forks, Dakota, Saturday, February 24, respectfully call your attention to proposed change in land laws of United States, whereby pre-emption law repealed and homestead law materially amended; and we earnestly protest against such change and give our reasons therefor, as follows: First, by such change only way by which pioneer can obtain any title to good land is by actual, continuous residence thereon of two and half years; he can not sell land without losing all improvements; can not borrow money thereon, however urgent necessities may be; he is not safe even in erecting comfortable buildings, because his uncertain title in cold climate of north. This is great hardship; one likely to discourage great emigration that now peopling improving ample territory. Second, we believe it true policy of General Government to encourage rapid settlement of Dakota's prairies and offer all reasonable facilities toward helping poor men especially to acquire share of fertile farms which are gift of Government.

Your attention called to fact that poor man having no title to land can not live in our rigorous climate two and half years with comfort in temporary habitations which his precarious title and personal labor only allows him to erect, while if he can acquire title to land by six months' actual residence, which pre-emption law or commutation clause in homestead law permits him to do, he is thus given credit which enables him to build up substantial home and live in comfortable prosperity. Although there may have been many frauds perpetrated in acquiring timber lands under pre-emption act, we believe that there are but few instances where this has been used to acquire in fraudulent manner any of prairie land in Northwest; and although in theory it may seem open to fraud, we feel safe in asserting from observation of its practical workings that in practice it is free from fraud as any law can be devised whereby public domain is parceled out to the private citizen. An amendment to pre-emption laws restricting entries to agricultural lands only would correct all abuses and frauds have prevailed in past. Its intention so amended is demanded in interest of pioneer settler and facilitate the rapid permanent settlement of great prairies Northwest; that amendment to homestead requiring residence two and a half years unjust oppression entirely in interest of wealthy as opposed to poor; and its passage will exclude from Dakota thousand earnest hardy settlers. Equally fertile lands in British territory, where advantages even more liberal than these now offered by our present pre-emption law are held out to settlers.

H. G. STONE,
J. G. HAMILTON,
W. J. ANDERSON,
H. H. NOYES,
GEO. B. WINSHIP,
Committee Representing One Thousand Citizens.

Mr. CONGER. I know most of the gentlemen who have signed that memorial to be gentlemen of character and standing. I have received from other parts of the country, as I understand other Senators have, such protests as could be hurriedly prepared after notice that the pre-emption laws, which have been in force in the United States since 1841, have been by the action of the House repealed, and the right of the poor man to select his home, the time given him to select it and gather the money to pay for it, under which thousands and tens of thousands of homes have been obtained in the United States, all over the West, since that pre-emption law was passed, has been repealed without notice, and that repeal fastened on to an appropriation bill, and proceedings under the homestead law itself, as I understand, by this repeal made more troublesome to acquire a homestead. This has been done in some interest, and when the proper time comes I shall endeavor to show to the Senate what that interest is. It has been done on the charge that there are frauds perpetrated under the pre-emption laws, and therefore that means of acquiring a homestead which has been used by hundreds and thousands, and I believe I might say by hundreds of thousands of people all over the settlements of the West, where half the farms now occupied were secured by pre-emption, shall, without notice and without the knowledge of anybody until the bill was passed, be taken away.

These citizens in Dakota, along the west side of the Red River, called together suddenly, some thousand or fifteen hundred of them, carefully considering it, have presented through me to the Senate, and as I desire, to have presented to the Committee on Appropriations their views and their reasons why such action should not be taken. Other Senators will undoubtedly, as soon as it can be understood, hear from their constituents or from people in any portion of the country where there are lands subject to pre-emption.

I denounce this as an attempt to put into the power of corporations and individuals the only chance there is to get possession of the public domain away from settlers, to take it away from the poorer classes who want homes, to take away that right of getting a home from those who can not from the condition of their families or from their own condition go and live permanently upon the lands they desire for their future homes as homesteaders. But I will not enlarge upon that. I desire to have the memorial printed in the RECORD as a brief and conclusive statement of the opinion of those interested in this subject, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed in the RECORD because it was read. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORGAN presented a joint memorial of the General Assembly of Alabama; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint memorial of the General Assembly of Alabama to the Congress of the United States, praying for the passage of a bill to aid in the construction of the Gulf and Chicago Air-Line Railroad.

Your memorialists respectfully represent, that whereas the General Assembly of Alabama did on the 14th day of February, A. D. 1872, adopt a joint memorial address to the Congress of the United States praying the passage of an act granting lands in aid of the construction of the Warrior and Tennessee River Railroad for the reasons therein set forth; and

Whereas the General Assembly of said State did, on the 26th day of January, A. D. 1875, adopt a joint memorial, directed to the said Congress of the United States, praying an appropriation of money for the improvement of the Warrior River between Tuscaloosa and Demopolis in said State, setting forth in said memorial fully the reasons therefor; and

Whereas the General Assembly of said State of Alabama did, on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1876, adopt joint memorial to the Congress of the United States praying an appropriation of money for the survey of the Sipsey River in said State, setting forth the reasons fully in said memorial therefor; and

Whereas the General Assembly of the said State of Alabama did, on the 8th day of December, A. D. 1880, adopt a joint memorial to the Congress of the United States praying for a grant of lands to aid in the construction of the Warrior and Tennessee Rivers Railroad; all of which said memorials had for their object the opening up, settling, improving, and developing the same portions or sections of said State, and which memorials are fully set forth in the United States Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 55, second session Forty-fifth Congress; and

Whereas the Gulf and Chicago Air-Line Railroad Company, a corporation duly chartered and fully organized, and existing by and under the laws of the State of Alabama, and which embrace the Warrior and Tennessee Rivers Railroad, having become successors of the interest then represented by the said Warrior and Tennessee Rivers Railroad, and extending its lines, not only connecting the waters of the Warrior and Tennessee Rivers, but running from the Gulf of Mexico to the lakes on the north, now has a bill pending before Congress, said bill having been acted upon favorably by the Senate Committee on Public Lands, as shown by Senate Report No. 117, and is now on the Calendar of the Senate of the United States, waiting its time to be reached in regular order for passage, praying that certain lands be granted to the said State of Alabama, to be sold to the said Gulf and Chicago Air-Line Railway Company, to aid in its construction and for the benefit of common schools in said State; and

Whereas your memorialists, looking upon the said Gulf and Chicago Air-Line Railway and its early completion as a matter of vast public importance to both the said State and to the country at large, in this, that it will open up to settlement and to the commerce of the world a section, as heretofore described in the aforesaid memorials, valuable in mineral deposits, water-power, timber, and agricultural resources which in their present situation is to the world like a sealed book; and in view of the great importance of this line of railway, and in view of the further fact that the section through which it passes still remains nearly in the same condition as described in said joint memorial approved March 4, 1876, to which special attention is called, and said lands still remaining mainly in the hands of the General Government; and in view of the further fact that it seems impossible to open up or settle any section of country not possessing railroad advantages or facilities, your memorialists, therefore, would respectfully urge upon the Congress of the United States the passage of the bill now pending before Congress, having been reported upon favorably by the Senate committee and is now on the Calendar of the Senate of the United States, praying to buy certain lands to aid in the construction of said Gulf and Chicago Air-Line Railway and for the benefit of common-school education in the State of Alabama.

WILBUR F. FOSTER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
GEO. P. HARRISON, JR.,
President of the Senate.

Approved February 19, 1883.

E. A. O'NEAL, Governor.

Mr. PLATT presented the petition of George F. Rowell and others, citizens of Mazomania, Wisconsin, praying for the passage of a bill granting an increase of pension to soldiers and sailors who lost a limb in the military service of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JONAS. I present a telegram of the Cotton Exchange of New Orleans, Louisiana, protesting against any reduction of the appropriation for cotton-belt observations through the Signal Service Bureau; which I move be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JACKSON. I present a similar telegram from the Cotton Exchange of Memphis, Tennessee. I move that it have the same reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorials will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MAXEY. I present a telegraphic dispatch from the Cotton Exchange of Galveston, Texas, in reference to the same subject as that presented by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS]. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I present a similar memorial from the Cotton Exchange of Mobile, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB presented resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of a resurvey of lands in certain cases and for relief to settlers on certain lands which have never been surveyed or the field-notes of which are false and fraudulent; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FALSE PERSONATION OF GOVERNMENT OFFICERS.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (S. 2507) to punish the false personation of officers and employés of the United States; and it was read the first time by its title.

Mr. GARLAND. I am instructed to ask for the present consideration of the bill in view of its importance. I ask the Secretary to read it at length for consideration, subject of course to objection.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That every person who with intent to defraud either the United States or any person falsely assumes or pretends to be an officer or employé acting under the authority of the United States, or any Department of the Government thereof, and who shall take upon himself to act as such, or who shall in such pretended character demand or obtain from any person or from the United States, or any Department of the Government thereof, any money, paper, document, or other valuable thing, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not longer than three years, or both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, section 5435 of the Revised Statutes makes provision against persons falsely representing themselves to be entitled to certain annuities, dividends, pensions, prize-money, &c., from the Government, and section 5448 makes provision for punishing persons who falsely represent themselves as revenue officers. There the statutes stop. This bill provides for punishing persons who represent themselves as officers or employés or agents of the United States in any respect whatever.

The importance of this measure was made known and emphasized by an amendment to an appropriation bill which was considered by the Senate the other day in making provision for punishing persons who get pensions under false pretenses, but the objection was made to it that it was legislation on an appropriation bill, and the objection was sustained, and that feature of the appropriation bill was stricken out under Rule 29.

The matter was spoken of by several Senators at the time, I think the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], and probably others. It was then brought to the attention of the Judiciary Committee, and to meet the case the committee have unanimously instructed me to report this bill and ask for its present consideration. I think it will take but a short time.

Mr. BLAIR. I trust that the request of the Senator from Arkansas will be granted. This covers a very important and grievous abuse in the administration of the pension law. On the objection being made to the necessary legislation being attached to the appropriation bill last Saturday I introduced a bill, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions, covering simply the difficulty so far as the administration of the pension law is concerned. The Committee on the Judiciary has very properly taken jurisdiction of the subject in its wider sense and reported this bill, which will cover all cases of like abuse. I hope that the bill may now be considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADULTERATED AND SPURIOUS TEAS.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7486) to prevent the importation of adulterated and spurious teas, to report it without amendment, and I ask for the present consideration of the bill. The bill passed the House on Saturday last, and as it is a matter of public importance I think there will be no objection to it, for it is quite well understood by a majority of Senators. The Secretary of the Treasury, I will say, has written a letter favoring the passage of this measure. The committee ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I find by examining the printed bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, which we recently sent to the House, that a mistake has been made by some one by adding, in line 1523, after the words "square foot," the words "when manufactured from tempered steel wire, 45 cents per square foot." That was an amendment proposed to the card-clothing provision, which the Journal shows was not adopted, and the RECORD, on page 14 of February 22, which contains all the proceedings, shows that it was rejected upon a vote of the Senate. As that is not the bill which we sent to the House, I move that the bill, which as I understand is lying on the table of the House, be recalled for the purpose of being corrected.

Mr. ALDRICH. The fact as stated by the Senator from North Carolina is undoubtedly true. I do not know in what way the mistake occurred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary says it is true, and that in the confusion of the last night it probably happened.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know how the mistake occurred, but the amendment was undoubtedly rejected. There are also some errors in punctuation in the bill.

The PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request to recall the bill from the House?

Mr. BAYARD. I suggest to my friend from North Carolina the following order:

Ordered, That the House of Representatives be informed that an error exists in the engrossed copy of the amendments adopted by the Senate to House bill No. 5538, and that the House of Representatives be requested to return the said bill for the purpose of having the said error corrected.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are other errors.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island that there are errors of punctuation in the print. They may not be in the written copy.

Mr. VANCE. If the bill is once more in the power of the Senate I suppose any corrections necessary can be made.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest to the Senator from Delaware to include also an error or two in punctuation.

Mr. VANCE. The order should be general enough to make any correction which may be desired.

Mr. BAYARD. I have modified the order so as to read:

Ordered, That the House of Representatives be informed that certain errors exist in the engrossed copy of the amendments adopted by the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation; and that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the said bill for the purpose of correcting the said errors.

Mr. MORRILL. That is right.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest that we insert the word "clerical" before "errors," for the House of Representatives may be of opinion that the bill has many errors.

Mr. BAYARD. "Errors" is the general phrase, and will include clerical errors. That is what it is. It is an error, I understand, of punctuation in one case and a clerical error in another. Perhaps both come under the description of clerical errors.

Mr. ALDRICH. They are both clerical errors.

Mr. MORRILL. I think it much better to say "clerical errors," so that the House may understand we do not want to make any other change. They are clerical errors.

Mr. BAYARD. Very well; I will modify the resolution by saying "clerical errors."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina accept the resolution of the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. VANCE. I accept the order or resolution prepared by the Senator from Delaware.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

BRIDGE OVER THAMES RIVER.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 2274, to report it favorably with amendments. I desire to call the attention of the Senators from Rhode Island and Connecticut to the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. This is a very important bill and should be acted upon at once. It has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Commerce, and I think will excite no discussion. I ask for its consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us hear what it is.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must object until we dispose of some other cases. It is a Senate bill and may not pass the House. There are many other bills reported favorably, and the passage of which by the Senate will finally dispose of them. It is an injustice to have those bills lying here to finally fail at the end of the session, while our time is consumed in passing Senate bills that can not become laws.

Mr. HOAR. We have been spending two or three days on a Senate bill which nobody expects to get through the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. If I had been in the majority of the Senate I would have moved to postpone it indefinitely; but if Senators who are in the majority, that control the business of the Senate, do not move to postpone that bill indefinitely, if it is proposed to take it up and consume the remainder of the time of the session with it, I shall make the motion.

Mr. PLATT. I must appeal to the Senator from Missouri to withdraw his objection to this bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall renew it if he withdraws it.

Mr. PLATT. It is a bill for a bridge across the Thames River near New London, Connecticut. It is in the ordinary form of bridge bills and has been considered by the Committee on Commerce. I believe the Senate has within a short time acted upon two bridge bills bridging the Missouri River——

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me state here——

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator wait till I finish my sentence?

Mr. MORGAN. What is before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Missouri objected to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That takes it over, but by courtesy Senators may be heard.

Mr. PLATT. I simply want to finish my sentence, which is that I think the Senate has within a week acted upon two bills bridging the Missouri River without objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Objection was made, and we have not been able to act upon them.

Mr. MORGAN. I object to further debate. The question is not before the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us take up the bridge bills and pass them all together, and not one at a time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer a resolution in the nature of an order for acting on business, that we proceed to the consideration of pension bills subject to objection, and also House bills subject to objection, so as to clear the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is unfinished business for to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that need not come up until 1 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is true. The Senator from Ohio offers a resolution, which will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, first, That the Senate proceed to the consideration of House pension bills in their order, including increase-of-pension bills; second, House bills reported favorably, but subject to objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio offers this order, which he asks the present consideration of.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let it be reported again.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is simply to take up pension bills and House bills.

The order was read.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the motion?

Mr. SHERMAN. I propose first to clear the Calendar of House pension bills; then, secondly, to take up other House bills and dispose of them, subject, however, to objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Until 2 o'clock?

Mr. SHERMAN. Until 2 o'clock.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the Senator from Ohio will strike out that clause "subject to objection." A House bill taken up on the Calendar ought to be considered or indefinitely postponed. To allow one Senator to object merely to a bill and carry it over because he wants to reach something that is behind it, is not fair, is not right, and it does not give Senators proper opportunity, particularly those who are a little delicate about thrusting their demands on the Senate. I trust the Senator will strike out the clause about objection, and take up House bills in the order in which they come. If the Senate wants to postpone them, let it do so or vote them down; but let each man have a showing before the Senate for his bill.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask the Senator from Ohio to modify his resolution relating to the consideration of pension cases so as to include all pension cases, both House and Senate pension bills which have been reported. There are not more than twenty or twenty-five such bills, and I have no doubt some of the bills which have been reported in the Senate, if they can be passed here, will pass the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that. I wish to expedite business.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us dispose of the unobjected cases first.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have but one week before us, and every moment of that time ought to be consumed profitably with a view to the despatch of public business. This is the proper order to be made at the last of the session, and I think it will expedite business very much indeed.

Mr. HARRISON. Let me add to the Senator from Ohio also my request to include Senate pension bills.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to say "pension bills."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is to consider from 12 o'clock to 1 pension bills, and next House bills in their order

Mr. BLAIR. If we are to take up the pension cases why not go on with them indefinitely until they are concluded?

Mr. HOAR. The Chair stated the motion as from 12 to 1 o'clock.

Mr. SHERMAN. At 1 o'clock it will be superseded by the unfinished business, but I shall vote to go on with this order and let the unfinished business come up later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the Senate can do.

Mr. SHERMAN. We can not now provide for more than the time between now and 1 o'clock.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Ohio modify his resolution so as to strike out "subject to objection?"

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, I am going to move now that we proceed to the consideration of the pension bills on the Calendar in their order and next House bills in their order. We can limit debate afterward.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the motion.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is the morning hour over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the order be made, and then I will yield.

Mr. HALE. It will not be made, I fear.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let the order be stated. There seems to be confusion and misunderstanding about it. I have not yet heard it, and I have been listening attentively. I have heard various statements made, but there is no correct statement of it before the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Chair please state the order?

The ACTING SECRETARY. The proposition is to "consider, first, pension bills in their order, including increase-of-pension bills; second, House bills reported favorably."

Mr. INGALLS. Is that for to-day only?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. Or is it to be a permanent order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From 12 to 1 o'clock to-day.

Mr. INGALLS. It is entirely unnecessary to have the latter part of the order in, because the pension bills will take up all the time.

Mr. PLATT. If I can get the attention of the Senate for a single moment——

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have it understood——

Mr. PLATT. Have I the floor?

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to have the question stated? I want to have the question stated so that we can understand it before the Senator proceeds. When the Chair states it he says it is an order from 12 to 1; when the Secretary reads it I do not so understand it. Will the Chair have it reported again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio mean from 12 to 1 o'clock?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir, I did not make such a limitation, but I know that at 1 o'clock it will be the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business. I will undoubtedly vote to lay that business aside and go on with pension bills.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I hope the Senator from Ohio will not vote to lay aside the regular order at that time. The regular order can be disposed of I think in a very short time.

Mr. BLAIR. What is the regular order?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It is a House bill for the payment of claims.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us go on for the hour at any rate.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator modify his order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I never moved to limit it to 1 o'clock, but at 1 o'clock I know what the duty of the Chair is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to consider—

First, pension bills in their order, including increase-of-pension bills; second, House bills reported favorably.

Mr. PLATT. If I have the floor I should like to make a single remark.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. PLATT. The order as first suggested by the Senator from Ohio was to consider uncontested pension bills. That has been stricken out. That I understand will take us back to the commencement of the Calendar, to begin with a long list of pension bills which have two reports, a majority and minority report, which are contested cases, each one of which will provoke discussion; and so if that order passes in its present state, as I understand it, we shall not arrive at the uncontested cases for a very long time to come. I desired to make that statement.

Mr. MITCHELL. That was my understanding of the order. I certainly think, therefore, it ought to be modified.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the order so that it will be that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension cases, and after that the House bills reported favorably.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope that will not be done. The effect of it will simply be this: to put it in the power of a single member of the Pensions Committee who has submitted the views of the minority in opposition to the majority report to defeat the passage of a pension bill. I know of some pension cases on this list that the majority of the committee have reported favorably, but there is a minority report that need not provoke but the briefest discussion, and it is unfair that such cases should absolutely be barred out from the consideration of the Senate in this way.

Mr. COCKRELL. But the Senate has several pension cases at the head of the Calendar that will consume two or three days before they can pass, and it is simply an absolute obstruction of business. Now, when we dispose of the unobjected pension cases——

Mr. INGALLS. I rise to a question of order. I object to the further consideration of this resolution to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the regular order of business? The morning hour has expired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to continuing the reception of morning business? If there is objection, the morning hour has expired.

Mr. BLAIR. I have a little morning business I should like to present.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the morning hour is over——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour is over.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will give way to morning business, but I wish to make a motion in regard to the Calendar. I believe the Calendar is now in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir. The Chair will receive further morning business. Reports of committees are in order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McDILL, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 301) for the relief of Stephen P. Yeomans and Andrew Leech, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7462) to create three additional land districts in the Territory of Dakota, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1252) for the relief of the estate of Lucien Goyaux, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6889) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa F. Stone, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROLLINS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 2508) to amend section 4488 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORGAN. I draw the bill to the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, as it relates to providing some life-saving apparatus upon board of steam-vessels, for the safety of human lives. I move its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 139) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. VAN WYCK asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 140) granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Hastings, Nebraska, in the month of September, 1883; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, and Mr. JOHNSTON submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. 7327) to establish post-routes; which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. HOAR, Mr. McMILLAN, and Mr. VOORHEES submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRINTING OF RIVER AND HARBOR BILL REPORT.

Mr. HOAR. I move that there be reprinted for the use of the Senate the usual number of the House report accompanying the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate a complete list of all persons now employed, or employed since July 1, 1882, by or under the United States Geological Survey, and the salaries and compensation paid to each person.

CORTE DE MADERA DEL PRESIDIO.

Mr. MILLER, of California, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into and report to the Senate upon the questions herein, relating to the land in Marin County, California, known as "Corte de Madera del Presidio," of one square league of land, granted to Juan Read by the Mexican Government and confirmed by the United States courts to the heirs of said Read.

First. Whether the location of said grant, as lately made or ordered to be made, is in conformity with the original grant and juridical possession.

Second. Whether the location as thus directed does or does not include lands reserved by the United States authorities for military purposes; and if it does include such lands, what quantity.

Third. Whether the location as thus directed does or does not include lands sold as public lands by the United States, and for which patents have been issued.

Fourth. Whether the location as thus directed does or does not include marsh or swamp and overflowed land belonging to the State of California, and which said State had long since sold and conveyed by deeds to the purchasers; and if it does include such land, what quantity.

Fifth. Whether there has or has not been made an actual survey of said grant by a surveyor in the field, giving courses and distances, which has received the approval of the Department of the Interior, and, if so, by whom was such survey made.

Sixth. That the said committee inquire into and report all other matters material to a full knowledge of everything relating to said grant and the controversy in connection therewith, examining all the evidence, reports, opinions, and decisions made thereon in the Department of the Interior, the War Department, and Department of Justice, and any other information deemed important, sending for persons and papers if necessary; and report the same to the Senate by bill or otherwise.

And the President is hereby requested to withhold the issuing of any patent for said grant known as "Corte de Madera del Presidio" until such time as the investigation herein directed can be made and action had in accordance therewith.

RELATIONS OF LABOR AND CAPITAL.

Mr. BLAIR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be authorized and directed to continue during the Forty-eighth Congress the inquiry now being prosecuted by that committee under resolution of the Senate passed on the 7th day of August, 1882, authorizing and directing that committee to take into consideration the subject of the relations between labor and capital, the wages and hours of labor, the condition of the laboring classes in the United States, and their relative condition and wages compared with similar classes abroad, and to inquire into the division between labor and capital of their joint productions in the United States; also, the subject of labor strikes, and to inquire into the causes thereof and the agencies producing the same; and to report what legislation should be adopted to modify or remove such causes and to provide against their continuance or recurrence, as well as any other legislation calculated to promote harmonious relations between capitalists and laborers and the interests of both by the improvement of the condition of the industrial classes of the United States. And in the further prosecution of those inquiries said committee shall possess all the rights and powers conferred by the original resolution.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for an order that the testimony already taken may be printed for the use of the committee, and I wish to include further testimony as it may be taken.

Ordered, That the Committee on Education and Labor may have printed for its use testimony taken and to be taken by it under the resolution of the Senate of August 7, 1882.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the resolution of August 7, 1882, which never has been printed, be printed for the use of the Senate, and that this resolution be also printed.

The motion was agreed to.

LIST OF BILLS.

Mr. BLAIR submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Acting Secretary be required to have made a complete list of all bills and joint resolutions introduced by each Senator during the first and second sessions of the Forty-seventh Congress, showing the status of the same, arranged numerically as to bills and alphabetically as to Senators, to be printed in pamphlet form for use of Senators.

Mr. BLAIR. That is precisely the thing which the bill clerk did for us at the close of the last session. It will cost nothing additional to print in pamphlet form, as I am assured by him and others, and will be much more convenient for the use of Senators. It was thought that possibly a resolution was necessary.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has closed and the Calendar is in order.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I desire to call up a resolution I introduced some time ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Calendar goes on the Senator can call it up.

Mr. SHERMAN. I simply wish to renew again the request that an order be made that the Senate proceed to the consideration, first, of pension bills reported favorably, and, second, of House bills reported favorably. I do it in the interest of the public business. In that way we shall dispose of five times as many bills as if we have a scramble.

Mr. INGALLS. That can only be done by unanimous consent; it is changing the established rule of the Senate, and I am unwilling that any order shall be taken to-day that would probably result in the consumption of all the remainder of the time of this session, and therefore I object and ask that we proceed under the regular order of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar is in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I introduce my resolution as part of the morning business, and it can lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that we proceed during the remainder of the hour to the consideration of unobjected pension cases.

Mr. INGALLS. That is right.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Missouri means by that cases objected to on the floor of the Senate and not cases where there are divided reports.

Mr. MORGAN. The order of business when the Calendar was last reached was the bill to regulate the disposal of coal-lands in the State of Alabama. That is in the nature of unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But if any Senator asks for the consideration of a resolution on the Calendar that takes precedence of a bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to do that. I wish to call for the consideration of a resolution heretofore submitted by me. I understand the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] has been recognized for a similar purpose, and I have a resolution I desire to have considered to-day after his is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has decided that resolutions are in order; but the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] moved that the remainder of the morning hour——

Mr. INGALLS. No; he asks unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He asks unanimous consent to consider during the morning hour unobjected pension cases. Did the Senator from Missouri ask for unanimous consent to consider unobjected cases until 1 o'clock?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; I move to proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension cases.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator had better ask unanimous consent.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not object to that, but there are two or three resolutions that ought to be considered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I withdraw the motion until those resolutions are called up.

FLORIDA CLAIMS.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I desire to call up resolution of inquiry directed to the President submitted by me on the 27th of December, 1882.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest:

I. Whether, in his opinion, the last clause of the ninth article of the treaty of 1819, between the United States and Spain, has been fully executed according to its just obligations under the international law, by the payment, in 1836, and subsequently, of the value of the property at the time of its loss or destruction by the operations of the American Army in 1812 and 1813, without any compensation for delay of payment, or for the loss of the use, fruits, or profits of the property lost or destroyed; and,

II. Whether the measure, or rate of "satisfaction," adopted and applied by the judges authorized to adjudicate the claims under the treaty, namely, to add to the value of the property at the time of its loss or destruction (in which value the Secretary of the Treasury has concurred) interest as damages, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, being the legal rate of the Spanish province of East Florida at the time of the injury, as a compensation for delay of payment, and the loss or deprivation of its use is, or is not, in accordance with the obligations of the treaty, under the international law, as a just and equitable rule of compensation for such injuries; and

III. Whether the awards of the judges who were authorized to adjudicate claims under the above-named clause of the said treaty ought or ought not to be held as final and binding under the treaty in respect to claims within its provisions when made in favor of the claimants and Spain and against the United States as when made against the claimants and Spain and in favor of the United States?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a pending resolution, or one offered now?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It has been pending for some time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was offered during the month of December.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations for consideration.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I regret very much that the Senator from Vermont has made that motion. It is merely a resolution of inquiry directed to the President of the United States, made necessary by the action of the Senate itself at its last session.

This subject was brought to the attention of Congress on two occasions by the President of the United States in a special message, because the representative of Spain had urgently requested the executive Government to come to some conclusion respecting this matter. The subject was referred to Congress by President Hayes in two messages. The House took action upon it and so did the Senate, but they were not in accord. The House after full consideration passed a bill to fulfill the stipulations of the treaty with regard to Spain.

The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom the matter was referred, through my distinguished friend, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], made a report in which they took the ground that the Executive alone had the authority to interpret this disputed question between the two Governments, and that it was not competent for Congress to take any action in the matter until the Executive, the treaty-making power, had come to a conclusion with respect to this subject-matter between Spain and the United States.

Here were the two Houses disagreeing upon the question, the Senate disclaiming jurisdiction over the matter at all, and saying that Congress had no authority to move a step until the Executive had formed a judgment about it. Now, in order to harmonize if possible the two Houses of Congress upon this matter, I propose to elicit, if not incompatible with the public interest, from the President his opinion with respect to this treaty, and to ask him whether in his judgment it has been fulfilled or whether Spain has a just right to complain.

Mr. President, other matters under treaties have been brought up here and discussed elaborately. I do not intend to go into this matter at length, but its justice is well known to those who have considered it. It has arisen out of a lawless act on the part of this Government which will remain a dark stigma upon its history for long years. The records show that under the authority of this Government the province of a friendly power was ruthlessly invaded, the property and habitations of the people destroyed, and our public armed force subsisted itself there for years while we were in a relation of peace to the country whose jurisdiction extended over that territory.

When we came to acquire Florida under the treaty of 1819, Spain very properly insisted that reparation should be made for the outrages which had been committed there, and a plain provision was put into the treaty on that subject which required the United States to make reparation according to due process of law to every inhabitant and Spanish soldier in that territory for injuries done to his person and his property by the public forces of the United States that invaded the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time is out; the five minutes have expired.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Are we under the five-minute rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir; the Calendar is under consideration, and the five-minute rule applies to that under the so-called Anthony rule.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move that the Senator have leave to proceed.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I shall not occupy more than five minutes longer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there unanimous consent to the Senator from Florida having five minutes longer?

Mr. HAWLEY. Is the question on the reference or on the merits of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] moved to refer it.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is the question before us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moved to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is the pending question—not the merits of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senator from Florida has the floor. He has the right to speak on the merits. Is there objection to the Senator continuing five minutes longer? The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I say, Mr. President, that this treaty has remained unfulfilled to the present day, and while we are exacting every day compliance on the part of foreign nations with treaty stipulations, we are not the first to set an example in that way. I say that the treaty required that the damages suffered by those people should be adjudicated according to process of law, and process of law means a hearing, a trial, and a judgment.

Mr. Monroe referred the matter to Congress and Congress remitted the matter to the court of the United States in the Territory of Florida to be decided judicially. The cases were there decided and the judgments entered in accordance with the provisions of the duty judicially. It was no commission, it was no executive or administrative body, but the provisions of the treaty required a judicial determination by process of law, and Spain committed her rights to our own judicial tribunal. When those judgments were solemnly entered under a treaty and came up here the Secretary of the Treasury arrogated to himself the authority to review the judgments thus rendered by a judicial court in Florida under this treaty, set himself up as a reviewing power, and set them aside, when under the provisions of that international compact he had no authority except to give them effect and carry them out.

The tribunal allowed interest upon the damages that had been sustained by the people there in consequence of the invading force at 5 per cent. per annum, the usual rate of the province at that time; but the Secretary of the Treasury, in open violation as is claimed by Spain of this treaty, set aside one part of the judgment and paid the other, and it remains unexecuted to this day, to the dishonor of this great Government.

Mr. President, I think the time has come when this matter ought to be settled, and Spain has a right to complain especially when you are requiring her every day to pay interest here upon demands against her government under your mixed commission, and here stands the judgment of the President of the United States in two special messages calling the attention of Congress, but nothing has been done. It is an old matter and therefore ought not to be regarded now!

Mr. President, there ought to be no statute of limitations here. Spain in my opinion has a clear right to demand from this Government the fulfillment of this treaty; and all that is asked by this resolution is the opinion of the Executive to be sent to Congress in accordance with the suggestion of my learned friend from Alabama, to know what view that department takes of this subject in order that Congress may discharge its duty in the matter.

I should be glad if this resolution should go through without a reference, because the Committee on Foreign Relations is already in possession of all the facts with respect to this subject, and it is not expected that any new light will be thrown upon it. I should be glad if the Senator from Vermont would permit the resolution to pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The five minutes have expired. The question is on the reference of the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My motive in moving this reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations arose now from the simple circumstance that this resolution appears to call upon the Chief Magistrate of the United States for his opinion upon a variety of topics or branches of one topic embraced in a resolution, and I should a little prefer as one Senator not to send a request of that kind to the President to get a message back, and to be told that he does not know any place in the Constitution that authorizes us to call upon him for his opinion. I should be glad to have the thing go to a committee where if it is necessary to do anything it can be put into a shape where we shall not be reminded of our constitutional relations with the Chief Magistrate.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator allow me one word?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. This resolution is necessary, as I conceive, in view of the action already taken by the Senate which has affirmed the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations that it had not jurisdiction over the matter, but that the subject belonged to the Executive for his interpretation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know; but that does not authorize us to call on the Executive for his opinion about anything.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Both Senators are out of order; their time has expired. The question is on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

CHILI AND PERU.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to call up the resolution offered by me on the 21st of February.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be reported.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested, if not in his judgment incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate any information in his possession touching an alleged joint agreement between the ministers of the United States, of Great Britain, of France, and of Italy, now serving at Lima, or Peru, to make a joint effort to bring about peace between Chili and Peru, and to inform the Senate whether the minister of the United States has been instructed to invite or accept the mediation of European powers in the settlement of a purely American question.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, the public dispatches from South America, apparently authentic in character and uncontradicted, indicate an extraordinary condition of affairs. If true, there is to be a European mediation in the long-standing war between Chili and Peru; that the United States assents to this joint mediation, agreeing to take an active part therein. The reason claimed for this mediation is that Chili is making extortionate and unjust demands from a prostrate foe, and causing general bankruptcy in the conquered country, ignoring and trampling under foot rights of neutrals.

These European ministers, therefore, wish to indicate to Chili in an imperative manner the necessity of her abating extreme demands and consenting to a reasonable treaty of peace. About one year ago a special envoy from the United States, Mr. Trescot, went to Chili with instructions from Secretary Blaine to present to that Government certain views of the United States, of which this joint agreement of the four powers seems like a mere paraphrase.

If I remember correctly, as Mr. Trescot was about to make the proper representations to the Government of Chili, he was stopped by cable dispatch from Secretary Frelinghuysen and was informed that any intervention in the affairs of other nations was against the policy of the United States; substantially, that murder, massacre, and destruction of trade might go unchecked between two independent republics, so far as the United States was concerned.

From that time nothing has been done by us to stop the anarchy that reigns along the South Pacific coast.

At last the leading European powers woke up to the enormity of the situation, and propose to interfere, and the United States is to be permitted to tag along at the tail end of a foreign intervention which sets aside the Monroe doctrine which we have zealously guarded.

Amid the convulsions of the civil war Great Britain, France, and Spain had a convention at London, under pretense of seeking redress of grievances against Mexico through a common action, and invited the United States to accede thereto. Secretary Seward, on the 4th day of December, 1861, replied: "Upon due consideration, however, the President is of opinion that it would be inexpedient to seek satisfaction of their claims at this time through an act of accession to the convention. Among the reasons for this decision, which the undersigned is authorized to assign, are, first, that the United States so far as it is practicable prefer to adhere to a traditional policy recommended to them by the father of their country and confirmed by a happy experience which forbids them from making alliances with foreign nations. When, during the short but eventful administration of Garfield, France proposed to join the United States to put an end to the South American war, she was answered firmly but respectfully that it was against the policy of this country to invite or permit the intervention of European governments in American affairs, except as friendly arbitrators when invited by both parties to a controversy.

France accepted the answer cordially and left the task to the United States.

Doubtless every intelligent man in this country who followed the couse of this unhappy struggle realizes that the power of the United States wisely exerted as it was to be by Mr. Trescot would long since have secured peace between Chili and Peru.

The change of policy which suspended or diverted Mr. Trescot's mission will be truly unfortunate should it go so far as to subject the United States to the humiliation and indignity of playing a subordinate part to a European intervention in American affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to say that I hope this resolution will be adopted.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, returned to the Senate agreeably to its request the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7181) making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. H. KETCHAM of New York, Mr. FRANK HISCOCK of New York, and Mr. WILLIAM H. FORNEY of Alabama managers at the conference on its part.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7482) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. G. CANNON of Illinois, Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL of Pennsylvania, and Mr. J. D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee managers at the conference on its part.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand that upon the bill returned from the House in relation to the revenue and tariff no action is required except the correction on the part of the Secretary of the clerical errors, and then the Secretary will return the bill to the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is so. There need be no action by the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There must be an order to return the bill to the House, it having been recalled by an order of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the corrections are made the Secretary will return the bill to the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it lie on the table for the present.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7482) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was Ordered, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7181) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. PLUMB, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was—

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. VEST. I desire to call up the resolution submitted by me in regard to the Yellowstone National Park.

The Acting Secretary read the following resolution submitted by Mr. VEST on the 17th inst.:

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators shall be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, whose duty it shall be to examine and report to the Senate, at its next session, what is the present condition of the Yellowstone National Park, and what action has been taken by the Department of the Interior in regard to the management of said park, and the leasing or contracting to lease any part of the park for building hotels or other houses thereon. Also, what legislation, if any, is necessary to protect the timber, game, or objects of curiosity and interest in said park, and to establish a system of police, and to secure the proper administration of justice therein.

Said committee shall have power to meet in vacation and to send for persons and papers, and to employ a stenographer, the expenses therefor to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

And until said committee shall report by bill or otherwise, the Secretary of the Interior is requested to take no action in the matter of leasing or contracting to lease any part of said park for any purpose, and to cause any cutting of timber, or erection of hotels or other buildings by any person or corporation, to be discontinued within said park.

The Secretary of the Interior is also requested to take immediate action for the protection of the game and objects of interest in the park, and to this end he is requested to call upon the proper military authorities for such force as may be necessary to accomplish such purpose.

Mr. VEST. I offer an amendment to the resolution to come in after the word "Senate," at the end of the second clause:

Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by said committee in visiting said park.

The Senate is doubtless familiar with the condition of this subject at this time. I stated the other day that this committee was not to be organized for any junketing purpose or to visit the park at the public expense. In order to put that beyond question I have offered this amendment.

My purpose in now moving for the appointment of this committee is to ascertain and settle the conflict of opinion and of information before the members of the Committee on Territories, and particularly before myself and another Senator who have been a sub-committee on the subject, so that we may have the truth in regard to the condition of the park and as to where the limits of the park should be located. The bill reported by the Committee on Territories and now on the Calendar, I am advised by a number of Senators, can not be passed at this session. In the mean time this state of facts exists beyond any controversy, that in the face of the action of the Committee on Territories, in the face of the action of the Department, a party of speculators—Rufus Hatch and others—have gone into this park and commenced the erection of a hotel, have cut down timber and are proceeding to treat the park as if it were their property exclusively, regardless of the rights of the United States.

I was advised some time ago that this state of things was in existence, and I called the attention of the Secretary of the Interior in person to it, and I received from him the assurance that he had made no lease, that he did not propose to make any lease and no contract for any lease. If the Senate will look at the agreement or contract which was made and which is contained in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior of December 12, 1882, it will be seen that the only contract that ever has been made by the Department of the Interior provided that a lease might be made thereafter and that the ground might be selected. The contract provided for six hundred and forty acres of ground around each of the geysers, and that this company should have the exclusive privilege, the monopoly of 4,400 acres of land in the park surrounding every object of curiosity, for a nominal rent not exceeding $2 per acre. But no lawyer will pretend to say, whether in the Senate or out of it, that this contract ever gave to these gentlemen any right to go into that park for the purpose of cutting timber or erecting hotels. They have acted as if a lease had been already executed. The Secretary of the Interior has informed me in writing that he has made no such lease, and does not propose to make any such lease until Congress shall have acted upon the matter. I ask the Secretary to read the communication received from the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inform the Senator that his time is out. The Senate may extend it.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to vote on the question.

Mr. HARRISON. I suppose I may have five minutes on this resolution, and I ask for the reading of the letter to which the Senator refers, if he desires to have it read, out of my time.

Mr. VEST. I am obliged to the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks for the reading of the letter.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Iowa handed me some time ago a letter from Mr. Langford, well known here, which I sent to the Secretary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Missouri have five minutes more. This is a matter of importance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection five minutes more will be allowed the Senator from Missouri. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. VEST. I laid this letter before the Secretary of the Interior and I ask the Senate now to listen to his response to show that no lease has been made and that he said no lease should be made until after the adjournment of this session of Congress awaiting the action of the Senate.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 18, 1883.

SIR: I have Mr. Langford's letter addressed to you and by you referred to me concerning the Yellowstone Park. I have determined not to take any action in the matter of the lease to Messrs. Hatch & Co. until Congress shall take action on your bill; at least not until the close of the session. If no action should be taken on the bill I shall feel inclined to execute to them a lease in strict accordance with the views expressed by your committee in the report made to the Senate.

I have issued an order prohibiting the cutting of timber without special authority from the Secretary, and prohibiting the killing of game within the park.

I trust you will procure the early passage of the bill, so that it may pass the House.

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

Hon. GEORGE G. VEST,
United States Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator from Missouri state who compose this company?

Mr. VEST. The Secretary can read the names from the report of the Secretary of the Interior, which I send to the desk.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the list of directors of the Yellowstone National Park Improvement, but was interrupted by

Mr. BECK. I desire to state, if the Senator from Missouri will allow me, that I was sent for just now from the room of the Committee on Appropriations, and when I came in I ascertained this matter was up in reference to the Yellowstone National Park. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and myself, as a sub-committee, are now considering the sundry civil bill, in which there is the following provision for the protection and improvement of the Yellowstone National Park:

For the protection and improvement of the Yellowstone National Park: For every purpose and object necessary for the protection, preservation, and improvement of the Yellowstone National Park, including compensation of superintendent and employés, $15,000; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby prohibited from leasing any portion of the Yellowstone National Park to any person, company, or corporation for any purpose whatever; and all leases agreements, exclusive privileges, or monopolies granted or entered into are hereby declared to be of no force and effect; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to make necessary details of troops to prevent trespassers or intruders entering the park with the object of destroying game therein, or for any other purpose prohibited by law.

We have sent for the Secretary of the Interior and he will be here in half an hour, and we expect to-morrow to be able to report the bill back.

Mr. VEST. I will state to the Senate frankly that if I believed the Committee on Appropriations would adopt the enactment in the bill of the House of Representatives, and succeed in securing its passage, I would very cheerfully acquiesce. It meets the whole object which I have in view. The Senator from Kentucky well understands, for I had a conversation with him on this very subject the other day and with the chairman of the committee, and they advised me that under the rule adopted by the Committee on Appropriations, inasmuch as this was legislation, it would probably be stricken from the bill. If they should make a report against that clause, I know the strength of the Committee on Appropriations too well in this body to suppose I could defeat them. For that reason I have brought up the resolution; I want one or the other.

Mr. BECK. There are so many things in the sundry civil bill which are more or less legislative that I rather think we shall be compelled to recognize much of what the House has done.

Mr. DAWES. I agree with the Senator from Kentucky that if that provision should become a law it would meet the present exigency, but the Secretary of the Interior, when we come back here next year, will be at sea as to what he ought to do about that park. That park is peculiar; no general rule can apply to it, and while the Secretary desires to carry out, I believe, faithfully the ideas of the Senator from Missouri, as yet the Secretary is as ignorant as we are to what ought to be done there in the future. Would it not be well that the resolution should be adopted even if the clause in the sundry civil bill shall pass, in order that we may be enlightened in the future as to the permanent disposition of the park?

It has lain there without attracting any notice from visitors or anybody else for ten years since the act was adopted, and now it has come to the point, railroads going through there, that there must be some disposition of the care of the park; and as it shall set out this year, so its fate will be. It will be either a permanent park, reserved according to the original idea, or it will waste away and disappear among the public lands. I should think the resolution of the Senator from Missouri might be exceedingly proper, even if the provision in the sundry civil bill should pass.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say that the resolution of the Senator from Missouri, if we report the bill to-morrow, can be acted upon at any time after action of the two Houses on the provision in the sundry civil bill; and that action might throw such light upon it as to enable the committee to act more intelligently. We may make some confusion temporarily if we prohibit the providing of a place for the accommodation of people who desire to go there this summer. There is no place for them I understand.

Mr. VEST. There is a hotel now there.

Mr. DAWES. I think it is desirable that something should be done for the summer; but the care should be that nobody should get such a foothold there that he can not be made to conform to what shall ultimately be deemed wise legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Missouri is out. It has been occupied by the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. VEST. I hope that will not be taken out of my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir; you allowed it to be done.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator from Missouri will be allowed his five minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the Senator will be allowed five minutes more.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to have the list of the directors read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

Mr. VEST. Let the Secretary read the list, as called for by the Senator from Maryland.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Directors of the Yellowstone National Park Improvement Company: Robert S. Green, Elizabeth, New Jersey; C. E. Haupt, Saint Paul, Minnesota; C. A. Roberts, Fargo, Dakota; J. B. Gilfillan, Minneapolis, Minnesota; P. H. Kelly, Saint Paul, Minnesota; C. M. Loring, Minneapolis, Minnesota; H. F. Douglas, Fort Yates, Dakota; Hon. Roscoe Conkling, New York; A. J. Vanderpool, New York; Rufus Hatch, New York; Charles E. Quincey, New York; General J. A. Williamson, Boston, Massachusetts; John B. Lyon, Chicago; J. B. Houston, New York; John Clay, jr., Chicago and Branford, Ontario; Hon. R. T. Merrick, Washington, District of Columbia; Elijah Smith, Boston, Massachusetts; Carroll T. Hobart, Fargo, Dakota; Hugh J. Hastings, New York; Hon. John R. Brady, New York; Samuel W. Allerton, Chicago; Frederic E. Church, New York; John C. Wyman, Valley Falls, Rhode Island; Albert J. Hatch, Stamford, Connecticut; George Ely, Lyme, Connecticut; A. V. H. Carpenter, Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Web. M. Samuel, Saint Louis, Missouri; William Fullerton, New York; D. W. Marratta, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; E. H. Goodman, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; J. R. Barrett, Sedalia, Missouri; John N. Abbott, New York.

Mr. VEST. A great deal has been said about this matter. I have no earthly interest, except to preserve the park. I was in Dakota last summer, and took great interest in the park. I have heard a charge that the resolution I offered in regard to the park was drawn by an attorney of some corporation. I have nothing to say except that it is false in essence, false in utterance, and can only come from one of the parties interested in making a monopoly out of this great domain that belongs to the people of the whole country.

In 1872 3,300 square miles in the Territories of Wyoming and Montana were dedicated for the purpose of a national park, and in the language of the act to be "dedicated and set apart as a public park or pleasuring-ground for the benefit and enjoyment of the people." An application was made to the Secretary of the Interior by E. M. Russell and E. S. Topping, S. J. Hoyt, Ed. Parker, William T. Kirkwood, James Gourley, and R. H. Rowland, George W. Marshall, R. R. Odell, and George W. Monroe for leases of ground and to erect a hotel in the park. Mr. Teller, the Secretary of the Interior, replied, under date of April 28, 1882, to the applications, as will be found in his letter of January 16, 1883, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, the letters and other communications in his Department in regard to the contract concerning the Yellowstone National Park. He quotes the language of the act and says:

As the law authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to grant leases for building purposes "of small parcels of ground," no application will be entertained for the leasing of more than twenty acres in any one tract, and where the land desired is in the immediate vicinity of the principal attractions of the park, the selection should be confined to such parcels of land as will reasonably accommodate the buildings and the necessary surroundings proposed by the lease.

This was a letter of Mr. Teller, Secretary of the Interior, construing his power under the original act of 1872. This was but a year or two ago, when other parties applied for the contract. So this matter stood until the date of the last agreement, which was conditional till the Department of the Interior and the parties could agree upon the terms; but no lease, as the letter of the Secretary of the Interior shows, has ever been made. However, a few months since, about the time of the commencement of this session, Messrs. Hobart and Douglas applied to the Secretary of the Interior for permission to put up a hotel, construct one or more steamboats, establish stage lines, &c., being a monopoly to all intents and purposes of the whole 3,300 square miles, because the contract of lease specifies that around each one of the geysers and around the water-falls of the Yellowstone River and around the lake there shall be drawn a cordon of six hundred and forty acres of ground upon each one of these objects of interest, amounting in the aggregate to 4,440 acres, giving them a monopoly of transportation and of hotel privileges. It would amount simply to the whole 3,300 square miles being in the exclusive control of this company alone. Mr. Teller was absent when this contract was made by Mr. Joslyn, Assistant Secretary of the Interior. These gentlemen afterward took into this contract Mr. Rufus Hatch, of New York, and he incorporated this company with the list of directors already stated. This is the status of this contract to-day. No lease has ever been executed. The lease would have been executed, as I am informed, on the very day I offered this resolution——

Mr. McPHERSON. By whom?

Mr. VEST. By Mr. Teller; but the lease was suspended and there has been no paper executed, as the Secretary of the Interior asserts in the document read here this morning, since the execution of this inchoate or imperfect contract or agreement, Notwithstanding this fact, as I said before, this company, as the Secretary of the Interior informed me himself, has gone into the park, cut down timber, and proceeded to erect a hotel of two hundred rooms or more, and it is asserted that they have made a contract for 20,000 pounds of meat with which to feed their hands. I do not assert this to be true, but I have the very highest authority for saying it.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. VEST. They claim full authority, as I am informed.

Mr. DAWES. Do they claim——

Mr. VEST. I know nothing except that it has been stated in the papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless by indulgence of the Senate the Senator's time is out.

Mr. DAWES. Can I take the floor and give my time to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. VEST. I have only one word more to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are only three minutes left to consider the resolution anyhow. At 1 o'clock the unfinished business comes up.

Mr. DAWES. I would state to the Senator from Missouri that I understand the claim is that this agreement for a lease is equivalent in law to a lease, and under the authority of the agreement the parties are advised that they have the right to do what they have done.

Mr. VEST. I can not conceive that any lawyer who pretends to the name can make pretense that there is any such power in the contract. The very second section of the contract provides that until the Secretary of the Interior shall decide upon selection of the ground on which the hotel shall be built nothing can be done. Throughout the whole length and breadth of the contract reference is made to the execution of a subsequent lease, and until that lease is executed they have no more power or authority to enter the park, to erect buildings, or to cut timber than I have the right to do it now on the grounds adjacent to this Capitol. After they found that Congress was likely to interfere in the matter and that public opinion had been openly uttered on the subject, they determined to get possession, in the hope that the Congress of the United States and the Department of the Interior would not interfere on the ground that they had expended sums of money and it would be a great hardship to have them put out of the park.

There is no discrepancy between my resolution to-day and the provision in the sundry civil bill. They can stand together. All I wish to say is that unless something is done the purposes for which this park was dedicated by the act of 1872 are absolutely nullified; it will become to all intents and purposes private property. It will pass into the hands of this vast corporation having in its list of incorporators men of distinction in every portion of the Union, with a capital of $800,000, as I am informed by one of the gentlemen who organized the scheme, and they will come hereafter to the Congress of the United States, after having put up this immense hotel building, after having made their improvements, even if then we should determine that they must go out of that park, as they certainly had no right to go in there, they will come here with a bill for damages or remuneration, and we shall be told that a case of vandalism in that park has been perpetrated unless the money of the people is taken to recompense them for what they have lost.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, this resolution will go over. It can be called up to-morrow morning.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate proceed to vote on it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I hope not. Allow the unfinished business to be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will consent to lay it aside if a vote on the resolution can be had in reasonable time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the bill (H. R. 7321) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department.

Mr. WINDOM. This resolution will require more time than the Senator from Missouri seems to imagine.

Mr. VEST. I have no doubt it will take some time, and I want it disposed of.

Mr. WINDOM. There are two sides to this question, and I propose to try to demonstrate that the Secretary of the Interior has acted wisely and in the interest of the preservation of that park; that he has acted in accordance with law, and that the parties who are now there are acting in accordance with their contract with the Secretary of the Interior, and that the better way for the preservation of the park is the plan adopted by the Secretary, and I shall endeavor to take time enough to present that. I will do it now or at any other time.

Mr. VEST. In order that the Senator may have that opportunity, for I am very anxious to hear him upon it, I move to set aside the pending business and postpone it informally in order to dispose of this resolution.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I hope that motion will not prevail. The consideration of this resolution from present indications will occupy the remainder of the day. If some limitation can be agreed upon, half an hour or even an hour, I would consent to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will take only a moment to pass your bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. But a very short time.

Mr. HARRIS. I was going to suggest that we let this resolution rest for a moment, because the bill referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin can not take ten minutes, in my opinion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will consume some time to read it.

Mr. HARRIS. It will take only the time necessary to read it. There are no amendments.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not insist on his motion now, but allow the bill, that is the unfinished business, to be disposed of.

Mr. MORGAN. I demand the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the unfinished business, which is House bill No. 7321.

ALLOWANCE OF SUPPLY CLAIMS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7321) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department.

Mr. McDILL. I rise to make a motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order during the pendency of this bill unless by consent.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will hear what the motion is.

Mr. McDILL. I move to set aside the consideration of this bill temporarily and proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6597) to quiet title to settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes. I think it will not take long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is the unfinished business, and unless the Senator from Wisconsin yields the Chair can not receive the motion.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I can not yield for that purpose. I was going to state——

Mr. McDILL. I give notice that I will make that motion as soon as this bill is disposed of.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. These claims were referred to the Quartermaster-General under the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, as amended by subsequent acts. It is almost impossible, after the thorough examination given to these claims in the Treasury Department, that any claim which ought not to be paid can be reported to the Senate. They are filed in the office of the Quartermaster-General; he assigns each claim to a special agent, who goes to the locality where the claim originated and there examines the claim; he reports to the Quartermaster-General; the Quartermaster-General then, if the claim is reported favorably and he thinks it ought to be paid, refers it to the Third Auditor. It is critically examined in the office of the Third Auditor, and by the Third Auditor it is referred to the Second Comptroller. It is passed upon in the office of the Second Comptroller and reported to the Secretary of the Treasury. Under the act of 1864, and the amendments to that act, the Secretary of the Treasury reports all these cases to the House of Representatives.

The bill originates in the House of Representatives. It was carefully compared, as I am informed and as I believe, by the Committee on War Claims in the House of Representatives with the original papers. After some clerical errors were corrected it passed the House of Representatives and was sent to the Senate. It has been carefully examined and critically compared by the clerk of the Committee on Claims of the Senate assisted by competent assistants, and it was found to be correct in every particular, so that the Committee on Claims did not find it necessary to recommend any amendments. The bill as it is now before the Senate is exactly as it came from the House of Representatives. There is no legislation whatever in it. It merely provides for the payment of claims reported by the Secretary of the Treasury to the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. It will be read.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to dispense with the reading of the names and amounts, and let the other part of the bill be read.

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading.

The Principal Legislative Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I have only one observation to make about this bill, to which I wish to call the attention of my friend from Wisconsin. I see the bill provides in some of its instances for paying assignees of original claimants; it provides in some others for paying executors; in others for paying administrators; and in others for paying heirs at law. As all these are personal claims and the money recovered would belong to the personalty of the owner, or to his estate if dead, there is more danger, I think, in providing by an act of Congress to pay anything to an heir at law or to an assignee, than in paying it to an executor or an administrator, the proof of whose title is of course a record one to receive money.

I do not propose to move any amendment but to call attention to it in order that hereafter it may perhaps be corrected on other bills of this character. I think the act should have provided for paying the money to these persons or their legal representatives, so as to leave the Treasury Department the power of having the suitable proof made as to who the assignee is. The general law, of course, refuses to recognize assignees here. There is a positive law against it. There is a general law which requires the money always to be paid to the original claimant. When it comes to estates, of course that is different, and the law has generally provided for it by including the phrase "legal representatives." It is a question of method only, and exposes it to danger in this particular instance. I do not propose to move any amendment but only call attention to it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There are only five claims payable to assignees, and those claims are explained in the report. They are exceptional claims. The committee are of the opinion that no difficulty whatever will arise in these cases. I agree with the Senator from Vermont that the bill ought to provide for the payment of the claims to the original claimants or their legal representatives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the corrections have been made in the revenue bill, and that the bill is ready to be returned to the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to look at the bill as it was read the third time before it goes back, to see if the corrections are made according to the original text. It can be laid aside for the moment. It will not take five minutes.

Mr. MORRILL subsequently said: I ask to have the order passed which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the order.

The order was read, as follows:

Ordered, That the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation be now returned to the House of Representatives, the errors in engrossment of the amendments to the same having been corrected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the order will be made. The Chair hears none.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Utah bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to ask that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of pension bills favorably reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that be so, I must withdraw my motion, because I think the pension bills ought to be acted on first; but when I can get the floor again, after the pension bills are through, I shall move to take up the Utah bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar reported favorably.

Mr. VEST. I move as a substitute that the Senate resume the consideration of the Yellowstone Park resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The only way is to proceed to the pension bills, and those that are reported unfavorably can of course be immediately disposed of, but it would hardly be in order. Though I do not make any point of order, it would be much fairer. There may be some bill where in a moment the error of the committee might be explained. I have not any such bill. I think it better to go to the pension bills.

Mr. HARRISON. I think if we do that we might stumble on some bill reported unfavorably that would consume a great deal of time.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is the difficulty; there are a number of minority reports, and they would consume a great deal of time.

Mr. HARRISON. I make no point on it, however.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar favorably reported?

Mr. VEST. I object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, there is at this moment; it is objected to all around. The custom has been, and there is no difficulty about it, for the Senator in charge of the bills to move them in any order agreed upon, and he will naturally of course move all the affirmative reports first, about which I suppose usually there is not any question. Then after that, if any Senator in the minority wishes to take up an unfavorably reported bill, the matter will be where he can move it. I think that is the fair way, and I do not think it will interfere with getting on with the business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. VEST. I want to say one word. I moved to go on with the consideration of the Yellowstone Park resolution when the Senator from Wisconsin asked me to give way for the bill just disposed of, and I yielded with the understanding that the resolution would then be taken up, and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] could proceed with his argument against the resolution. That was my understanding at the time or I should have pressed the motion then.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You ought to let the pension bills be disposed of, I think.

Mr. VEST. The resolution can be disposed of in the course of an hour.

Mr. WINDOM. I did not understand that there was any agreement whatever to take up the resolution. I certainly should not have consented to it.

Mr. VEST. I understood the Senator from Minnesota to say that he was anxious to be heard, and that he had an unanswerable argument.

Mr. WINDOM. I am ready to be heard at any time.

Mr. VEST. I want the Senate to dispose of the resolution. It has been pending here for weeks; it is a most important matter, and unless action is taken upon it now that park might as well be abandoned. That is the whole of it, in my judgment.

Mr. WINDOM. I simply want to say that, so far as I am concerned, there was no agreement. I am ready to discuss the resolution whenever it is taken up.

Mr. VEST. I make the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have submitted a motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which is first in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania is first in order.

Mr. VEST. Can I move this as a substitute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER The Chair thinks that is not allowable. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar?

Mr. COCKRELL. Reported favorably, I understood.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; that was changed because it would not be fair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggested that, and afterward withdrew it. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I rise now to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will state his question of order.

Mr. MORGAN. It is an inquiry rather. Does the vote which the Senate has just passed bring up all those bills or does it take them seriatim? Will not the question recur upon each bill as it is brought up, whether the Senate will consider it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course it will; but the order is that we shall go through with those on the Calendar.

JOHN C. HARGRAVE.

Mr. PLATT. I believe that the first bill on the Calendar reported at the present session is House bill No. 361.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask to take up Senate bill No. 276, which was passed over at the last session at my instance. It is a bill introduced by me and it was reported favorably. There was no objection to it, but I asked that it be passed over so that I could look at it a little further.

Mr. PLATT. I was going to suggest that the first bill reported at this session is House bill No. 361, where I suppose we should naturally commence, but if the bill to which the Senator refers was reported favorably and stands first that will be the first bill to be considered.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator will look at Order of Business No. 150 he will remember that that bill was passed over at my instance. It was reported favorably. I have been trying to get it up, but I did not want to take it up specially.

Mr. PLATT. I think that is the only one prior to House bill No. 361.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator is right; it is the only one.

The bill (S. 276) granting a pension to John C. Hargrave was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-rolls the name of John C. Hargrave, late a private of Company K, Fourth Provisional Regiment Missouri Militia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WELLINGTON V. HEUSTED.

The bill (H. R. 361) granting a pension to Wellington V. Heusted was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to grant a pension to Wellington V. Heusted, late a sergeant of Company I, Third Michigan Cavalry, and captain of Company B, Twenty-ninth United States Colored Troops.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. M. WILSON.

A bill (S. 2139) granting a pension to A. M. Wilson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay a pension to A. M. Wilson, father of James Wilson, deceased, late a private in the Fourteenth Regiment of Kansas Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATRICK DRONEY.

The bill (H. R. 718) granting a pension to Patrick Droney was announced as the next pension bill in order on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. That is adversely reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the next bill favorably reported if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

ROBERT HENNE.

The bill (H. R. 6425) to increase the pension of Robert Henne, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It increases from $25 to $40 a month the pension of Robert Henne, late first lieutenant of Company I, Twelfth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, who lost a leg at Pea Ridge, leaving only three inches of a stump, and who previous to enlistment lost his left arm, and is now totally helpless and dependent.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES H. M'NUTT.

The bill (H. R. 2285) to increase the pension of James H. McNutt was announced as the next pension bill in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill was reported adversely. Let it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the next bill favorably reported if there be no objection.

MARY J. STOVER.

The bill (H. R. 3106) restoring the name of Mary J. Stover to the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to restore to the pension-roll the name of Mary J. Stover, widow of the late Colonel Daniel Stover, of the Fourth Tennessee Infantry Volunteers, at $30 per month from the date of the passage of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RATES OF PENSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next pension bill favorably reported is the bill (H. R. 1410) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service. If there is no objection the Secretary will report the next bill favorably reported.

Mr. PLATT. I am very desirous that the Senate should consider that bill, but I do not want to interrupt the consideration of these special cases for that purpose. When they have been gone through with, I think the Senate should make some order in reference to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the Secretary will read the next pension bill on the Calendar favorably reported.

ANTHONY B. GRAVES.

The bill (H. R. 4387) granting a pension to Anthony B. Graves was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It places on the pension-roll the name of Anthony B. Graves, late a private in Company E, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JULIA A. STIMERS.

The bill (H. R. 4562) for the relief of Julia A. Stimers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Julia A. Stimers, widow of Alban C. Stimers, late a chief engineer in the United States Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM M. MEREDITH.

The bill (H. R. 2877) for the relief of William M. Meredith was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to date the application of William M. Meredith, late a captain in the Seventieth Indiana Volunteers, for a pension as filed with the Commissioner of Pensions on the 5th day of June, 1880, and provides that in the adjudication of his claim for a pension his declaration shall be treated as filed on that date.

Mr. JACKSON. I have no objection to the consideration of that bill at this time, but there is a minority report in the case, and I ask for the reading of both the majority and minority reports.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to that, but I hope the bill will be disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR February 1, 1883:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2877) granting a pension to William M. Meredith, have examined the same and report as follows:

It appears from his record that the claimant entered the military service of the United States August 6, 1862, as captain of Company E, Seventieth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and was honorably discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability August 12, 1864.

He certifies under oath that on the 24th day of June, 1879, he executed a declaration for invalid pension before the clerk of the court of Marion County, Indiana, which was given to Benjamin D. House, of Indianapolis, to be mailed to the Commissioner of Pensions. It appears that the above declaration failed to reach the Commissioner of Pensions, and its loss was not known to the claimant until after the expiration of the limit under the arrears act. He subsequently filed another declaration for invalid pension with the Commissioner of Pensions, which was adjudicated and allowed, rating the disability at one-half, or $10 per month.

The bill under consideration authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to date the application of William M. Meredith for a pension as filed with the Commissioner of Pensions on the 5th day of June, 1880, and that in the adjudication of his said claim for a pension his declaration be treated as filed on said date.

Benjamin D. House and William A. Lowe make the following statement under oath:

"That on or about the 24th day of June, 1879, they affixed their names to an application of William M. Meredith, late captain Company E, Seventieth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, for invalid pension, and were sworn by the clerk of Marion County, Indiana, as to his identity."

Benjamin D. House also certifies under oath the following:

"That on or about the 24th day of June, 1879, Captain William M. Meredith, late of Company E, Seventieth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, intrusted to him (the said House) an application for invalid pension, for mailing to the honorable Commissioner of Pensions, at Washington, District of Columbia; that on the day following the same was inclosed to him in a Government envelope, securely sealed and plainly directed to Hon. John A. Bentley, Commissioner of Pensions at Washington, District of Columbia. Affiant especially remembers his action in the matter from the fact that the said William M. Meredith was unable to walk at that time except by the aid of a crutch."

Hon. William W. Dudley, Commissioner of Pensions, in a letter to the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, under date of January 23, 1882, states that—

"Testimony has been brought before his office satisfactory to him that the declaration of William M. Meredith was mailed in sufficient time to have reached this office prior to July 1, 1880, had it not been lost in the mails."

There can be no doubt that claimant duly executed his declaration for invalid pension, and intrusted it to the United States mail, in ample time to comply with the requirements of the arrears act. Nor can it be urged that "ordinary diligence would have suggested the propriety of making inquiry as to its safe arrival," as it was well known that the large number of claims on file would delay action many months, and when in due course of business his case would be reached he would be called on for evidence. He therefore waited for this call for evidence from the Commissioner of Pensions, supposing his claim was on file, and did not know to the contrary until after July, 1880.

Your committee are of the opinion that it would be manifestly unjust to deprive Captain Meredith of the benefit of that filing of his claim; that he was not in any fault; that he fully complied with the requirements of the law, and that he should not be deprived of the value of his claim by setting up a technicality against him by the Government, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the views of the minority.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the views of the minority, submitted by Mr. JACKSON on the 1st instant, as follows:

A minority of the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2877) for the relief of William M. Meredith, not concurring in the report of the committee, respectfully submit their views, as follows:

At the last session of Congress the committee made an adverse report on this bill, which the undersigned here refer to and adopt. Said report is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2877) for the relief of William M. Meredith, having examined the same, make the following report:

"That said Meredith entered the military service of the United States on or about August 6, 1862, as captain of Company E, Seventieth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and was honorably discharged at or near Atlanta on the 12th August, 1864. On the 3d October, 1881, he filed an application in the Pension Bureau for invalid pension, alleging as the basis of his claim that while in service and on duty at Bowling Green, Kentucky, on or about the 25th day of September, 1862, 'while acting as officer of the day, he was injured by riding a hard-gaited horse in such a manner that inguinal hernia resulted as a direct effect from the aforestated cause, and that said disability so increased from that time forward that strangulation resulted in several instances, reduction being accomplished with great difficulty.' After this application was presented and the claim rejected in the Pension Office, the bill under consideration was introduced in the House. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to date the application of said William M. Meredith for a pension, as filed with the Commissioner of Pensions, on the 5th day of June, 1880, and that in the adjudication of his said claim for a pension his declaration be treated as filed on said date. This relief is asked on the following state of facts: The claimant, on or about the 24th June, 1879, executed a declaration for invalid pension before the clerk of the court of Marion County, Indiana, which he intrusted to his attorney, Benjamin D. House, of Indianapolis, Indiana, to be mailed to the Commissioner of Pensions. Said House testifies that on the following day, June 26, 1879, said application was by him inclosed in an envelope, securely sealed, and plainly directed to Hon. Jno. A. Bentley, Commissioner of Pensions, at Washington, District of Columbia. This declaration never reached the Pension Office. It was no doubt lost in its transmission through the mails. It does not appear that Captain Meredith or his attorney, Mr. House, ever made any inquiry of the Pension Office prior to July, 1880, as to whether the application had been received, nor is it shown when its loss was first discovered. Ordinary diligence would have suggested the propriety of making inquiry as to the safe arrival of a document of such importance. There was ample time between June 26, 1879, the date of mailing the application, and 1st July, 1880, when the limitation under the arrears act expired, within which, by the exercise of ordinary prudence, such as business men usually employ in the common affairs of life, to have ascertained whether the document had safely reached the Pension Bureau, and, if not, to have supplied its place. Your committee have very grave doubts whether a party under such facts and circumstances is entitled to be relieved from the operation of a general law. But there is another aspect of the case which has an important bearing upon the question of passing this present bill. Before this bill was introduced in Congress Captain Meredith's claim, under the application regularly filed in October, 1881, had been investigated by the Commissioner of Pensions, and on the 6th January, 1882, the same was rejected on the merits, for the reason that there was no disability from cause alleged.

"This decision of the Commissioner was supported by the report of the Chicago board of examining surgeons, who examined the claimant on the 26th October, 1881, and certified that in their opinion Captain Meredith was not incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor from the cause alleged. This board further state that 'a truss is worn on the left abdominal ring, which thus bears evidence of pressure, but there is no symptom of inguinal hernia,' and they accordingly gave him no rate of disability. It appears from the statements of comrades, officers, and regimental surgeons that the claimant was troubled with hernia of left side from the fall of 1862 to date of his discharge in August, 1864. It also appears from the affidavits of several comrades and acquaintances, filed in the case since the rejection of the claim by the Commissioner, that Captain Meredith was troubled to some extent with hernia during each of the years 1865, 1866, 1867, 1868, 1869, 1870, 1871, and 1872. But there is no evidence to show that he has suffered with the disease since 1872, and nothing to contradict the certificate of the Chicago examining board, which made the last examination of the case on 26th October, 1881, and reported no disability. There was clearly no error in the action of the Commissioner rejecting the claim on the ground stated. The additional affidavits since filed do not relieve that objection. But, aside from this, there is still another reason why this claim could not properly be allowed. There is no evidence establishing the fact that the disability complained of, even if it still continued to exist, had its origin in the service. The alleged hernia developed itself in little over a month after Captain Meredith's enrollment, while in camp at Bowling Green, Kentucky, before he or his company had seen or undergone any active or fatiguing service. 'Riding a hard-gaited horse' for a few hours, while acting as officer of the day, is hardly sufficient to account for development of hernia so early in the service, it not appearing that he was examined and found to be sound at the time of enlistment. But even the riding of the 'hard-gaited horse' is not established except by the claimant's own statements, which your committee consider insufficient evidence of material facts. Captain Meredith, under the decision of the Commissioner and in the opinion of your committee, not being entitled under the law to any pension, it would be wholly useless to pass the bill in question, even if it was not open to the very serious difficulties and objections above indicated.

"Your committee, accordingly, recommend that the bill be not passed, but that the same be indefinitely postponed by the Senate."

After the date of this report the claim of Captain Meredith was again submitted to the Pension Bureau on additional testimony, with a view to its admission. Upon this re-examination his application was allowed, and he was granted a pension at the rate of $10 per month, commencing October 13, 1881. The additional testimony does not strengthen the case on its merits. It does not establish, in our opinion, that the disease or disability had its origin in the service. But aside from this we are of the opinion that the duty rested upon the claimant to have his declaration filed in the proper office within the time prescribed by law, if he desired to claim the benefits of the arrears act. The statute fixing the time within which application should be filed to save the bar of the limitation contains no exceptions. Congress should not now make any law in favor of special applicants, except in very extreme cases, where no laches appear. Meredith gives no explanation for his failure or neglect to make inquiry as to the safe arrival of his application. It was the invariable habit of the Pension Bureau in 1879, as it is now, to acknowledge the receipt of all applications, and this was done within a week or ten days after its reception. The failure to receive such acknowledgment should have led Meredith or his attorney to make inquiry.

In our opinion no proper grounds for special relief exist in this case. We accordingly adhere to the former conclusion of the committee, and recommend that the bill be not passed.

Mr. GROOME. Who signed the minority report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee] Mr. JACKSON].

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. JACKSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the object of the bill is to grant arrears of pension to Captain Meredith on the ground that he made an effort to file his application within the time prescribed by law. He started the application, as is alleged, on the 24th of June, 1879. It never reached the Department. The limitation expired on the 1st of July, 1880. No inquiry was ever made as to whether that application had reached its destination. It was the invariable habit of the office to give notice when applications were received within a week or ten days of their reception. The object of the bill is to grant him special relief and to give him arrears of pension. The case is one, in my opinion, of very doubtful merit, and I think it would be a bad precedent to grant this special relief giving arrears.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not desire to detain the Senate more than a moment. This officer was an officer in my own regiment, and of many of the facts as to his disability I have personal knowledge. That he suffered during his service in the Army from the complaint or disease or injury for which he now seeks a pension I have personal knowledge. It is established and admitted by the report of the committee that he made out and placed in the mail for transmission here his claim for a pension before the limitation fixed by the arrears of pension law. That is conceded.

I only want to mention one other fact. The Senate has in several instances since I have been here recognized the fact that the depositing in the mails for transmission was a sufficient compliance with the law, and that a pensioner ought not to be cut off by reason of the failure of the Post-Office authorities to deliver the application properly at the Pension Office.

I think the case is a meritorious one. Since the report of last session was adopted the claim has been allowed by the Pension Office. The simple question here is whether one who mailed in time his application for a pension shall be cut off from the benefit of arrears under the pension act.

As to the supposed laches in not inquiring whether the claim had been received, that is explained by Captain Meredith by stating that he knew the office was years behind in the disposition of its business and he did not regard it as at all singular that he had no information about his claim.

Mr. BLAIR. As I made the report, perhaps I ought to say a word. The case has been examined upon its merits by the Pension Office, and the Pension Office has adjudicated in favor of Captain Meredith; so that upon the general fact as to whether he is entitled to a pension it would seem that there could be no question. This adjudication took place upon an application filed subsequent to the 1st of July, 1880.

The evidence, so far as I can judge of it from some examination, is to my mind very satisfactory. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], who has personal knowledge of the existence of the disability, rises and in effect testifies to the Senate. It would seem that so far as merit is concerned this man should receive a pension, and his disability must have existed during all these years since the service.

He undertook to make his application. He did make his application. He transmitted his application in precisely the same way that every other application made by any one asking for arrears or for original pension has been made from the foundation of the pension law with scarce an exception; for the mail is the vehicle of universal conveyance employed. It is true that he did not make any special inquiry as to whether it had been received, but he supposed it had been received. Whatever may have been the general practice of the office in regard to giving notice of the reception of these claims, I know from communications with many applicants for pension that the acknowledgment of the receipt of the application was not received by them in return. It was a matter of very common experience. I appeal to every Senator who comes in contact with soldiers if it is not the case that applicants say, "Although I sent my application at such a time, one month, two months, six months, a year ago, even two or three years ago, I never have heard a word from the office at all."

There is nothing like a general notice of which an applicant ought to be aware, upon which he should act, and by which he should be bound, given by the Pension Office on the receipt of the application. It is not as though it was the law of the land advertised to everybody that unless an applicant receives notice of the reception of his application within one year or within one month he must understand that it was not received. By no manner of means is that the case. There is no such understanding among those who do business with the Pension Office.

At that particular period we all remember that so crowded was the office, so apparently dilatory was it in its action—with which there is no occasion probably to find fault, but nevertheless so behind was the business owing to the overmastering and the overcrowding necessity of the time—that in a very large proportion of cases no acknowledgment probably was made until months afterward, and in a great many cases, even if made through somebody's fault, the notice of the reception of the application failed to be received.

Captain Meredith waited about a year and then made his inquiry. He learned that the application had not been received. He immediately renewed it, and upon that application and a full and fair investigation a pension was allowed to him; and the only question that is really submitted to the Senate is whether the United States will take advantage of this merest technicality to save $10 a month from the commencement of the disability. It did not seem to the majority of the committee that it would be just. In many such instances as this relief has been granted, and it seems to me that it would be a great hardship to make an exception in the case of Captain Meredith.

Mr. LOGAN. So far as the point in reference to laches is concerned I have no desire to add anything to what has been said by the Senator from Indiana. I merely rose to add my testimony in one particular. I know Captain Meredith very well. He is now a resident of Chicago and a man of integrity, who I do not believe would present a claim of this character if he were not fully and completely justified in doing so.

I wish to make only one other remark in reference to the case, and that is as to the doubt that is thrown upon the time and manner in which the injury might have been received. If any Senator investigating matters of this kind will only examine the records of the Medical Department he will ascertain there that injuries of this kind are more numerous than almost any other injuries received in the Army, and that riding horseback is one of the principal causes of this character of injury being received by soldiers. These injuries are much more numerous than any one would suspect or dream of, and I have not the slightest doubt myself that the injury was received just as is stated here. I know so many cases occurring of that kind that I am satisfied there can be no doubt of it.

Mr. JACKSON. I examined this case without any prejudice whatever, either in favor of or against Captain Meredith, having no personal acquaintance with him. I examined it alone from the papers on file. It appears that he entered the service in August, 1862, and hernia developed itself before he had seen any active service whatever, while in camp at Bowling Green, and the cause alleged was two or three hours' riding a hard-gaited horse.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Tennessee allow me to suggest that that matter has been settled by the action of the Pension Office? It has been adjudged that his injury was received in the service, and that he is entitled to a pension.

Mr. JACKSON. Still I take it that in granting arrears of pension we are not concluded by that action. It developed itself before he had seen any active service, and from an apparently trivial cause. Undoubtedly he was afflicted during his service, at a later period.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator a question on that point, which seems to be of force in his mind. It developed early before he had been in active service. He had been in service about one month or two months?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes, sir; just one month in camp.

Mr. BLAIR. He had come fresh from civil life and was breaking into the service when he rode a very hard-gaited animal. Would he not be very much more likely to contract such a disability at that particular time than later, after he had become hardened in the service?

Mr. JACKSON. I pass that, and call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the board of surgeons at the place of his residence, on the 26th day of October, 1881, certified that in their opinion he was not incapacitated, and they would not rate his disability. Passing the question as to a pension having been allowed, the case comes to this: He placed his claim in the hands of an attorney at Indianapolis on the 24th of June, 1879, to have the application filed, and he dismissed all consideration of it until the fall of 1881. That is not such diligence as the law requires, and no excuse is given for it really, except the simple statement that he thought the office was crowded. I object to granting on such evidence special relief, except in very meritorious cases. This is not one of them, in my judgment, and hence the minority report.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. JACKSON. Let us have a division.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 19, noes 12.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No quorum has voted. Does the Senator from Tennessee insist on a division?

Mr. JACKSON. I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request for a division is withdrawn, and the bill is passed.

FANNIE S. BEAUMONT.

The bill (S. 2367) granting a pension to Fannie S. Beaumont was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Fannie S. Beaumont, widow of John C. Beaumont, late admiral in the Navy of the United States, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension she now receives.

Mr. JACKSON. There is a minority report in that case. I ask for the reading of both the majority and minority reports.

The report submitted by Mr. BLAIR February 1, 1883, was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2367) granting a pension to Fannie S. Beaumont, have examined the same, and report as follows:

The claimant is the widow of the late Rear-Admiral John C. Beaumont, who died August 2, 1882, after an active service of nearly fifty-four years. In view of the long and distinguished services of Rear-Admiral Beaumont, and also in view of the fact that in many instances the pensions of widows of rear-admirals have been increased to $50 by special acts, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The views of the minority, submitted by Mr. JACKSON February 1, 1883, were read, as follows:

A minority of the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2367) granting a pension to Fannie S. Beaumont, having examined the same and failing to concur in the report of the committee, respectfully submit the following as their views:

The claimant is the widow of John C. Beaumont, who entered the United States naval service in March, 1838, as a midshipman. He continued a midshipman until May, 1844, when he was promoted to passed midshipman. In 1851 he was made a master. In 1852 he was commissioned as lieutenant, which rank he held until July 16, 1862, when he was promoted to commander. In June, 1872, he was promoted to the rank of captain, which he continued to hold until June 14, 1874, when he was commissioned as commodore. On the 25th of November, 1881, he was promoted to rear-admiral. On the 3d February, 1882, at his own request, he was retired from active service. He died at Durham, New Hampshire, August 2, 1882, of heart disease. Shortly after his death his widow, Fannie S. Beaumont, filed her application for pension, alleging that the disease of which her husband died was contracted in the service of the United States. Her claim was supported by the records of the Navy Department, which showed that the "disease of heart" of which this officer died "had its origin in chronic rheumatism, contracted in 1845, when he held the rank of passed midshipman." The rate of her pension was accordingly fixed at $10 per month, under the provisions of sections 4695 and 4696 Revised Statutes. Sections 4696 directs that "every commissioned officer of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps shall receive such, and only such, pension as is provided in the preceding section for the rank he held at the time he received the injury or contracted the disease which resulted in the disability" on account of which a pension may be asked.

The bill under consideration proposes to increase Mrs. Beaumont's pension to $50 per month. In support of the bill letters from Rear-Admiral D. M. Fairfax, Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, and Thomas Walter Leach, medical inspector of United States Navy, are filed before the committee. They express the opinion that the disease of which Rear-Admiral Beaumont died had its origin in the service at a later period than 1845. Dr. Leach makes the following statement:

"From all the evidence I have been able to obtain, I am of the opinion that this disease had its origin in the winter of 1873-'74, while Admiral Beaumont was in command of the United States steamer Powhatan. It was at this time, after undergoing extraordinary anxiety and exposure in the line of his duty that he first began to complain of attacks of pain in the region of the heart, which increased at varying intervals until his death."

Rear-Admiral Fairfax makes substantially the same statement. If the winter of 1873-'74, instead of 1845, be fixed as the date when the disease commenced, it will be observed that the officer then held the rank of captain, which should fix the rate of pension under sections 4695 and 4696, Revised Statutes. It is perfectly manifest from the papers before the committee that this officer contracted no disease in the service after November 25, 1881, when he was promoted to rear-admiral.

He contracted none while acting as commodore. It is also clear that if he contracted any disease in the service (and of this we entertain very grave doubt) it originated while he held the rank of captain. If permissible at all under the facts of this case, the widow is only entitled according to the rank held by her husband at the date of contracting the disease. In no such case as above presented have the committee increased the widow's pension to $50 per month. The majority place their report upon the long and distinguished services of Rear-Admiral Beaumont, and upon the alleged fact that in many instances the pensions of widows of rear-admirals have been increased to $50 by special acts. In several instances where widows of admirals and rear-admirals were pensioned by the bureau at $30 per month on account of disease contracted while holding that rank, the committee have by special act raised the pension to $50 per month; but in no instance which the undersigned can now recall has this been done in a case like the present, where the disability or disease was contracted either as midshipman or captain. If the widows of all admirals and rear-admirals are to be specially relieved, Congress had as well change the general law and by one enactment so fix the rate, and without reference to disability or disease contracted in the service. In our opinion this special legislation has gone far enough. Entertaining those views, we respectfully submit that the bill should not be passed.

HOWELL E. JACKSON.
POPE BARROW.
J. N. CAMDEN.

Mr. PLUMB. Do I understand that this is an increase of pension based on the rank of the person without any reference to his having died or suffered from disability incurred in the line of his duty?

Mr. JACKSON. In no instance that I can now recall has the Pension Committee granted an increase of pension in such cases to $50 a month. There are several cases in which the committee have granted to the widows of rear-admirals and admirals $50 a month where they had been pensioned in the office at $30, on account of the husband having died of disease or disability contracted in the service, but in no case have we pensioned them simply on the fact of their rank.

Mr. PLUMB. I understand that this bill is based on that.

Mr. JACKSON. It is based upon that or it is based upon his having contracted disease while he was a midshipman, and the law as it now stands rates the pension according to the rank men held at the date of the disability. If we are bound by the adjudication of the Pension Office, as the Senator from New Hampshire said a few moments ago in another case, that bureau ascertained that he contracted the disease while a midshipman in 1845, and it can not be shown that he contracted any disease while he held the rank of admiral.

Mr. BLAIR. Upon that particular point, before proceeding to the case generally, the Pension Office did find that a pensionable disability commenced in the year 1845, from which the admiral suffered all the rest of his life and during his very active and important service, and pensioned his widow as for that disability; but the evidence in the case was quite abundant to show that he suffered the last of his life from very great disability, under which he died, and there was strong evidence to show that that disability was contracted during the very recent years of his service. But the action of the committee in this case was primarily placed on the long and distinguished service of Admiral Beaumont. He entered the Navy in 1838; he remained in the active service until 1881.

A very large proportion of those who rendered most distinguished service in our Navy left the active list and were placed on the retired-list soon after the war and many years previous to the present time; so that of those who have been on the active list there are comparatively very few who have been in the service the time that Admiral Beaumont was in the naval service. Very few lived in the active service to so near the time of their death as he did. He died at a great age and was able to remain in active service almost till his death. He had command of the navy-yard at Portsmouth as late as the year 1881. Then he was compelled by his increasing disabilities to ask to be retired, and he was retired, and almost immediately he died.

Captain Beaumont, rear-admiral at the time of his death, was one of the most gallant, most active, and most serviceable officers during the war of the rebellion. There was evidence before the committee tending to show that he was a man of very special muscular activity; and had he been suffering severely from the disability for which the pension was actually granted contracted in the year 1845, the exceeding sprightliness and activity which he manifested during his subsequent service would have been almost impossible.

We had before us the testimony of Senator EDMUNDS, a member of our body, and of a surgeon, and of a distinguished admiral of the Navy, Admiral Fairfax, whose testimony seems to indicate that the disability originating in 1845, for which the pension was actually granted, could have had scarce any existence at the time when they knew him, which was in fact practically up to the time of his death or nearly to that time.

Rear-Admiral Fairfax, in his letter on this subject, speaks in terms of absolute derision of the idea that Admiral Beaumont, during the period of active service, particularly during the rebellion, was suffering from any disability which in any degree whatever interfered with the efficiency and gallantry of the service which he rendered to the country. There was a statement before the committee as to his service in Charleston Harbor during a tempest, when the activity of the admiral was of so marked a character as to practically negative the finding of the Pension Office that this disability of which they say he died originated or, if it originated, existed to any appreciable degree at that time.

Upon all the evidence that was before us it seemed very clear to a majority of the committee that Admiral Beaumont died of disabilities contracted during the very last years of his service, and that his widow ought to have been pensioned as a matter of merit for disabilities contracted or which culminated when he was in his highest rank. But, however that may be, I have not understood it to be the case that these high officers of the Navy who have received pensions themselves at the rate of $50 per month, or whose widows in the case of their decease have been pensioned at that rate, have been held to receive pensions as of the rank when they first contracted any disability in the service, but they have uniformly been pensioned at the highest rate allowed by law, $30, and then as a matter of compliment and gratitude on the part of the country to these officers of highest rank and most distinguished gallantry, in almost every instance (indeed every instance so far as I have any knowledge) their pensions have been increased to the rate of $50 a month, and the same courtesy has been extended to their widows. I have here a list from the Commissioner of Pensions, under date of February 5, inclosed in a letter to Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, a list of these cases. I will take the time of the Senate to read this list, as it relates to a matter of frequent discussion in the Pensions Committee, and somewhat frequent discussion on the floor of the Senate:

Statement showing the names of the widows of naval officers who are in receipt of pension at the rate of $50 per month on the pension-roll February 1, 1883.

I have another list of several additional names which I do not readily place my hand upon.

It is entirely apparent, Mr. President, that this class of pensioners by the universal habit of the Government at the present time receive $50 a month, not only when they are the widows of rear-admirals or major-generals or lieutenant-generals, but here are quite a number of cases where the highest rank attained was that of captain. Rear-admiral was the rank held by Admiral Beaumont when he rendered his most active and efficient service during the war; and it seemed to the committee that it would be making an invidious distinction to deny to his widow the $50 a month given ordinarily in such cases.

Mr. PLUMB. I am the last person who would willingly interfere to prevent any one having the full measure of reward in a pecuniary way from the Government which any disability or which any circumstance of pecuniary dependence might seem to require.

Mr. BLAIR. I ought to add that it was in evidence before the committee that this lady was in actual need of this money.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not now rise so much for the purpose of opposing this bill as I do for the purpose of calling attention to what I think is the manifest injustice of the discrimination which has been exercised from time to time in regard to the allowance of pensions.

I regard, in the first place, the distinction created by the law of differences of payment between persons of differing ranks in the service as itself unwise and unjust in the extreme. Our Army and our Navy were both made up of persons from the same callings in life, and they went back to those callings respectively. The same social needs, the same physical needs, the same acquirements of every kind attached to the great body of the soldiery who were called into service for the purpose of defending the honor and integrity of their country and who went back to the great body of the people from whom they came to take up the callings and the associations, actual and relative, from which they had come.

But, Mr. President, the distinctions of the general law, while bad in themselves, are, I think made worse, if I may say so without disrespect, by the action of the Pensions Committee. Here are persons who can get access to the committee, who have friends and who have means, and who, by reason of their being admirals or the widows of admirals, generals or the widows of generals, or persons of other high rank, having friends at court, can get a hearing before the Pensions Committee. I speak this with the utmost respect for every member of that committee and with a full appreciation of the difficulties which surround their situation and which accompany them in the discharge of all their duties. I say that the inevitable consequence which we somehow or other attach to rank as fixing the matter of pensions is constantly leading the committee from the true foundation of pensions.

There are persons getting a pension of from $2 to $4 per month and $8 per month, which is the maximum pension for a private soldier under ordinary disability, who are just as much entitled from every possible humane consideration to three, four, or five times that amount as are those persons who are getting the largely increased pensions; and it is beginning to be believed and understood that this discrimination which we are practicing in the law is being largely added to by the later practices in special cases so as to constantly increase the relative disparity between the pensions received by private soldiers of great merit and the pensions accorded to officers and their families.

I think that instead of increasing this tendency to augment pensions to persons of rank we ought to go the other way; we ought to increase the pensions of private soldiers. They were the men who rendered service for which they did not get pay either in money or in social or military consequence; they were the men who unusually by comparison took the risk of life and of limb; they are the men who, if any set of men are to be put above another set of men, ought to be put in the highest place not only for pensions but in the consideration that this country gives to the men who have served it under arms.

We can not afford to have this great class of people feel that we are doing injustice to them actually or relatively. They find constantly in action like that now proposed a discrimination against them which is becoming a strong matter of wrath among the very class of people upon whom finally we have got to depend if we recruit other armies in other times of need. We can always get officers. There are plenty of men who will take the honors and the emoluments of an office from lieutenant at $112 a month up to $200, and so on through the varying grades, until the salary becomes five or six hundred dollars a month. There is no trouble in having a regiment such as Artemus Ward longed for, where every man should be a brigadier-general. It is private soldiers we want, and it is the service and sacrifice of the private soldier which after all counts and is of the most consequence, and which we ought to reward, if we discriminate at all, higher than any other service of a military kind rendered by any one.

But, as I said, I do not complain at all of the Pensions Committee, but I complain of that system, of that idea, of that manner of doing business, of that manner of thought which regards the admiral above the sailor who stands with him on the deck, that regards the general as higher than the man who bore the musket, and without whose sacrifice the general's skill, whatever it may have been, not generally as great as it is alleged to be, would have been absolutely unavailing but for the patient bravery and the self-sacrificing spirit that was demanded of the man who carried his musket and served his country at $13 a month. Yet a man who was taken from the same situation in life and with no greater ability by the fortunes, the accidents, the circumstances of war, and promotion came to be his commander at a high rate of wages. I think it is safe always to say that no pension shall be carried beyond the amount provided in the law, where rank is the chief consideration.

Mr. President, I understand another thing, that the function and office of the Senate Committee on Pensions in regard to special cases is simply to relieve the want of technical testimony in cases presented to the Pension Office, and I doubt very much whether the Pensions Committee of the Senate are in a condition, as against the medical skill of those employed by law in the Pension Office, to determine so precisely when disability occurred. Here it seems to me that this case has gone off on the same attitude of the question, of course upon motives and considerations of the highest and most honorable kind, but of the kind which take us away further and further and more and more from the obligation that we have to that great body of soldiers without which there would have been no need for generals, and without which there would have been no country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the argument of my friend from Kansas is certainly entitled to great weight. It is not easy at first blush to see why the pension of the private soldier—to begin with the land before we go to sea—should not be as great as that of the major-general, and why the man who took care of General Sherman's horse on the field of battle, where he was exposed to danger, should not have just as great a pension as General Sherman if he had been disabled. And the same argument applies with still stronger force to the question of pay. Why should not the private soldier have the same amount of pay as the major-general, and so on down through all the ranks? Why should not the sailor, who on ship-board lives in narrower quarters than the admiral in command, have the same pay as the admiral; and if there is a real equality why should not the sailor share the admiral's quarters, or have it turn and turn about, so that the admiral should sleep in the forecastle one night and the sailor in the admiral's cabin and so on?

There is great force in that undoubtedly; but when we come back to the way things really go in this world, even in this body, the most democratic body in existence probably, the pay of the Senator from Kansas and myself is much larger than that of the pages, much larger than that of the Secretary, or of the Sergeant-at-Arms. And yet according to what they are called to do they are doing just as good service to the country as we are, and I sometimes think as to myself, they are doing a great deal better. Why should they not have $5,000 a year and mileage, and stationery, &c.? That is one of the puzzles that I know trouble mankind, and I sympathize with my friend from Kansas in trying to find out what the answer to that puzzle is.

Now to come down to the case of Admiral Beaumont, I have just this to say, and I do it more as a witness than anything else. I happened to make the acquaintance of Admiral Beaumont on a ship of the United States where I as a guest sailed—contrary to law I suppose or without authority of law—for a month or two, being sick and diseased myself and entitled to a pension if my country had any gratitude at all for public services [laughter], and so I came to know this gentleman. I, of course, had known his public career and history before as one of the most brave, gallant, active, and impetuous sailors during the time of the late war between ourselves and our Southern brethren and in every place he showed no symptom of any disease that prevented him from facing the enemy on all occasions, good or bad. Then we knew him as somewhat famous as having been the sailing captain, the commander of the Miantonomoh, the monitor vessel, the only one of the United States I believe that ever crossed the seas, that visited Russia and other parts of Europe at the end of the war.

When I was sailing with Captain Beaumont he happened to have a monitor in tow, and whenever we came to anchor I used to go frequently on board the monitor that was in tow, that he was towing from Philadelphia to Key West, when I was this unlawful passenger, as it may be called. I am bound to say from what I saw on that monitor that any man who sails in a monitor on the open seas is entitled to a pension to begin with, because the vessel is washed by the sea at every surge of the waves, and those below, where the officers and crew are obliged to stay, of course, except those who merely are steering and on the lookout up in the turret, are as wet and damp as they can be. They are absolutely boxed up in a damp coffin, as it may be called, below the surface of the sea.

I know that at that time when I knew Admiral Beaumont he was to all appearances as physically capable of doing any duty of a soldier or a sailor as any man I ever saw, and his career during the war had been an admirable one. He was gradually promoted in the regular way. When he found, before the law required him to be retired just before his death, not expecting it so soon of course, that he was getting sick and diseased and disabled and in physical trouble of all kinds, instead of holding on to his active service as he might have done (and in which case there would have been no question at all as to the right to the full pension that was given to an admiral, whatever that may be under the law), he voluntarily applied to be retired, and was retired, and within a very short time afterward he died.

Now, I think he ought to be treated as if he had died in active service. Then if it be true that an admiral's pension by the general law is only $30 a month, but in all cases of that kind where there has been distinguished service we have increased it to $50, and we have increased it to $50 out of, not money raised by taxation upon the people but out of the naval pension fund that the Navy has earned by fighting the battles of the country on the seas and by taking prizes, why not pass this bill? That is how this fund has been from the beginning of the Government. The Government has always gone on the idea that there is a distinction in respect of the peril, &c., between service on land and service at sea; the naval pension fund was established sixty, seventy, I do not know but eighty years ago by ordering a certain portion of prize-money of the ships captured in battle to be turned into a fund, and out of that fund these pensions are paid. I do think in a case like this, so far as I understand it, perhaps I am wrong, it is right to give this individual widow this additional sum out of this fund. She herself as I happen to know comes of a family that has rendered distinguished service. Her own father was a distinguished person in the Navy, rendering great service to his country. If there be any case where you can go above the ordinary run of the law, I think from what knowledge I have that this is one. Perhaps we are all wrong about it, but that is what I think.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, it has been usual to consider these private pension bills under the Anthony rule, and I supposed that when they were taken up to-day they were to be so considered; but by the wording of the motion I understand the Chair does not so regard it. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that they may be considered under the provisions of the Anthony rule in reference to objections, to length of speech, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks that hereafter all pension cases shall be considered under the Anthony rule. Is there objection to considering these cases under the Anthony rule hereafter? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let the bill be reported.

The bill was read.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, there are numberless instances of this kind, as the Senator from Vermont has stated correctly. This is a matter which I fully investigated when a member of the Committee on Pensions. The fund is provided by the naval officers themselves for pensions of this kind, and I do not know of a claim better than the present one. I knew Admiral Beaumont for years, and if his widow is not entitled to go on that roll those there are not entitled to be there.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I was with the majority in favor of the passage of this bill, but I desire to say right here that I am opposed to any further extension of the practice of granting $50 pensions to officers of low rank. It has been extended to captains and to lieutenants in some instances. Now, I think it is too late to say that we will not grant to the widow of a major-general or admiral or rear-admiral of the Navy a pension of $50 if she is entitled to one. The common custom has gone so far that if that practice is to be stopped it ought to be stopped by general law. On the other hand, I do think that we ought to limit those pensions to the widows of officers of high rank.

Mr. BLAIR. Admiral Beaumont was appointed a midshipman March 1, 1838; promoted to passed midshipman May 30, 1844; warranted as master August 30, 1851; commissioned as lieutenant August 29, 1852; promoted to commander July 16, 1862; promoted to captain June 10, 1872; commissioned as commodore June 14, 1874; promoted to rear-admiral November 25, 1881; retired from active service February 3, 1882, and died at Durham, New Hampshire, August 2, 1882, of heart disease. Bearing upon the question when that heart disease was contracted, I wish to read a certificate from Thomas Walter Leach, medical inspector of the United States Navy, in which he says:

> From all the evidence I have been able to obtain, I am of the opinion that this disease had its origin in the winter of 1873-'74, while Admiral Beaumont was in command of the United States steamer Powhatan. It was at this time, after undergoing extraordinary anxiety and exposure in the line of his duty, that he first began to complain of attacks of pain in the region of the heart, which increased at varying intervals until his death.

I have already alluded to the evidence of Admiral Fairfax in regard to his extraordinary muscular activity in the service and especially in and during the period of the rebellion. I can not take the time of the Senate to read this evidence, but it is far more pointed and pertinent than my statement of it.

Here is the record of his service as copied from the minutes of the Navy Department, covering four long pages of long paper finely written, and it is a very extraordinary record of service.

I would look upon it as almost in the nature of a personal insult to the widow of this particular admiral if we should fail to pass this bill, whatever we might do by a general law, whether we adopt the idea of the Senator from Kansas, that the private soldier should receive the same rate of pension or pecuniary consideration from the Government as the highest officer, or whether we should adopt the idea advanced by the Senator from Connecticut, that this consideration should be given only to officers of the very highest rank. Certainly our whole past career in the administration of the pension law demands that to this particular woman we give $50 per month.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, I wish to state briefly the facts in this case. Admiral Beaumont was promoted to the rank of rear-admiral on the 24th of November, 1881. He died in August, 1882. He rendered no service as admiral; he contracted no disease while admiral. After his death his widow filed her application in the Pension Office alleging disease contracted in the service as the basis of her claim. It was investigated. The Navy records show certificates of the surgeon that he had contracted his disease in 1845 when he held the rank of passed midshipman—and then under section 4696 of the general law she was pensioned according to the rank which he held at the time the disability occurred, and was pensioned at the rate of $10 per month.

That was the general law, that officers of the Army and Navy shall be pensioned according to the rank they held at the time of the disability.

Mr. BLAIR. This officer was not pensioned. The widow was pensioned.

Mr. JACKSON. The law is that officers and their widows shall be pensioned according to the rank the officer held at the date the disability was contracted.

Mr. BLAIR. Ten dollars a month!

Mr. JACKSON. And that was $10 a month; he then held the rank of passed midshipman. We were told a while ago, in the discussion of another case, by the Senator from New Hampshire that that action of the Pension Bureau was an adjudication of this question and settled it. We have the certificate of Admiral Fairfax that the disease was not then contracted; also the testimony of the Senator from Vermont that it was contracted in 1873 and 1874. He then held the rank of captain.

Mr. PLUMB. What would be the pension for that?

Mr. JACKSON. The pension for that rank would be $20 a month. We have not in any single case increased the pension of the widow of an admiral except in that class of cases where the disease was contracted while he held the rank and where she was pensioned at the rate of $30 a month.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not admit that at all. I do not understand that assertion to be correct.

Mr. JACKSON. We may differ about it, but that is the rule, as I have understood it, on the part of the committee.

Mr. BLAIR. That is the general law, but in these cases where we have granted increases of pension on account of distinguished services we have not taken those matters into account at all. We grant those pensions outside the law.

Mr. JACKSON. We have not in any case reported in favor of an increase of pensions on the ground of rank. I concur fully in what the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has said on that subject. If we are to grant this special relief in this class of cases from favoritism and because of rank, we are doing an injustice and a discrimination against the common soldier. The general law provides that an admiral shall be rated for disability, or his widow in case of his death from disease contracted in the service, at $30 a month. Her case has been adjudicated, and she has been rated by the Pension Office at $10. There is no case in which we have increased a pension from $10 up to $50.

If we set this precedent, if we do this thing, if rank and service are to give a title to a pension at the rate of $50 a month, let us do so by a general law, and not by having special cases come here to Congress for relief, and having personal influence exerted to secure their passage. This case ought not to pass, for it will, as I say, set a dangerous precedent.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, there are reasons why we have the discrimination in pay between private soldiers and officers that do not apply when we come to the consideration of pensions. Officers are required to live in a manner not required of soldiers, to incur expenses for living, to live by themselves in a way that is more expensive, and in every way to keep up an establishment which is a part of their rank. I think myself that the difference of pay relatively between the private soldier and the officers of all degrees above him is too great; but whatever might have been the reason of that rule it entirely fails when these people come to go back into that common rank of life from which they came, and to be considered simply as persons who were entitled to the bounty of the Government, or who were entitled to receive pensions by reason of the contract the Government made with them. That has never been on the basis of actual necessity or of actual disability, because the Government can not compensate the man who lost his health beyond recovery by any amount of money it may give him, and consequently it establishes an arbitrary rule; but when we come to apply that arbitrary rule these distinctions of rank ought entirely to disappear. Unjust as they are in the law now, saying nothing about the law, I say we ought not to increase them by acts of this kind.

The Senator from New Hampshire says it would be an insult to this woman not to give it. What shall I say, or what will he say to the widows who are getting two, three, four, or five dollars a month in his State and in mine, whose husbands not only enlisted but re-enlisted; who carried a musket through four years of perilous war, compared to which the service Mr. Beaumont rendered, whatever may be said about it, falls into insignificance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Increase them.

Mr. PLUMB. Commence with the lower grades; do not tolerate the idea that we are considering men in these ranks as possessed of a different kind of clay from that which was possessed by the men who served under them and who form the great body of the people of the country, as they do the power of the country. It is an insult—as long as that term is used—I will say it is an insult to the widow of every private soldier in the land, in New Hampshire or in Kansas and everywhere to do this thing, to raise this woman's pension from $10 a month to $50, and every widow of every private soldier throughout this broad land will so regard it. There is a discontent arising from the manifest injustice, punctuated, emphasized, constantly made profert of by the legislation that comes from the hands of this Pensions Committee, which is begetting in the minds of those people who served the country in its extremity, that it is rank that gives consideration and not service and sacrifice.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I have known something of private soldiers myself. I do not believe in the sentiments that are advanced by the Senator from Kansas. I do not believe in the existence of any such sentiment pervading the private soldiery of this country as he speaks of. There is no such rising sentiment of indignation because the country chooses in some way to make manifest its approbation and so far as it can to express its gratitude for the long and distinguished services of its high officers in the Army and in the Navy. They have common sense enough to know that the capacity exhibited by those who command armies and who command navies demands a more substantial and conspicuous recognition than that which is awarded to the private soldier who renders a comparatively unimportant and inconsequential service. It is true that he bares his breast as a target to the enemy; it is true he gives his blood to his country, and that is the common duty of us all; but without our Washington and Wellington, and the great leaders of armies throughout the history of the world, of what avail would have been our proffer of our muscle and of our blood? The common soldiery of the United States are not to be misled by twaddle like that which is advanced here by the Senator from Kansas. There is no such rising feeling of indignation. On the contrary, submit this question and all like questions to the verdict of the common soldiers of the country and you will have an overwhelming "aye" that this pension and higher pension should be granted to leading officers and soldiers of the late rebellion and of the entire history of the country.

Do you imagine, Mr. President, that if you were to submit a question like this with reference to the pension of the widow of Washington the people would hesitate at a paltry $50 a month? The whole idea is ultra in its absurdity. Every government has been managed upon precisely this same principle of giving conspicuous recognition to conspicuous service. Here in this case is a man who served his country not one, two, three, or four years, which was the ordinary period of enlistment during the recent war, but he served the country during his entire life, but he served it conspicuously with the utmost gallantry and in high command during the greater period of his active service, and he died in consequence of his active service; he died in consequence of disease contracted during the very last years of his service. He left his widow penniless and in great age, and now we are asked to treat this woman in a manner entirely different from that rule which we have administered and which all civilized nations have obeyed in the administration of their laws touching the recognition of gallantry on the part of their officers and of their soldiery.

I say, as I said before, that to treat her otherwise than we have those whose names I have mentioned on this long roll of gallantry, would be to put an insult, and I assert that it is an insult, to the common soldiery of the United States; to say that they would treat her otherwise than their country has treated those who have gone before.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

A division was called for on the passage of the bill; and the question being put, the ayes were 21.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the yeas and nays. Let us see who are in favor of discrimination.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no discrimination.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HAMPTON (when Mr. HALE's name was called). The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] wished me to announce that he is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. MCDILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON].

Mr. SLATER (when his name was called). On this bill I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. JONAS (when Mr. VEST's name was called). I am requested to announce the pair of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I do not know how either would vote.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 32, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Anthony,	Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Pendleton,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Lapham,	Platt,

So the bill was passed.

OFFICERS ON DUTY IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator having charge of these bills will suspend for a moment, I desire to offer a resolution.

Resolved, That the Secretaries of War and Navy be instructed to communicate to the Senate the names of the officers of the Army and Navy now on duty in Washington, with a statement of the duty in which they are engaged, and how long they have been on duty in Washington, since 1865.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 1342) authorizing the trustees of the Isherwood estate to amend a certain plan of subdivision of said estate recorded in the land records of the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 2316) for the relief of Daniel Breed; and

Joint resolution (S. R. 123) providing for the termination of articles numbered 18 to 25 inclusive, and article numbered 30 of the treaty between the United States of America and Her Britannic Majesty, concluded at Washington May 8, 1871.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 333) validating certain contracts executed by the Postmaster-General; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 359) to print 5,000 copies of the report of the board on behalf of the United States Executive Departments at the international exibition of 1876.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 9,000 copies of the report of the Director of the Mint upon the production of gold and silver in the United States.

JAMES B. WHITE.

The bill (H. R. 1341) granting a pension to James B. White, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It places the name of James B. White, late a private in Company B, Sixty-second Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, on the invalid pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES M. AKIN.

The bill (H. R. 5384) restoring the name of James M. Akin to the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It restores to the pension-roll the name of James M. Akin, late first lieutenant of Company I, Fifty-sixth Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH WEINSTEIN.

The bill (H. R. 5118) granting a pension to Elizabeth Weinstein was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth Weinstein, the foster mother of Peter Weinstein, deceased, late a private in Company G, Forty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

D. D. EDWARDS.

The bill (H. R. 1291) granting a pension to D. D. Edwards was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It places on the pension-roll the name of D. D. Edwards, late a private in Company G of the Seventh Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The name is printed "Edward" in the body of the bill. Should it be "Edward" or "Edwards?"

Mr. PLATT. "Edwards," I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS ALLCOCK.

The bill (H. R. 1188) granting a pension to Thomas Allcock was considered as in Commmittee of the Whole. It places the name of Thomas Allcock, a private in Company F, Third Artillery, during the Florida war, upon the invalid-pension roll at the rate of $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY L. WALKER AND ELLA WALKER.

The bill (S. 2218) for the relief of Mary L. Walker and Ella Walker was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 4, to strike out "and directed to pay" and insert "to direct the payment;" in line 7, to strike out "Company H" and insert "the;" and in line 9, at the end of the bill, to strike out "amount of money allowed said Walker, by way of pension, upon the day of his death," and to insert "pension granted by certificate numbered 209900 to the said Calvin Walker, computing the amount due to the day of his death only;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to direct the payment, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mary L. Walker and Ella Walker, sole surviving daughters of Lieutenant-Colonel Calvin Walker, late of the Thirty-third Regiment of New York State Volunteers, pension granted by certificate numbered 209900 to the said Calvin Walker, computing the amount due to the day of his death only.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJOR D. WILLIAMS.

The bill (S. 1530) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Major D. Williams was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of Major D. Williams, late captain of Company C, Twelfth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, from the 13th day of September, 1869, the date of his suspension.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BETSEY A. MOWER.

The bill (S. 1356) for the relief of Betsey A. Mower was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Betsey A. Mower, at $50 per month.

Mr. PLATT. There should be an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not reported with an amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I move to add at the end of the bill, "which shall be in lieu of the pension she now receives."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRIET N. ABBOTT.

The bill (H. R. 5906) granting a pension to Harriet N. Abbott was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to put upon the pension-roll the name of Harriet N. Abbott, of Moultonville, Carroll County, New Hampshire, widow of Jacob Abbott, late a private in Company K, Ninth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORPAH MEACHAM.

The bill (H. R. 6400) granting a pension to Mrs. Orpah Meacham was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Orpah Meacham, widow of the late Colonel Alfred B. Meacham, during her widowhood, at $50 a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE C. RUST.

The bill (H. R. 6524) granting a pension to George C. Rust was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs that the name of George C. Rust, of Weakley County, Tennessee, shall be placed on the pension-roll of the soldiers of the war of 1812, at the rate allowed by law to the private soldiers of that war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RALPH P. FORD.

The bill (H. R. 984) for the relief of Ralph P. Ford was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Ralph P. Ford, late of Companies K and B, Third Regiment Missouri State Militia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK S. SOWERS.

The bill (H. R. 5808) to rerate the pension of Frank S. Sowers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to rerate the pension of Frank S. Sowers, formerly a first lieutenant in the Third Regiment of Ohio Cavalry Volunteers, the rerating to be made according to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KATE QUILLIGAN.

The bill (H. R. 6833) granting a pension to Kate Quilligan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Kate Quilligan, daughter of Patrick Quilligan, late of Company B, Fourth United States Cavalry, and to pay her a pension, through her legally constituted guardian, at the rate of $8 per month, during her insanity.

Mr. PLATT. I only desire to say that I do not concur in this report, and I must vote against the bill because I must be consistent in my action as a member of the Pensions Committee. It proposes to pension the daughter of a soldier who is over 16 years of age, but is insane. I do not know that I desire to say any more about it, except that I think if we commence——

Mr. COCKRELL. Is not that the case that was called up here and was evidently so badly beaten that it was abandoned?

Mr. PLATT. It is not.

Mr. BLAIR. It never was called up and never was badly beaten.

Mr. PLATT. It is a new case. The committee had before them several cases where pensions were asked for children over 16 years old who were insane or crippled, or who had other disabilities which prevented them from obtaining a livelihood, and while they are very hard cases I do not think that we ought to grant pensions in such cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR February 13, 1883:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6833) granting a pension to Kate Quilligan, have examined the same, and report as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, in the consideration of this bill, present the facts of the case as follows. The following is taken from the House report:

"The relief asked for is in behalf of the child of Patrick Quilligan, who died at Camp Sheridan, Texas, October 14, 1866, while serving as private in Company B, Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry. The wife of said Quilligan also died about the time last mentioned. He left surviving him two children, a boy and a girl, the latter, named Kate, now living. The children were taken care of by the regiment to which the soldier belonged for a year or more, and upon the death of the boy Kate was placed in the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home at Washington, District of Columbia, where she remained, probably, during its existence. She was in receipt of a pension until August 18, 1879, when she arrived at the age of 16 years, the age at which pension to a minor child must cease under the provisions of the general pension laws.

"Kate Quilligan is demented, and, being left without means of support or friends able to assist her, is now dependent upon charity. Her condition of helplessness, although now of an age at which under ordinary circumstances she would be able to provide for herself, is equal to that of an infant. The case is one which should receive the speedy and favorable consideration of Congress, and therefore the committee submit a substitute bill, and ask that it do pass."

This demented girl has been supported and taken care of for several years by her aunt, who is a very poor Irish woman, who gets the means to take care of herself and this helpless child of the deceased soldier by washing and other forms of ill-paid manual labor. There is no money in the family, and it is quite time that this woman be relieved of the burden of the support of her niece by the interposition of the Government, to the maintenance of which her natural protector gave his life.

The child is a resident of the District of Columbia.

We recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. This is not the case of a widow of any rear-admiral, and it involves only $8 per month. My attention was first called to this case one night last winter, when a ragged Irish woman who had sought me out rang the door-bell and was admitted, and came to my room and told me her story. She was a woman about 60 years old. She was a common washerwoman, living here in the District of Columbia, an Irish woman, very poor. She told me she was the sister of this Mr. Quilligan, the father of Kate Quilligan, who died in 1866, after having been a considerable time in the service of the country, and in consequence of the service. She told me that he left two children. One had died early; the other is this girl, an idiot. The regiment took care of the two children for some little time after the death of the father. Finally that source of sustenance failed, and the girl came to live with this aunt. She had washed and managed to keep the two from starvation, but she was about gone, and she needed help.

I told her I would see if I could get her a pension to be made available for the support of this girl who after having received a pension by reason of the death of her father until 16 years of age under the ordinary law had ceased to draw it, because then being a minor of 16 she was entitled to it no longer. From that period this aunt had by her own personal work sustained herself and this girl. I told her to bring the girl to see me. At a subsequent time she brought the girl, who is simply a great heap, an animate mass of animal matter, with no soul whatever apparently.

I sent her to the House of Representatives that her bill might be introduced there. The case was heard fully. They sent us this bill, which was referred to our committee and reached it at this session. It has been examined and reported. I thought it was reported unanimously, but the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] dissents from it. I am not aware that there is any other member of the committee who does dissent; and he does so, because he does not want to do anything which, however remotely, may open the pension law in such a way as to give a possible color of claim to minors over 16 years of age.

This is a case which probably can hardly be duplicated in the whole country, when we consider the absolute want of the relative who supports this girl and the absolute helplessness of the girl herself. Very few instances can be found in the country, at all events where the idiotic children of soldiers are in want of help and likely to call upon the Government.

This case is one of residence in the District of Columbia too. I do not know upon what charity this girl or those who care for her can call for her maintenance. If there ever was an instance where the Government ought to do something, I think this is such a case and it should take care of this idiotic girl.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is precisely the kind of a case that was brought up by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], and which was fully discussed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]; and it was so manifest that that bill could not then pass, it was so directly in conflict with the sentiment of a large majority of the Senate, that the bill was absolutely abandoned. That is the reason why I spoke to the Senator as to whether this was the case.

Mr. BLAIR. That was a different case.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was the case of Murray, I understand. The reason why I asked if this was the case was because I had forgotten the name and at what point it was on the Calendar. I understand after full discussion that case was abandoned.

I find here a report in the case of Patrick Droney that I understand is almost precisely similar to this. It is a case that was reported some time ago adversely by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. The pending bill is a departure from any rule or regulation that has ever been established from the foundation of the Government to this day, in regard to the class of persons who shall be pensioned.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let me ask, even if it be a departure does my friend think that there are as many cases of the kind referred to as there are of widows of rear-admirals upon the pension-roll?

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not vote for pensioning the widow of the rear-admiral.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Does the Senator think there will be any more of these cases?

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator wants to meet my argument by that, I simply say that I did not vote for that bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I did not understand that the Senator did.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator voted for it, he should not throw it up to me.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, sir, I did not, and I know my friend did not vote for it, but I want to emphasize it right there for the consideration of the body which did.

Mr. COCKRELL. The body will doubtless consider it when it is before it. That is not before it now. But I say this is a new departure; it is establishing a new precedent; it is establishing one that is entirely different from any principle that has ever been held in regard to pensions heretofore.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the precise point in this case?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is to pension a child, as I understand it, who has become insane and is past the age of 16.

Mr. MITCHELL. She was insane long before; she was really insane when in a state of infancy, long before she reached the age of 16.

Mr. COCKRELL. And now it is proposed to extend the pension after the age of 16. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will not detain the Senate. The reasons which operated upon the minds of the majority in this case were, I think, similar to those which operated upon Congress when it enacted the law granting pensions to infants under 16. This girl has been practically an infant all her life and remains so as much after 16 as before. It strikes me, therefore, that this is within the reason of the law, while not within the letter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. She is still incapable to take care of herself?

Mr. MITCHELL. She is still incapable, utterly, hopelessly, without any father or near relative to take care of her, and is a subject of charity, and that within the District of Columbia. I believe there is no public charity here provided by the Government.

Mr. SEWELL. In behalf of the Pensions Committee it is fair to state that to set a precedent of this kind would add to the pension-list. The Senate has invariably refused to grant a pension in such cases.

Mr. MITCHELL. The case that was considered at the last session of Congress, that of Miss Murray, of Pennsylvania, was not decided; it was not fully argued. In that case also it was the fact that the daughter was entirely unable to do anything for herself, and had been so from infancy.

Mr. SEWELL. This would be a precedent that would bring up a great many similar cases.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think there would be many case like it.

Mr. SEWELL. The committee evidently do not know how many cases there would be.

Mr. MITCHELL. Whether there would be or not, I think the same reason applies in this as in other cases, why the children of deceased soldiers shall be pensioned when not able to take care of themselves.

Mr. LAPHAM. I suggest as we have to legislate for the support of the poor of this District that it makes no difference in what form it is done in this case.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senate will pass upon that question.

Mr. LAPHAM. I say it might as well be done in the form of this bill as otherwise.

Mr. MITCHELL. So far as the expense is concerned it would be the same if the Government performs its obligations to this child. I understand there is no public charity here to provide for such cases.

Mr. BLAIR. The case that has been cited upon which there was discussion at the last session, the Murray case, I never understood to be a case that had been decided against.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire is out of order.

Mr. BLAIR. How so?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has spoken once on this bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I have a right to speak twice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir, not under the Anthony rule.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I have nothing more to say.

Mr. PLATT. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves to strike out all after the enacting clause.

Mr. PLATT. Now, the Senator from New Hampshire can go ahead.

Mr. BLAIR. I think I had better not trouble the Senate. If Senators had been present and had heard the statement of the facts in the case I certainly would not ask to be heard again. This girl is helpless; she is an idiot; she has nothing in the world. Her father died in the service in 1866. She has been an idiot all her life. She has been kept for several years by her aunt, who is a poor Irish washer-woman, almost in destitution herself, and now about sixty years of age, living here in this city, and the girl has nobody else to look to for support.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you still want all after the enacting clause stricken out?

Mr. PLATT. I do, to speak on. I think this could be decided very easily if this were a bill for a public act providing that whenever the child of a soldier above the age of 16 years is for any cause unable to support itself it shall receive a pension. If such a bill would pass the Senate, then this private bill ought to pass. Otherwise, it seems to me not.

But I rose to call attention to the fact that the same Committee on Pensions upon full consideration and without disagreement, certainly without any minority report, reported against precisely a similar case.

Mr. BLAIR. What case is that?

Mr. PLATT. The case of Patrick Droney.

Mr. BLAIR. When?

Mr. PLATT. At this session; and the bill is now on the Calendar.

Mr. BLAIR. Not to my knowledge was it reported adversely.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Nor mine; but if that is the case we will take it up and pass it.

Mr. PLATT. I read from the report on the bill granting a pension to Patrick Droney:

> The claimant is now about 20 years old and has been a cripple from his birth, unable to walk without crutches and unable to work. His deformity is incurable. He is supported by the town of which he is a native, at the almshouse in Marlborough, Massachusetts. He has no relatives able to contribute to his support.

I simply want to say if one case is passed the other should be passed.

Mr. BLAIR. I never heard of that case before.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Nor did I.

Mr. BLAIR. No full committee ever passed on that case.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that if he will propose to take that bill up, it is probable that a majority of the Committee on Pensions will vote for it in this body.

Mr. PLATT. A majority voted against it in committee.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not remember the case in committee. Undoubtedly it is as the Senator states. The case which is under consideration now is really within the spirit of the law. The law fixes the limits at which a child is able to take care of itself at 16 years of age. It was supposed that after that age the child would be able to take care of and maintain itself. Here is a case which is worse than infancy, where the child is utterly incapable of taking care of itself, and I am a little surprised that the suggestion should be made at this late day that it may open the door to a class of similar cases. I propounded the inquiry I did to my friend from Missouri although I knew he voted against the bill putting a rear-admiral's widow on the pension-list.

But suppose the Senator is correct and this would open the door to similar cases, I ask if we did this would it probably place as many on the pension-list as we have set the precedent to place, in violation of law (I mean to say against the law as it stands now), the widows of rear-admirals upon the pension-list? This is a poor deformed idiot, and not as many of such cases would come here as the widows of rear-admirals, whom we are without any sort of difficulty raising from $10 to $50 a month on the pension-list. It would seem strange with all this magnanimity to take care of that class of individuals if we should higgle here about giving this poor child, whose father was killed in the war, the pittance which she would receive so as to enable her to take care of herself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut withdraw his motion to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill?

Mr. PLATT. I do.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. PLATT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, it is quite difficult to argue against a case of this sort, because it appeals to the pity and charity of the Senate; but the mistake I think the advocates of such bills make is in supposing that if we do not pension this poor girl and provide for her nobody will. I am pretty well acquainted with the affairs of one State and I can speak for that. So far as Connecticut is concerned this poor child would be taken care of most kindly and most comfortably by the laws we provide for all classes of distressed people.

I think that the Government is not under obligation, that it is not expected (I will not put any limit to its obligation) to follow the children of soldiers to the second and third generation and segregate them from all the rest of the people of the United States for special Federal care. The States have some obligations as well as the National Government in taking care of the helpless, the poor, and the imbecile; and as a general rule the States discharge those obligations honorably and charitably and in a Christian and kind manner. I do not believe this child would suffer, would be allowed to suffer in any State of the Union, and I believe the fact that she was a soldier's child would give her an additional claim upon the consideration of good people.

If we enlarge the pension-list in this manner we simply relieve the States from a portion of their just burdens in caring for the weak and the distressed and assume them in behalf of the Federal Government. I dislike to make a new precedent of this description, for, say what you will, it will be adding many, many thousands to the pension-list.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator permit me to say to him what I think he does not know, that this child and this aunt are residents of the District of Columbia. I am not aware of any possible provision for the permanent support of a child here situated as this one is.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not aware that in the District of Columbia when a child is found in that condition that it is drowned or put out of the world in some way. It is certainly cared for kindly somehow. If we have no laws to care for the afflicted poor here it is time we made them.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator has had a different observation from mine if he has not found that that class of people are without help here in the District.

Mr. COCKRELL. Where is the asylum for that purpose?

Mr. JACKSON. I understand that in the legislative appropriation bill that was passed the other day provision was made, $20,000 for whites and $15,000 for blacks, and then various appropriations were made for several charitable institutions within the city of Washington and the District of Columbia. If we enter upon this system of granting pensions in these cases we just assume the duties that belong to the States of providing for their poor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are demanded on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. I do not know how he would vote on this proposition. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL. My colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER. What do I understand the Senator to say?

Mr. MITCHELL. I can only say from the opinion my colleague expressed on the other case parallel to this that he would vote in favor of this measure.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I shall not vote, for I would vote "nay."

Mr. FAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY].

Mr. McDILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR].

Mr. SLATER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. LAPHAM. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—23.

So the bill was passed.

MARY A. CONKEN.

The bill (H. R. 1581) granting a pension to Mary A. Conken was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary A. Conken, widow of James T. Conken, deceased, late a private in Company H, Eighth Regiment of Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. BAUSMAN.

The bill (S. 1546) to increase the pension of George W. Bausman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It grants a pension to George W. Bausman, late a private in Company D of the Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, at the rate of $24 per month, and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of George W. Bausman on the pension-roll at that rate, in lieu of the pension now paid him.

Mr. PLUMB. The name is Bousman; there is a misprint. I ask that the correction be made. It is so borne on the rolls in the Pension Office now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The correction will be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which way is the bill reported?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been reported favorably.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES P. F. TOBY.

The bill (S. 2478) granting a pension to James P. F. Toby was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James P. F. Toby as second lieutenant of Company B, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, now on the pension-roll as sergeant in that company and regiment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTHER M. CAREY.

The bill (H. R. 2095) granting a pension to Esther M. Carey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Esther M. Carey, mother of William B. Carey, deceased, late a private in Company H, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, war of 1861.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VIRGINIA ZEILEN.

The bill (S. 319) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Virginia Zeilen was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the pension of $20 per month now allowed by law to Mrs. Virginia Zeilen, widow of the late Brigadier-General Jacob Zeilen, United States Marines, be increased to $30 per month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is that amendment? Is there a report?

Mr. PLATT. I can state the case in a moment. Mrs. Zeilen is the widow of Brigadier-General Zeilen, of the Marine Corps. She applied for a pension at the Pension Office and was pensioned as of the rank when her husband was captain at only $20, dating back to the time when he was first attacked with disease of the liver. The disease of which he died was atrophy or a wasting away of the liver. Upon examining the evidence the committee were of opinion that the disease which caused the death could not be traceable so far back as the time when he held the rank of captain, and that she ought to have been pensioned at the Pension Office at the rank which her husband held, $30 per month. She asked for $50, but we gave her $30, which corresponds with the rank her husband held.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. SCHUYLER SUTTON.

The bill (H. R. 5771) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a pension to A. Schuyler Sutton," approved June 4, 1872, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It amends the act approved June 4, 1872, so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of A. Schuyler Sutton, late acting lieutenant-colonel of the Ninety-fifth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, at the rate of $40 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case—the majority report and the views of the minority.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MITCHELL February 16, 1883:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5771) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a pension to A. Schuyler Sutton," having examined the same, a majority of the committee adopt the report of the House committee, No. 1476, made to the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, as follows:

"The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5771) to amend an act entitled 'An act granting a pension to A. Schuyler Sutton,' approved June 4, 1872, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to make the following report:

"At the breaking out of the civil war A. Schuyler Sutton, who had seen honorable service during the war with Mexico, was an attorney at law in successful practice at Norwalk, Ohio. He enlisted as a private soldier in the Ninety-fifth Ohio, and having acquired a knowledge of military tactics during his former service, greatly assisted in the organization, drill, and discipline of the new regiment. There is satisfactory evidence that Sutton had received assurances from Governor Tod, of Ohio, that he should be commissioned as lieutenant-colonel of the regiment. It is certain that he was acting in that capacity when, at the battle of Richmond, Kentucky, on or about August 30, 1862, he received the wound for which he was originally pensioned. Owing to the fact that he had not been commissioned the Pension Office rated him as a private soldier, and allowed him a pension at the rate of $8 a month, which was subsequently raised to $15. By an act of Congress, approved June 4, 1878, his pension was increased to $30 per month from that date.

"Your committee believe that it would be an act of simple justice to this soldier to grant him a pension at this rate, dating from his discharge, deducting the amount received by him during the intervening period. His wound has had the effect of blasting his life. His jaws are so anchylosed as to prevent the mastication of solid food. The sense of sight and hearing are much impaired, and he is a constant sufferer from violent facial neuralgia. Being unable to open his mouth sufficiently, and by reason of disorganization of the soft and bony tissues occasioned by the wound, he is unable to employ the ordinary means of cleanliness, and his breath is consequently horribly offensive.

"In the opinion of your committee the evidence in the case justifies the conclusion to which it has arrived, 'that the disability for which he is now pensioned existed at the time of his discharge.' We therefore report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, so amended that said A. Schuyler Sutton be pensioned at the rate of $40 per month from and after the passage of this act."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views of the minority will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The undersigned, not concurring in the report of the committee on the bill (H. R. 5771) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a pension to A. Schuyler Sutton," submit the following as the views of the minority:

It appears that A. Schuyler Sutton, on the the 5th of August, 1862, enlisted as a private in Company A, Ninety-fifth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers; that on the 30th day of August, 1862, in an engagement with the confederate forces at Richmond, Kentucky, he "was ordered and placed in command of said Company A, with directions to deploy the same as skirmishers and advance until he found the enemy's skirmishers and position of their main force; that he proceeded upon the duty assigned him, and while in the execution of the order engaged the enemy's skirmishers; that during the engagement he received from one of the enemy's skirmishers a rifle-shot wound, the ball entering the left cheek, passing through, breaking and fracturing the cheek and jaw bones, and coming out under the left ear."

He was honorably discharged on the 22d day of December, 1862. In June, 1863, he filed his application for pension on account of said wound, which he claimed had so affected him that he "was unable to open his mouth more than one-quarter of an inch to receive food, and had also affected his eye-sight and hearing, and incapacitated him from performing the duties of a soldier or obtaining a subsistence from manual labor."

The certificate of the surgeon on which he was discharged rated his disability at one-half. He was pensioned at $8 per month; under the act of June 6, 1866, he applied for and obtained an increase of pension at the rate of $15 per month. Subsequently he applied to Congress for a further relief, and on the 4th June, 1872, his pension was increased by special act to $30 per month.

The papers do not show any increased disability since 1872, when that special relief was granted him by Congress. His condition is about the same now as then. In the opinion of Congress, the peculiar character of the wound, which greatly disfigured the claimant's face and affected his eye-sight and hearing, made his case an exceptional one and justified an increase from $15 to $30 per month. He now again applies to Congress for a still further increase, and the bill as it comes from the House proposes to raise his pension from $30 to $40 per month upon precisely the same state of facts which led Congress to fix it at $30 per month in 1872. To do this will, in our opinion, establish bad precedent and greatly encourage repeated applications to Congress for special relief. Private acts of this character are steadily on the increase, occupying much of the time of Congress, and giving rise to much dissatisfaction upon the part of the great body of pensioners who take under the general law. The undersigned think the bill should not pass.

HOWELL E. JACKSON.
J. N. CAMDEN.
POPE BARROW.

Mr. PLATT. I think, upon a casual examination of the bill, it would receive such a construction as to give him $40 a month in arrears of pension back to the time of his disability. I want to guard against that. Therefore, at the end of the bill, I move to strike out the words "and after the passage of this act" and to insert "March 4, 1883."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JACKSON. I wish to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to this case. Special relief was granted in this case by special act on the 4th of June, 1872, for the very disability now existing and on which it is proposed to increase it. Congress has once considered the case and considered all its peculiar circumstances, considered the disability that was existing. No increase of disability now exists, and it is proposed on the same state of facts to pass a second special act increasing this man's pension still further. He was pensioned, rated according to the disability certified by the surgeons in 1866. That was increased to $15, and then by special act of Congress it was increased from $15 to $30 per month on the same state of facts, on the same disability on which he now makes a second application to Congress to have it increased to $40.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. What is the amount of pension he receives?

Mr. JACKSON. He receives $30 a month now under special act, and for the very disability for which it is proposed to increase it again. I think that would be a very dangerous precedent.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 14, noes 17; no quorum voting.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. McDILL (when his named was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 27, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Anthony,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Blair,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,	Tabor,

So the bill was passed.

RICHARD JOBES.

The bill (H. R. 6181) to increase the pension of Richard Jobes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, to strike out "30" and insert "24;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Richard Jobes, late of Company D, Sixteenth Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $24 from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF KUNIGUNDA A. MILLER.

The bill (H. R. 2912) granting relief to the heirs of Kunigunda A. Miller, deceased, was considered as in Committe of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to John Albert, Mary Carr (formerly Albert), Michael Albert, and Carrie Miller, heirs at law of Kunigunda A. Miller, deceased, and brothers and sisters of Leonard Albert, late a private in Company F, Twenty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, the arrears of pension due and heretofore authorized to be paid Kunigunda A. Miller, now deceased, under pension certificate No. 129461.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMILY F. WARREN.

The bill (H. R. 6943) granting a pension to the widow of the late Major-General G. K. Warren was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It places on the pension-roll, at the rate of $50 per month, the name of Emily F. Warren, widow of the late Major-General G. K. Warren, United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 896.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have not finished the pension bills.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1410. That is the general bill proposing a certain increase of pensions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand that that is one of the pension bills left undisposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Chair is so informed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand that it is one of the bills the Senate unanimously agreed to take up?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is one of them. It is one of the pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the question if this is one of the pension bills?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be announced by its title.

The ACTING SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 1410) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That does not belong to the class of bills we agreed to take up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, it does.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think it does. Mr. President, as I have the floor, I move to postpone the pending order and take up a bill which has passed the House, House bill No. 896.

Mr. MORGAN. What is the pending order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report by its title the bill moved by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL].

The ACTING SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 1410) to amend the pension laws by increasing pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service.

Mr. MORGAN. I make the point of order that that bill has not been taken up by the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not at all. That is what I say.

Mr. MITCHELL. The motion which was entertained by the Senate and agreed to was that the Senate should proceed to consider the pension bills upon the Calender. That included those reported adversely as well as those reported favorably, and House bill No. 1410 was specially mentioned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair was in the chair when the order was made. The order was to take up the pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That meant the special pension bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama raises the question of order as to whether this is a pension bill or not.

Mr. MORGAN. No, that is not the point I raise. I raise this point of order, if the Chair will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will please state his point of order.

Mr. MORGAN. The point of order is that the Senate by vote and not by unanimous consent took up the pension bills. I then inquired of the Chair whether that action of the Senate extended to each and all of the bills. It was held that it did not, and that each bill should be taken up upon its own merits. There has been since that time silent consent, and the bills have come up without objection. Any Senator had the right at any time to call for a vote of the Senate upon taking up any one of the pension bills. There was no unanimous consent, but it was a vote of the Senate that took them up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The order of the Senate was that the Senate would proceed to the consideration of the pension bills upon the Calendar, and that, after debate, was made to include all those adversely reported as well as the others. Then the Senator from Alabama inquired whether they were to come up in a lump or whether they were to come up one by one, and everybody said of course they would come up one by one, as we all understood.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Vermont never understood me to inquire whether ten bills could be passed at once.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did so understand the Senator, and so replied.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator must have been very dull about it, or else I was extremely stupid myself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I undoubtedly was very dull.

Mr. MORGAN. No. I made the question distinctly whether that rule of the Senate applied to the particular class of bills, or whether it applied to each bill seriatim. That was the question I made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order of the Senate was as has been stated by the Chair and by the Senator from Vermont. If the question had been made at the time the Chair would have certainly ruled, as he thinks it would be proper to so rule, that but one bill at a time could be taken up by the order of the Senate. As to what construction is to be put upon the rule that has been adopted the Chair is inclined to think the point of order raised by the Senator from Alabama is well taken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well. Then the Senator from Pennsylvania has moved to take up a bill; he has called it up.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I have the floor. The motion was to take up bills granting pensions to particular soldiers for services in the war. It was understood to apply to them by everybody, and not to any bill proposing to amend the pension laws.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have the floor, I say to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do I understand that the Senator from Kentucky is entitled to the floor to go on at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had recognized the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The pending question is my motion to take up House bill 896.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Chair—I rise to a question of order—I ask the Chair what is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon the passage of the last bill the Chair recognized the Senator from Kentucky, and while the Senator from Kentucky was on the floor the Chair was notified by the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Vermont that there was yet another pension bill. The Chair stopped the Senator from Kentucky, and ordered the Secretary to report the pension bill. He did so. Then the Senator from Kentucky resumed the floor, and the point of order was raised by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. My motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is inclined to think the pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky to take up House bill No. 896, the bill indicated by him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a violation of the understanding of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to take up House bill No. 896, which has passed the House by an almost unanimous vote and is here upon our Calendar, and which interests more people in this country than any measure we have considered during this session of Congress. I hope the Senate will take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No debate as to the merits of a proposition proposed to be taken up is in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not debating it. I am merely stating what it is.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair, if I understand it correctly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the Senator from Pennsylvania a right to take me off the floor? I do not apprehend that he has.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not claim that right, Mr. President——

Mr. VOORHEES. May I ask what is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has been recognized by the Chair, and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. VOORHEES. I want to ask the Senator from Kentucky, or the Chair, what the bill is that is moved by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I am stating.

Mr. VOORHEES. I want to hear it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is the bill commonly known as the pleuropneumonia bill, for the suppression of the cattle plague.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think the afflictions of men ought to be attended to before the afflictions of cattle.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a bill which has passed the House by a unanimous vote, and it is now upon our Calendar, and one in which the people of this country feel far more interest than they do in any bill we have discussed at this session of Congress. It affects more property than any bill that has been before the Senate since I have had the honor of a seat in the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. And involves more monstrous and untenable propositions. It only needs to be read to show that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I have the floor.

Mr. PLATT. What is the number of the bill which the Senator from Kentucky is trying to have considered?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have stated it four or five times. It is House bill No. 896. I think the Senate will concur with me as to the absolute necessity and importance of passing that bill and doing it at once. I had hoped there would be no discussion of it, and that it might pass in five minutes.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. COKE. Does the Senator think that the bill he moves can pass in five minutes? Is it not the same bill which was considered at the last session?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir; it has been modified.

Mr. INGALLS. It is worse, if anything, than that bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That goes into the merits. Let us vote on taking it up. We can not spend time in debate.

Mr. COKE. It is a bill which will lead to a great deal of debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think so; and whether it leads to debate or not I ask for a vote on the question. I want to see whether the gentlemen who have been legislating for all the monopolies of this country, for every railroad company, every bank, every manufacturing establishment, are going to defeat this bill——

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair reminds the Senator from Kentucky that no debate upon the merits of the proposition is in order upon a motion to take the bill up.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. INGALLS. I shall be inclined to think that this bill can not but lead to a great deal of debate, for I am very sure nothing can be said in favor of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is debate on the merits.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I insist that the Senator from Kansas is now debating the merits. My motion is to take that bill up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very good, let us vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for a vote upon it. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him, and on that motion asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state to the Senate that if that motion is voted down I shall then ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1410.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Being the pension bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Being the pension bill referred to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That states the issue.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll on the motion of Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. McDILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR]; otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 17, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Barrow,	George,	Jackson,	Walker,
Call,	Gorman,	Jonas,	Williams.
Camden,	Groome,	Mahone,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hampton,	Ransom,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Vest,

NAYS—26.

Anthony,	Garland,	Lapham,	Sherman,
Blair,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Tabor,
Coke,	Hawley,	Maxey,	Van Wyck.
Conger,	Hill,	Miller of N. Y.,	Voorhees,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hoar,	Platt,	Windom.
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Pugh,
Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Rollins,

ABSENT—33.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Logan,	Saulsbury,

So the motion was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 7049) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to said bill, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. L. B. CASWELL of Wisconsin, Mr. GEORGE M. ROBESON of New Jersey, and Mr. E. JOHN ELLIS of Louisiana managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

RATES OF PENSION.

Mr. MITCHELL. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 1410.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill indicated by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 1410) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to take up the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that from and after its passage all persons on the pension-roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States and in the line of duty, shall have lost one arm, one hand, one leg, or one foot, or shall have suffered disability equal thereto, shall be entitled to a pension of $40 per month.

Mr. MITCHELL. There are four several reports on this bill from the Committee on Pensions of the Senate. I ask that all those reports be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SLATER January 26, 1883:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1410) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or leg in the service, have examined the same, and the majority of your committee report:

That the bill proposes to increase the pension of "all persons now on the pension-rolls, and all persons hereafter granted a pension who, while in the military or naval service of the United States and in the line of duty, shall have lost one arm, one hand, one leg, or one foot, or shall have suffered disability equal thereto, shall be entitled to a pension of $40 per month."

The rates at which persons suffering the disabilities named are now pensioned are as follows:

Loss of a hand or foot, per month	$18 00
Amputation at or above the knee, per month	24 00
Amputation of arm at or above elbow, per month	24 00
Amputation at hip-joint, per month	37 50

The proposed legislation is manifestly and grossly unjust and unequal. The loss of a hand or a foot is in no just sense equal to the loss of an arm above the elbow or of the leg above the knee, and it is still more out of proportion to rank the loss of a hand or foot with the loss of an arm at the shoulder or with the loss of a leg at the hip-joint.

The present rates for the disabilities named are, in the opinion of your committee, liberal, and ought not to be disturbed—

First. Because it will to a great extent disturb and derange the rating of all the other classes below those proposed to be raised, and very greatly embarrass the Pension Office in its workings, retarding the passing of claims already too long delayed in their disposition.

Second. It will be a great and manifest injustice to raise the pensions of the class proposed, and leave a much larger class of equally deserving pensions embraced in the ratings below $18 per month untouched. If there is to be a rerating of any portion of the pension-list, it ought in justice to begin in the grades last referred to and not in the higher grades as proposed in this bill. Even now there is very considerable complaint of inequality in the pension ratings, because of the great difference between those who rate above $18 per month and those who fall below that amount—the latter complaining that they are unjustly discriminated against.

The passage of this bill will immediately add to and permanently increase the annual pension account not less than $5,187,564, as will appear by the following, taken from the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions to the Secretary of the Interior, dated December 16, 1882, on this very subject. He says:

"The class of persons to be benefited by House bill 1410, now before the Senate, are those who have lost one hand, one arm, one foot, or one leg; also those who are now receiving a pension for a disability equivalent to any of those first named. * * *

"The following statement will show an estimate of the whole number who come within the description of the bill, so far as relates to amputation:

Loss of hand and now receiving $18 per month.	Loss of arm and now receiving $24 per month.	Loss of foot and now receiving $18 per month.	Loss of leg and now receiving $24 per month.	Loss of hand and foot and now receiving $36 per month.	Amputation at the hip-joint, now receiving $37.50 per month.	Proposed net increase per month over the present rate.	Annual net increase between the present rate and that of $40 per month.
1,108	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$22 00	$292,512
	3,564	.....	.....	.....	.....	16 00	684,288
		2,523	.....	.....	.....	22 00	666,072
			1,966	.....	.....	16 00	377,472
				15	.....	4 00	720
					6	2 50	180
							2,021,244

"There are therefore of this class (amputations) 9,182, with a total net annual increase, if House bill 1410 should become a law, allowing $40 per month, of $2,021,244.

"This number will diminish from year to year, as it is rare that a new pension is now allowed for amputation.

"EQUIVALENT DISABILITIES.

"The following statement shows the number who are in receipt of a pension on account of disabilities equivalent to the amputations mentioned, and such others as may be affected by the bill in question; also the annual value of the increase, provided this class should be allowed $40 per month:

8,847 now receiving $18 per month, and the net increase will be	$2,335,608
1,552 now receiving $24 per month, and the net increase will be	297,984
232 now receiving $31.25 per month, and the net increase will be	21,576
14 now receiving $36 per month, and the net increase will be	672
280 are officers above the rank of first lieutenant, and the estimated increase will be	60,480

In all, 10,925, and a net annual increase of $2,716,320 for equivalent disabilities.

"This estimate is to the close of the last fiscal year, and as the resolution calls for an estimate for the future as well, I separate those purely estimated from those compiled from the records. An examination of 20,000 original cases recently allowed shows that 2.7 per cent. of the same received a pension wherein the current rate was at and above $18 per month and less than $40 per month. This does not refer to amputations, as it is rare that a pension is now claimed for the same. Assuming that 30,000 claims of this class should be allowed during the current year, together with the increase allowed bringing others within the same description, the annual increase during the present year would be augmented by this class some $450,000, which, added to $2,716,320, would make a total increase for equivalent disabilitities of $3,166,320.

"It should not be forgotten that if this bill shall become a law Congress can not with justice or consistency refuse to equalize the ratio between $8 and $18 per month with the rates in this bill, and the passage of this bill must be regarded as the entering-wedge to this general rerating, which will further very largely increase the annual pension account over that now provided for. This is very fully shown by Commissioner Dudley in the letter last referred to, as follows:

"The number of pensioners on the roll June 30, 1882, who were receiving $8 per month and the fractional rating of $18 per month, with the present annual value, is as follows:

29,074 at $8 per month	$2,791,104
6,249 at $10 per month	749,880
9,209 at $12 per month	1,326,096
2,861 at $14 per month	480,648
1,104 at $16 per month	211,968
48,497	5,559,696

"To increase these proportionately with the $18 and $24 class would bring the rate up to $15, $20, $25, $30, and $35 per month, as near as they could be equitably estimated. The net annual increase for these rates would be as follows:

29,074, now receiving $8 per month, to $15 per month	$2,442,216
6,249, now receiving $10 per month, to $20 per month	749,880
9,209, now receiving $12 per month, to $25 per month	1,436,604
2,861, now receiving $14 per month, to $30 per month	549,312
1,104, now receiving $16 per month, to $35 per month	251,712
This would increase the annual value of the roll	5,429,724

"To estimate the number and amount involved on this scale of increase to pending cases which may be hereafter allowed involves more difficulties for a satisfactory estimate than those already made. I submit this, however, on the following basis:

"Twenty-seven per cent. of those now on the roll are in receipt of the rates referred to. Take the 166,147 claimants before estimated as likely to be allowed a pension out of the pending claims now before the office, and the same rates would give 44,859 as likely to receive a pension of $8, and the intermediate grades of $10, $14, and $16 per month, and the annual net increase over the annual rates now provided by law would be $18,600,000."

The estimate makes no account of the fact that as years pass by the disabilities of the soldier increase in degree, so that the ratio of equivalent disabilities will steadily increase with the years. It must also be remembered that claims still continue to come in in large numbers, there having been filed in the year 1882 no less than 40,939 new applications, an increase of nearly 10,000 over the preceding year. There were on the files of the Pension Office July 1, 1882, 207,684 applications undisposed of. Of this number the Commissioner estimates that there will be ultimately allowed 166,147. Justice demands that these claims shall be considered and finally disposed of at the very earliest day. The annual pension account is now $29,341,101.62, and computing for the number to be allowed out of the 207,684 undisposed applications on file at the commencement of the present fiscal year at the same ratio per pensioner, the annual pension account will be swollen, when they come upon the pension-roll, to $46,403,881.52. The Commissioner also shows, in his last annual report, that there are now living over 1,000,000 individual soldiers who have not applied for pensions; that 86,803 soldiers have died leaving pensionable relatives who have made no application for pensions. From these facts and statistics it is apparent to those who will reflect but for a moment that in a very brief period—not more than three to five years—the annual pension account must, under existing legislation, be swollen to at least $50,000,000, for which annual appropriations must be made; and if this bill shall become a law, the direct additions, and those which are sure to follow as sequences of its passage, can not fail to swell this vast sum to fully $70,000,000 annually for pensions. This statement makes no account of the money needed to meet the demands of the arrearages-of-pension act so called, which is not likely to fall short of $200,000,000, yet to be provided.

TO RECAPITULATE.

The proposed legislation is unequal and unjust, as between the classes proposed to be increased, in that it rates minor disabilities equal to those of a much greater and graver character.

It discriminates against a much larger and equally deserving class, embraced in the lower ratings under existing laws, and will cause widespread dissatisfaction and discontent among those embraced in the lower ratings because they are denied an advance to which they are as justly entitled as those classes named in the proposed legislation.

It will derange the business of the Pension Office and greatly embarrass it in bringing up the great number of applicants which have been too long neglected, and in this way operate very unjustly against a large class of meritorious people entitled to pensions, but who have been unable to have their cases determined by reason of the great pressure of business in the Pension Office, and the inadequateness of the force, and the facilities to expedite the work.

The present allowance of the classes named are ample and in every respect liberal. The average is considerably above the average wages of the country, the lowest grade of $18 per month being about the general average of wages throughout the country.

The direct and immediate effect of this bill, if it shall become a law, will be to add to the annual pension account more than $5,000,000, and the legislation which will almost certainly follow the enactment of this bill into a law will add many millions more, as has been shown.

Therefore we recommend that the bill be not passed.

The Acting Secretary read the views of a minority of the Committee on Pensions, submitted by Mr. VAN WYCK January 26, 1883, as follows:

Differing with a majority of the committee, and unwilling to report the bill back to the Senate without recommendation, we prefer to state why we think House bill 1410 should become a law.

True, many inconsistencies, incongruities, and unjust ratings appear in the pension laws now on the statute-book.

The law needs remodeling, notably, to give every man the same pension for the same disability.

No reason exists why the soldier who carried the musket and made the charge should not receive the same amount for the loss of a leg, or other disability, equal to that of a captain or a colonel. But it is not proposed by the opponents of this bill, at this time, to remodel the pension laws.

Therefore the fact that inequality exists is no reason why full justice should not be meted out to any class or portion when their cases may be presented to Congress.

There can not be any force in the argument that claim agents are to be benefited, for claim agents can be controlled by Congress, and when in the wrong punished.

Neither is there any force in the statement that frauds may be perpetrated, for that, carried to its full consequences, would lead to repealing all pension laws, for frauds are now committed; the fault is in a measure with the administration of the laws. We have already given the fullest latitude and a large amount of force to the Department to prevent that calamity.

Such can not be pretended to the crippled soldier nor one dying from disease as a reason why his claim should not be fully recognized by that Government which exists to-day only through his sacrifice.

Neither do we consider the allegation that millions will be taken from the Treasury and the pension-roll largely increased a ground of objection.

We must not forget the time when we pledged all there was of value, grateful remembrances for those who fell, and provident care for their families, and to those who should survive public employment without grudging, and money from the Treasury without stint.

At a time when the surplus funds in our Treasury are considered an invitation to reckless and extravagant expenditures it certainly becomes the duty of Congress to pay to the uttermost a contract made in the hour of danger and ratified in the blood and wounds of thousands of our soldiers.

But the promise to public position and employment has not been faithfully kept. Yet we have it in our power to fulfill the other portion of the contract by rendering, in the payment by money, a partial compensation for the losses sustained.

The justice of this measure does not depend upon the money required or the number of soldiers on the pension-roll.

We need not urge that each recurring year will find the payments from the Treasury and the numbers on the pension-roll largely reduced by death.

C. H. VAN WYCK.
G. M. CHILCOTT.

The Acting Secretary read the views of a minority of the Committee on Pensions, submitted by Mr. BLAIR January 26, 1883, as follows:

The undersigned, members of the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 1410, entitled "An act to amend the pension laws by increasing the pension of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or leg in the service," being unable to agree with the majority in the rejection of the bill if properly amended, beg leave to present their views, and recommend the passage of the accompanying substitute for the bill. The House bill provides for an increase of the existing rates of pensions for certain specific disabilities from $18, $24, $31.25, $36, $37.50 per month to $40 per month. It does not attempt to make any proportionate and equitable increase to each of the several classes, but practically makes $40 the minimum of a just and equitable increase as among those several classes, so that if the principle of the bill were properly applied the result would be as follows: Those now receiving pensions at $18 per month being increased to $40 per month, those now pensioned at $24 per month should, on the same principle, be pensioned at $53.32 per month. Those now receiving pension at the rate of $31.25 per month should receive $69.44 per month. Those receiving at the rate of $36 per month would receive $80 per month. Those receiving at the rate of $37.50 would receive $83.32 per month.

The highest rates of pension now paid on account of the worst form of disability, involving total permanent helplessness and requiring the habitual attendance of another person, is $72 per month. The same principle would apply to the equivalent disabilities provided for in the bill.

Although the bill does not provide for the increase of any pension beyond $40 per month, yet, as the minimum form of disability, to wit, by reason of the loss of a hand or foot, is by its terms rated at $40, which is all that is allowed for an amputation at the hip or shoulder joint—the most dangerous operations known to surgery—and most rarely successful, resulting when not fatal in the severest form of disability short of total helplessness, it can not be doubted that the passage of this bill would operate only as the logical and irresistible basis or major premise for future legislation, increasing correspondingly the rates of pension for all degrees of disability higher than that now rated at $18 per month. By the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions, transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior, in response to a resolution of the Senate, contained in Executive Document 21 of this session, it appears that the annual increase of the pension-roll, if this should become a law, on account of claims already allowed, would be $5,187,564. Disregarding applications yet to be made, the anticipated increase of the roll on account of cases now pending and likely to be allowed would be about $6,750,000.

House bill 1410 makes no provision for disabilities affecting sight or hearing, for which, by general consent, very inadequate provision is made by existing law. In recognition of the manifest relative injustice under which these two unfortunate classes have hitherto suffered, the House of Representatives has since passed a bill largely increasing the pensions hereafter to be paid to them. We estimate the necessary increase to the roll, by reason of the provision thus made for these two classes and which properly should have been included in bill 1410, at $1,200,000 per annum, and for injuries to eye and ear, increase of pending claims over what would be allowed by existing law, $1,000,000, so that it is a fair statement of the result of the legislation proposed in House bill 1410; and the subsidiary bill providing for increase for disabilities to sight and hearing, that the annual roll would be increased at least $17,000,000 on account of cases already allowed and pending applications likely to be favorably adjudicated.

Should subsequent legislation carry out the principles involved in bill 1410, this amount would be increased indefinitely. But it may safely be presumed that it would be not less than $30,000,000. These rates once implanted in the pension laws must remain a component part of our pension system in the future, and the increase of the public burden in this direction would become so great and oppressive as probably to result in the indignant abolition of the whole system or in a wholesale, indiscriminate, and inequitable reduction. That the minimum for specific disabilities in the future would, by the enactment of House bill 1410 into a law, be practically established at $40 per month, has been substantially admitted by advocates of the bill, and, so far as we know, is not seriously denied, or if denied, no one exercising common discretion in the case would give credence to the denial.

The inequalities which it would establish could not fail to rankle in the breasts of those who relatively would suffer injustice by its provisions, and the ordinary sense of fair play existing in the minds of the people at large would require the relative increase of all, from a minimum of $40, or a general reduction, which would leave all parties interested worse off than they now are. Nor would the evil be lessened, but, on the contrary, it would be greatly aggravated, by an amendment such as has been proposed to the bill, by striking out all increase to the equivalent disabilities, making its benefits applicable only to those who have suffered amputation of the hand or foot, the arm or leg. This would only increase the number of those who would feel that they had been unjustly dealt with, and in the next Congress we should be called upon to complete the justice denied in this.

The undersigned have, therefore, felt that either all legislation should be denied, or that the inherent difficulties of the subject should be dealt with comprehensively, immediately, and with a determination to do equal justice to all and to deny it to none. While we have felt that the soldiers suffering from specific disabilities, and their equivalents—although liberally provided for when our legislation is compared with that of other governments—have not hitherto received any more than they were entitled to receive from a rescued and grateful people; yet, assuming that until the present time their pensions have been fairly commensurate with their sufferings and disabilities, it must be conceded that with the increasing necessities resulting from failing constitutions and the unavoidable aggravation of their disabilities, with growing helplessness and incapacity to exercise their mental faculties, as well as such crippled physical powers as the ravages of war have spared to them, and with their lives shortening as the shadows lengthen, a very substantial increase of their pensions has become indispensable.

It should be remembered that all who suffer from these disabilities were soldiers, very seriously maimed or otherwise disabled in the actual conflicts of war. In almost every instance their lives have been greatly shortened, and as the years pass away the rate of mortality among them—fearful at the best—is rapidly accelerated. Those of them who have suffered the loss of hands, feet, or limbs, from successful operations, while oftentimes appealing most strongly to the eye for sympathy, are really subjected to less suffering and shortening of life than those whose equivalent disabilities are occasioned by disease or wounds in different portions of the body, by sores and fractures beyond healing, and often unnamed and horrible afflictions too shocking for statement here. Any bill which shall undertake to increase the pensions of one class, and at the same time should neglect the other, would be radically unjust.

Believing that for the general reasons we have stated some increase to all is imperatively required to meet their increasing necessities—necessities which will soon cease with most of them by their final discharge from the warfare of life—we have, after careful study of the subject, stimulated by great anxiety to master the complications and perplexities which surround it—difficulties which have been developing and increasing for years from the imperfect patchwork of legislation that has come down to us—prepared the accompanying substitute for the pending bill. It covers all known specific disabilities, their proportionates and equivalents. By existing legislation $18 is made the pension for the loss of a hand or foot. It is the lowest specific disability, and we have increased it to $24. The next higher grade, to wit, $24, the present pension for the loss of an arm or leg, we have increased to $30. The inability to perform manual labor, which may involve the necessity for the employment of an attendant most of the time, as well as medical aid, now receiving only $24, we have increased to $40; loss of hand and foot, and total disability in one hand and one foot, now receiving $36, we have increased to $40 per month; amputation at the hip-joint, now receiving $37.50, we have increased to $40; total deafness hitherto provided for with astonishing inadequacy—receiving only $13 per month—we have increased to $30.

We have also endeavored to provide what seemed to us just proportionate rates for lesser disabilities of hearing and sight. But we must refer to the bill itself for a minute statement of its provisions. There is now no rate of pension between $37.50, the amount allowed for amputation at the hip-joint, and the rate of $72, which is paid for the following disabilities, respectively: Loss of both hands, loss of both feet, loss of both eyes, loss of one eye, the other having been lost before enlistment; disability requiring regular aid and attention, and total disability in both hands. We have submitted the proposed substitute to the Commissioner of Pensions, and from memorandum furnished by him to Mr. BLAIR personally, not officially, make the following statement of the addition to the annual roll by reason of the increase of pensioners whose claims are already allowed. The total amount is $5,429,010.

Assuming the substantial correctness of this memorandum, the total increase to the pension-roll, when all pending cases are adjudicated, would amount in round numbers to about $9,000,000, but as the rate of mortality will nearly approach the annual increase, the amount annually paid out at any time will not, in our belief, exceed $5,000,000 or $7,000,000 under the provisions of this bill in addition to what would otherwise be paid under existing laws. As these pensioners themselves will soon pass away, we feel that this slight increase, so necessary and so just, ought not to be named as a burden to the overflowing coffers of the American people, whose contents were coined from the blood of these patriotic men. Even if it were a burden our people would joyfully take it up, and will rejoice at the opportunity to testify their gratitude to those by whose sufferings, which can cease only with death, they have themselves been saved.

The following is a copy of the proposed substitute for House bills 1410 and 1247:

A bill to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension-roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall have lost a hand or a foot, shall be entitled to a pension of $24 per month; all persons who in like manner shall have suffered amputation at or above the elbow or knee, at the rate of $30 per month; and all who shall in like manner have suffered amputation at the hip-joint or at the shoulder-joint, or who shall have lost one hand and one foot, or shall be totally disabled in one hand and one foot, or shall be otherwise so disabled as to be incapacitated for the performance of any manual labor, but not so much as to require the regular personal aid and attendance of another person, at the rate of $40 per month; and all persons who in like manner shall have contracted a disability equal or equivalent to any of the foregoing specified disabilities, shall be entitled to receive a pension per month of the amount hereby granted to such disability; and in case of amputation below a joint, but with such effect as to produce a disability equal to that produced by amputation at or above the joint, pension shall be paid as for the disability actually resulting from such amputation; and all persons who in like manner shall have lost the sight of one eye shall receive a pension at the rate of $12 per month; and in cases in which the injury to the one eye manifestly affects injuriously the sight of the other eye, or in which the other eye shall have been partially disabled in the service and line of duty as aforesaid, he shall be entitled to an equitable increase in his pension, not to exceed, when the loss of sight is less than total blindness, in the whole amount $40 per month; and all those who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, in the line of duty, by injury received or disease contracted, shall have totally lost the hearing of both ears, shall be entitled to receive a pension of $30 per month; and for any loss of hearing less than total deafness, they shall receive an equitable portion thereof.

SEC. 2. That instead of the rate of $18 per month provided in section 4699 of the Revised Statutes, the rate of $24 per month may be proportionately divided for any degree of disability established for which neither the preceding section nor section 4695 of the Revised Statutes make provision: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to reduce any pension now authorized by law; nor shall any pensioner be entitled to increase under this section until an examination shall show an increase in his actual disability.

SEC. 3. That no applicant for pension whose claim shall be granted hereafter shall receive arrears or any allowance of pension for time prior to the passage of this act greater than he would be entitled to receive by virtue of existing laws; but from and after the passage of this act his pension shall be computed in accordance therewith, if his disability be such as is included in its provisions.

Memorandum from Commissioner of Pensions, referred to in views of minority, of net annual increase under provisions of the proposed Senate bill:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1883.

Memorandum.

Thirty-six hundred and thirty-one pensioners who have lost one hand or one foot, now receiving $18 per month, and to be increased to $24 per month. Net annual increase $261,432.

Fifty-three hundred and eighty who have suffered amputation at or above the knee, or the elbow, now receiving $24, and to be increased to $30 per month. Net annual increase, $419,760.

Sixty who have suffered amputation at the hip-joint, now receiving $37, and to be increased to $40 per month. Net annual increase, $180.

One hundred and fifty who have suffered amputation at the shoulder joint, now at $24, and to be increased to $40 per month (this number estimated). Net annual increase, $28,000.

Fifteen who have lost one hand and one foot, now receiving $36, and to be increased to $40 per month. Net annual increase, $720.

One hundred and twenty-five totally deaf, now receiving $13, and to be increased to $30 per month. Net annual increase, $25,500.

Two thousand who are pensioned for impaired hearing, less than total deafness, now receiving $1, $2, $4, and $6 per month, and to receive an equitable portion of $30 per month. Net annual increase (estimated), $312,000.

Two thousand who have lost one eye (estimated), now receiving $4 per month and to be increased to $12 per month. Net annual increase, $192,000.

Four thousand (estimated) who are receiving a pension for impaired sight, other than the loss of one eye or of total blindness, now receiving the several rates from $2 to $16 per month, and to receive an equitable proportion of $40 per month. The net annual increase is estimated at $700,000.

Nineteen thousand four hundred and twenty-three pensioners now receiving $10, $12, $14, $16 per month, who will be entitled to a proportion of $24 per month, and the net annual increase is $1,398,456.

Eighty-eight hundred and forty-seven who have a disability equivalent to loss of a hand or a foot, now receiving $18, and to be increased to $24, $30, and $40 per month. Net annual increase (estimated), $1,667,894.

Fifteen hundred and fifty-two now disabled for the performance of any manual labor, receiving $24 per month, and to be increased to $40 per month. Net annual increase, $287,908.

Two hundred and thirty-two now receiving $31.25, and to receive $40 per month. Net annual increase, $24,360.

Add $100,000 for commissioned officers and the addition to the roll since June 30, 1882, and the net annual increase for all classes is estimated at $5,429,010.

The Acting Secretary read the views of a minority of the Committee on Pensions, submitted by Mr. PLATT January 26, 1883, as follows:

The undersigned, a member of the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred H. R. 1410, the same being "an act to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service," being unable to agree with the majority of the committee in their recommendation that the bill be indefinitely postponed, herewith submits his reasons therefor and for the passage of an original bill introduced herewith.

The present law regulating the rate of pensions is inconsistent and incongruous, owing to the fact mainly that the rates for different degrees of disability have been fixed by separate statutes, passed at different times, for the benefit of particular classes of pensioners, and without reference to the pensions granted other classes. The attempts to equalize and adjust pension rates from time to time by statutes increasing pensions of certain classes has added to the inequality in pensions. H. R. 1410, in the opinion of the undersigned, would, if passed, result in still greater and more glaring inequalities and inconsistencies. It provides, in substance, that the rate of pension now paid for the loss of a hand or foot, or other disability equivalent thereto, to wit, $18 per month, shall be increased to $40 a month; that the rate paid for the loss of an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, to wit, $24 per month, shall in like manner be increased to $40 per month; also that the rate paid to those "otherwise so disabled as to be incapacitated for performing any manual labor, but not so much so as to require regular personal aid and attendance," to wit, $24 per month, shall in like manner be increased to $40 per month.

It is obvious that the disability of the three classes referred to is not the same, and the inconsistency of fixing the same amount of pension for the three degrees of disability is the more obvious when we consider that those suffering the least degree of disability are to be increased by the bill $22 per month, while those suffering the greater degree of disability are only to be increased $16 per month. Again, the rate proposed to be fixed by the bill for those who have lost one hand or one foot only would be but $10 less per month than that now fixed for those who are totally and permanently disabled so as to require the regular personal aid and attendance of another person. Upon the supposition that the bill in the shape that it passed the House would increase the pension of those who have lost one hand and one foot, or are totally disabled in one hand and one foot, from $36 per month now paid them to $40 per month, it would be an increase of $4 per month only to that class, putting those who have simply lost one hand or one foot upon an equality with those who have lost both. Upon the supposition that it would increase from $31.25 per month to $40 per month the pensions of those who are totally disabled and require the aid and attendance of another person, but whose disability in this degree is not found to be permanent, the increase per month, $8.75, would be less than one-half the increase granted to those who having lost only a hand are still able in many instances to earn fair salaries.

The undersigned doubts very much the wisdom of attempting by any bill to increase the pensions of any particular class at this time. A large number of applications for arrears of pension are still pending. The total amount paid for arrears of pensions to December 1, 1882, amounts to $97,891,506.98. The Commissioner estimates that there will still be required to pay arrears of pension to those whose claims are now pending entitled to arrears the sum of $204,795,000. The amounts given above are for arrearages simply, and do not include anything for annual payments after the granting of pensions. The rates of the whole pension-list need to be revised and readjusted, due regard being had to comparative disability, and the undersigned inclines to the opinion that the wisest policy is to make no increase or change in the rate of pensions now allowed by law until after the pending arrearage cases are settled, when the whole subject of pension rating could and should be committed to an intelligent commission, upon which there should be at least one man eminent in medical science instructed to take the rate now paid for the highest degree of disability, to wit, $72 per month, for total and permanent disability requiring the regular aid and attendance of another person, and without reference to rank, fixing lesser rates of pension for all lesser degrees of disability. To do this it is probable that some pensions would need to be reduced and others increased; but it is difficult to see in what other manner justice can be done to different classes of pensioners and their respective disabilities.

To pass the present House bill increasing the pensions of all the classes embraced therein to a uniform rate of $40 per month would simply perpetuate and add to the present inconsistencies of the law, and would, it is believed, result in the near future in an increase of all pensions. There would be no logical answer to be made to the demand of those whose pensions are now rated below $18 per month, or between $24 and $72 per month for a corresponding increase of the pensions now paid to them.

The annual addition to the pension-roll, as it now exists, by the passage of House bill 1410, as it came from the House, would be $5,187,564. To this should be added $892,000 for the cases now pending which would be affected by the bill, making the annual cost by the passage of the bill, $6,079,564.

Recognizing, however, the force of the arguments used in behalf of the pensioners, whose pensions this bill proposes to increase, to the effect that the pensions now paid them are inadequate in view of their disabilities, and desiring to meet the demand for such increase by some present measure of relief reasonable in itself and not too disproportionate to the amount paid other pensioners, the undersigned has concluded that it would be well to increase the pensions of those who are now entitled to $18 per month to $24 per month, and of those who are entitled to $24 per month to $30 per month, and to that end recommends the passage of the following proposed bill in lieu of House bill 1410, which it is believed will add to the pension-roll annually an amount not exceeding $2,000,000:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension-roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States and in the line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot, or been totally or permanently disabled in the same, or otherwise so disabled as to render their incapacity to perform manual labor equivalent to the loss of a hand or a foot, shall receive a pension of $24 per month; that all persons now on the pension-roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, in like manner, shall have lost either an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, or shall have been otherwise so disabled as to be incapacitated for performing any manual labor, but not so much as to require regular personal aid and attendance, shall receive a pension of $30 per month: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to repeal section 4699 of the Revised Statutes of the United States or to change the rate of $18 per month therein mentioned to be proportionately divided for any degree of disability established for which section 4695 makes no provision.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to make only a very brief statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had recognized the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. MITCHELL. I supposed I was occupying the floor, as I called for the reading of the reports of the committee and I did not intend to yield.

Mr. VEST. I only want to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out, in line 7, "or shall have suffered disability equal thereto."

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the gentlemen who have charge of this bill that any amendments which it is proposed to offer be presented now, so that they can be printed in the RECORD, and that the Senate then proceed to the consideration of executive business, and let my friend from Pennsylvania make his statement in the morning when the Senate will be full.

Mr. MITCHELL. That will be satisfactory to me. The question, however, before the Senate, I suppose, will be on the views presented by the majority, which favor an indefinite postponement of the bill. I suppose, therefore, strictly amendments are not in order; but the amendments proposed can be printed in the RECORD and so get the whole case before the Senate that they may examine it. I think that would be well.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that all proposed amendments be handed to the Secretary and be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts that all amendments intended to be proposed to this bill shall be handed to the Secretary and printed in the RECORD?

Mr. VEST. I do not propose to hand my amendment to the Secretary. I have already offered it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 7 of the bill, after the word "foot," it is moved to strike out "or shall have suffered disability equal thereto."

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion a moment.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what I send to the desk now, in order that it may be printed in the RECORD, and also printed for distribution to Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order to print amendments is already made generally.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. BLAIR is as follows:

Amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting:

"That from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension-roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall have lost a hand or a foot, shall be entitled to a pension of $24 per month; all persons who in like manner shall have suffered amputation at or above the elbow or knee, at the rate of $30 per month; and all who shall in like manner have suffered amputation at the hip-joint or at the shoulder-joint, or who shall have lost one hand and one foot, or shall be totally disabled in one hand and one foot, or shall be otherwise so disabled as to be incapacitated for the performance of any manual labor, but not so much as to require the regular personal aid and attendance of another person, at the rate of $40 per month; and all persons who in like manner shall have contracted a disability equal or equivalent to any of the foregoing specified disabilities, shall be entitled to receive a pension per month of the amount hereby granted to such disability; and in case of amputation below a joint, but with such effect as to produce a disability equal to that produced by amputation at or above the joint, pension shall be paid as for the disability actually resulting from such amputation; and all persons who in like manner shall have lost the sight of one eye shall receive a pension at the rate of $12 per month; and in cases in which the injury to the one eye manifestly affects injuriously the sight of the other eye, or in which the other eye shall have been partially disabled in the service and line of duty as aforesaid, he shall be entitled to an equitable increase in his pension, not to exceed, when the loss of sight is less than total blindness, in the whole amount, $40 per month; and all those who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, in the line of duty, by injury received or disease contracted, shall have totally lost the hearing of both ears, shall be entitled to receive a pension of $30 per month; and for any loss of hearing less than total deafness, they shall receive an equitable portion thereof.

"SEC. 2. That instead of the rate of $18 per month provided in section 4699 of the Revised Statues, the rate of $24 per month may be proportionately divided for any degree of disability established for which neither the preceding section of this act nor section 4695 of the Revised Statutes make provision: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to reduce any pension now authorized by law; nor shall any pensioner be entitled to increase under this section until an examination shall show an increase in his actual disability, except when the evidence on file shows the disability to be permanent in a degree entitling to the rate of pension then received, or when the character of the disability would vary in a lesser degree.

"SEC. 3. That no applicant for pension whose claim shall be granted hereafter shall receive arrears or any allowance of pension for time prior to the passage of this act greater than he would be entitled to receive by virtue of existing laws; but from and after the passage of this act his pension shall be computed in accordance therewith if his disability be such as is included in its provisions."

Mr. PLATT. When the proper time shall arrive I will offer an amendment to this bill. I ask that the amendment as proposed may be printed in the RECORD, and also printed in the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made if there be no objection.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. PLATT is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension-roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States and in the line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot, or been totally or permanently disabled in the same, or otherwise so disabled as to render their incapacity to perform manual labor equivalent to the loss of a hand or a foot, shall receive a pension of $24 per month; that all persons now on the pension-roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who in like manner shall have lost either an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, or shall have been otherwise so disabled as to be incapacitated for performing any manual labor, but not so much as to require regular personal aid and attendance, shall receive a pension of $30 per month: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to repeal section 4699 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or to change the rate of $18 per month therein mentioned to be proportionately divided for any degree of disability established for which section 4699 makes no provision."

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. Pending the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, I desire to make a report from the committee of conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7049) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, and 6, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "July" in said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the word "October;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And report to Congress in December next, with the data upon which it is based, a more complete system of gauging the rates of pay for carrying the mails on railroad routes if practicable, in order to secure the better protection of the interests of the Government and the adjustment of rates of compensation for the service required; and he is authorized to expend not to exceed $10,000 out of the appropriation for the transportation of mails for actual and necessary expenses involved, including such extra compensation as he may deem just and reasonable to officers of the Department for specific services rendered, which sum shall be immediately available."

And the Senate agree to the same.

P. B. PLUMB,
W. B. ALLISON,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

L. B. CASWELL,
J. G. CANNON,
E. JNO. ELLIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to state that there seems to have been some little confusion as to the order of proceeding. The report was first made to the House by inadvertence, and the House disagreed to the report of the conference committee, and has asked the Senate to agree to a further conference. I will not make any motion that the Senate agree to the report of the conference committee, but going by that, I will move that the Senate further insist on its amendments and agree to the new conference asked for by the House.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I desire to ask my colleague and the Committee on Appropriations what is the difference between the two Houses now?

Mr. PLUMB. The difference between the two Houses is practically on the special-mail facilities and the provision of the House amending the charters of the Pacific railway companies. There are other points of difference, but those can undoubtedly be accommodated. The disagreement is total on its face on these two points.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As to the additional mail facilities, I would ask my colleague on the committee whether that is interfering much with a settlement, or is it the other point?

Mr. PLUMB. It is pretty hard to state what the action of the House is specially predicated upon. The committee agreed unanimously upon the accommodation of the points of difference, but the report on being submitted to the House was disagreed to by the House and the House has asked for a new conference.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The course taken by the Senator is proper and should be adopted; but I wish to state at the same time that there was a division in the Senate on the $185,000 appropriated for additional mail service. It is believed by some of us at least that that amount is not sufficient for the general distribution that was intended by the Senate when it was originally voted; and if that should become a question dividing the two Houses, and there was nothing else, then I should feel it my duty, and somewhat a pleasure too, to move that the Senate recede.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not certain but that the proper motion should be that the Senate agree to the conference report, and that it further insist on its amendments and agree to the request of the House for a new conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question is, Will the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference?

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand, the conference committee reported a disagreement.

Mr. PLUMB. Oh, no; an agreement this time. They reported a disagreement before and had a new conference. They have agreed now, but the House have disagreed to the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the agreement of the committee?

Mr. PLUMB. The committee agreed that the amendment of the Senate appropriating $185,000 for special mail facilities should remain. They agreed also that the amendment of the Senate to the House bill which amended the Pacific railway charters should be concurred in. They agreed to fixing the 1st day of October for the time of taking effect of the 2 cents postage rate, and there were some agreements upon minor points which I do not now remember, the Senate yielding the additional amount which it added for steamboat mail transportation. There were some minor differences about the provision in regard to investigating the mail service of the United States and reporting a plan to further execute it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then, as I understand, the conference committee agreed and that committee so reported to the House and the House overruled it.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir; the House overruled it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, you do not report your conference report to be agreed to, but you are acting on the report from the House. That is what I want to get at.

Mr. PLUMB. I suppose as a matter of parliamentary propriety the report should have been first made to the Senate, but the House conferees made their report first, and the House thus having jurisdiction of the question disagreed to the report of the conference committee; but it is proper as a part of the history of the case to say that the report of the conference committee should be made to the Senate in order that it may appear in its record.

Mr. COCKRELL. All I have to say is, for I do not want to consume any time, that when the proper period comes that I can do so, I shall move that the Senate recede from the amendment of $185,000 for the fast-mail facilities, so called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to know what the effect of the agreement is. Does it come to the Senate?

Mr. PLUMB. Only a new conference.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Has the House asked for a new conference?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then I should like to say to my friend that I hope he will not ask us to agree. I think the $185,000 appropriation very unequally and very unfairly distributed. I hope if we are to have another disagreement it will not be on that point.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that the action of the House be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 26, 1883.

Resolved, That the House disagree to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 7049) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, and that it further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to said bill and ask a further conference with the Senate upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. CASWELL, Mr. ROBESON, and Mr. ELLIS be the conferees on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate further insist on its amendments and grant the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the committee of conference, and Messrs. PLUMB, ALLISON, and BECK were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1821) prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Illinois, favoring the passage of the bill pending before the Senate for an increase of the pensions of loyal soldiers who lost a leg or an arm in the military service of the United States to the sum of $40 per month; which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution of the Thirty-third General Assembly of the State of Illinois.

Whereas a bill is now pending before the Senate of the United States having for its object an increase of the pensions of all loyal soldiers who lost a leg or an arm in the military service of the United States to the sum of $40 per month: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring herein), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use their influence to secure the passage of said bill, and that the secretary of the State of Illinois be requested to have printed and mailed to each member in Congress and each Senator from Illinois a copy of this resolution.

Adopted by the senate February 2, 1883.

WM. J. CAMPBELL,
President of the Senate.
L. F. WATSON, Secretary.

Concurred in by the house of representatives, February 6, 1883.

LORIN C. COLLINS, JR.,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
JOHN A. REEVE, Clerk.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Illinois, ss:

I, Henry D. Dement, secretary of state of the State of Illinois, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a preamble and joint resolution adopted by the Thirty-third General Assembly of the State of Illinois, and filed in this office February 20, A. D. 1883.

In witness whereof I hereunto set my hand and affix the great seal of State. Done at Springfield, this 22d day of February, in the year of our Lord 1883.

HENRY D. DEMENT,
Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Illinois favoring the passage of an act to secure the placing of sheer-booms at the various bridges crossing the Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution of the thirty-third General Assembly of the State of Illinois.

Whereas the piers of many of the railway bridges crossing the Mississippi River are a very serious hinderance to navigation; that steamers frequently collide with them and sometimes great loss of life is thereby occasioned, and that there is annually a great loss of property, and that they are constantly a great source of danger and dread to those who have business or who travel upon the river; and

Whereas in accordance with the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, a board of United States engineers was convened in Saint Louis, and after an exhaustive examination of the subject, they submitted a report to the honorable the Secretary of War February 19, 1877, in which they recognized the great necessity for shear booms, and recommended plans for the same at the various bridges; and

Whereas in 1882 Major A. McKinzie, United States engineer in charge of the river improvements between Saint Anthony's Falls and the mouth of the Illinois River, constantly witnessing the great danger to life and property at the bridge piers, and the consequent necessity for protection thereat, submitted a report to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, in which much important information was given upon the subject and the shear booms urgently recommended. Therefore your memorialists would respectfully but urgently suggest that the interest of commerce, the security of property, and the safety of life imperatively demand that, at the earliest possible moment, shear booms be placed at the various bridges in substantial accordance with the plans and recommendations above alluded to; Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Illinois (the house of representatives concurring therein), That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives requested to use their best efforts to secure the placing of shear booms at the various bridges crossing the Mississippi River.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, duly signed by the president of the senate, the speaker of the house, and attested by the secretary of this body, be forwarded to each of the Illinois Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Adopted by the Senate February 9, 1883.

WILLIAM J. CAMPBELL,
President of the Senate.
L. F. WATSON, Secretary.

I, Henry D. Dement, secretary of state of the State of Illinois, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a preamble and joint resolution adopted by the thirty-third General Assembly of the State of Illinois, and filed in this office February 22, A. D. 1883.

In witness whereof I hereunto set my hand and affix the great seal of State. Done at Springfield this 22d day of February, in the year of our Lord 1883.

[SEAL.] HENRY D. DEMENT,
Secretary of State.

Mr. LOGAN presented a petition of the Capitol police force, praying for an allowance of one month's extra pay; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JACKSON presented a memorial of the Nashville Merchants' Exchange, praying an appropriation for the continuance of the cotton-belt weather reports; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SOLDIERS' HOME AT WASHINGTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1821) prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 333) validating certain contracts executed by the Postmaster-General was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; and the joint resolution (H. Res. 359) to print 5,000 copies of the report of the board on behalf of the United States Executive Departments at the international exhibition of 1876, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. FAIR, and Mr. GORMAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL, and Mr. JONES of Florida, submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator to let us have a short executive session.

Mr. HOAR. I will substitute that motion, but I thought it was too late for that. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

Mr. RANSOM. I move that the Senate adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. ANTHONY called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Barrow,	Groome,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Beck,	Hale,	Maxey,	Tabor,
Brown,	Hampton,	Miller of N. Y.,	Vest,
Call,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Voorhees,

Cockrell,	Ingalls,	McPherson,	Windom.
Davis of Ill.,	Jackson,	Mahone,
Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,	Miller of Cal.,
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Mitchell,

So the motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned to meet on Tuesday at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 26, 1883.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. 7482) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KETCHAM, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the bill (H. R. 7181) making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, with the Senate amendments thereto, and moved that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in, and that a conference with the Senate be requested.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. KETCHAM of New York, Mr. HISCOCK of New York, and Mr. FORNEY of Alabama.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the report from the Committee on Claims by the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I think the only way to proceed in order is to have the regular order.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7482) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, returned from the Senate with amendments, and that the bill, with the Senate amendments numbered, be printed. I am also instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move to nonconcur in all the amendments of the Senate and to ask a conference.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. CANNON of Illinois, Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania, and Mr. ATKINS of Tennessee.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CASWELL. I rise to a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will submit it.

Mr. CASWELL. I submit a report from the committee of conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The report was as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7049) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, and 6, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "July" in said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the word "October;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And report to Congress in December next, with the data upon which it is based, a more complete system of gauging the rates of pay for carrying the mails on railroad routes, if practicable, in order to secure the better protection of the interests of the Government and the adjustment of the rates of compensation for the service required, and he is authorized to expend not to exceed $10,000 out of the appropriation for the transportation of mails for actual and necessary expenses involved, including such extra compensation as he may deem just and reasonable to officers of the Department for specific services rendered, which sum shall be immediately available."

And the Senate agree to the same.

L. B. CASWELL,
J. G. CANNON,
E. JNO. ELLIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
W. B. ALLISON,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The accompanying statement was read, as follows:

The managers of the conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Post-Office appropriation bill submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the report, which is herewith submitted, if adopted:

On amendment numbered 2: Strikes out the following:

"Provided, That for the better accomplishment of the objects of the acts authorizing the construction of the railroads hereinafter referred to, and the better to secure to the Government the use and benefit of the same, the acts authorizing the building and construction of those railroads which have received, in addition to land grants, Government aid by the loan or guarantee of bonds by the United States, and all other acts, parts of acts, and provisions having relation thereto are hereby so altered, amended, and modified that hereafter the compensation paid or allowed for the carrying and transportation of the United States mails by such railroad companies, or their assigns or successors, shall be fixed by the Postmaster-General, at a rate not exceeding that fixed by him or allowed by law to other railway companies of the same class to which the United States have furnished aid by grant of land, right of way, or otherwise."

On amendments numbered 3 and 4: Appropriates $185,000 for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines and $600,000 for transportation by steamboat routes.

On amendments numbered 5 and 6: Provides that the reduction of rate of postage shall go into effect on and after October 1, 1883.

On amendment numbered 11: Makes section 3 of the act read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to make a thorough investigation into the railway mail service of the United States and report to Congress in December next, with the data upon which it is based, a more complete system of gauging the rates of pay for carrying the mails on railroad routes, if practicable, in order to secure the better protection of the interests of the Government, and the adjustment of rates of compensation for the service required; and he is authorized to expend not to exceed $10,000, out of the appropriation for the transportation of mails, for actual and necessary expenses involved, including such extra compensation as he may deem just and reasonable to officers of the Department for specific services rendered; which sum shall be immediately available."

The total amount appropriated by the act, as agreed upon in conference, is $44,489,520, or $25,000 less than as it passed the Senate, and $260,000 more than as it was agreed to in the House; $154,380 less than the law for the current year, and $2,251,591.25 less than the estimates for 1884.

L. B. CASWELL,
J. G. CANNON,
E. JOHN ELLIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CASWELL. I move that the report be adopted.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to make an inquiry.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] a question. It is as to what this report of the committee of conference does with the special-facility fund of $185,000, which the House refused to put in the bill and which the Senate put in?

Mr. CASWELL. It has been agreed to by the conference and is left in the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I hope the report will not be agreed to.

Mr. CASWELL. I now move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is that in the midst of this confusion it is impossible to understand what is pending before the House upon which the previous qestion is called. I ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. It has just been read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to have again stated as to what amendments of the Senate concurrence is recommended and what amendments non-concurrence.

Mr. CASWELL. If we can have order, if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] desires, I will make a brief statement in explanation.

Mr. HOLMAN. We are anxious to know what is the motion.

Mr. CASWELL. The motion is that the report of the committee of conference be adopted. The only point of difference I apprehend about which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] cares to hear anything is the one in relation to special mail facilities on railroads. The committee of conference have agreed to allow the Senate amendment appropriating $185,000 for that purpose to remain in the bill.

We have also agreed that the reduction of postage on letters shall take effect on the 1st of October instead of the 1st of January as originally in the House bill. We have agreed to omit the amendment which was offered in the House to attach to the bill a provision fixing the rate of compensation to land-grant railroads for carrying the mails; that provision is eliminated from the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. You report to concur with the Senate in striking out that railroad feature?

Mr. CASWELL. We concur in the Senate proposition to strike that out.

Mr. HOLMAN. And also in the action of the Senate adding $185,000 for special facilities?

Mr. CASWELL. That is so.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then you concur in the two important Senate amendments.

Mr. ROBESON. I could not hear exactly what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] said, and I may repeat his question. I want to ask whether the conferees concur in the proposition of the Senate to strike out the provision of the House that the charters of those companies which receive bonds as well as land subsidies shall be so amended as to enable the Postmaster-General to reduce the rates of transportation for mails?

I understand that this provision was voted in in this House after a long and severe controversy by an overwhelming vote. I understand that the Senate has stricken it out. Now, I ask whether this conference committee agrees to the striking out.

Mr. CASWELL. I will say in reply to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] that the Senate in their amendments struck out that clause. They claim that this point as to what would be a reasonable compensation to these railroad companies for carrying the mails is now involved in a question pending before the Court of Claims, and that it would be unwise action on the part of Congress to wrest that subject from the court when it is perhaps fairly and fully presented. It is claimed that under these circumstances any attempt of Congress to settle the question would but add confusion to the embarrassed situation. The Senate was persistent in striking out this clause. We once reported back to the House our disagreement upon this subject, the House conferees having insisted upon the House provision with a view to carry out the wish of the House if possible. But when we found further resistance useless we yielded to the Senate proposition.

Mr. ROBESON. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the ground upon which the Senate stands is that this question is already in controversy in the courts?

Mr. CASWELL. That is one of the reasons given for striking the provision out.

Mr. ROBESON. Now, I will ask whether it is not in controversy in this way—whether the Court of Claims, when the question came before it, did not find that there was sufficient legislation to authorize Congress to reduce the rates, whether an appeal was not taken by the railroad companies from the decision of the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court, and whether the Supreme Court did not hold that this question could not be decided by the Court of Claims for one reason only, that Congress had not sufficiently legislated upon the point; and is not the provision in this bill a response to that decision by sufficiently legislating upon the point?

Mr. DUNN. In other words, this act does what the court says former acts omitted to do.

Mr. ROBESON. And what the court says is necessary to be done.

Mr. CASWELL. I will concede that the courts do decide Congress has not attempted by any act up to this time to change the charter.

Mr. ROBESON. I will ask the gentleman whether the court did not hold in effect that this question could not be decided by the courts until Congress should adopt further legislation; so that if we do not legislate the question will never be decided and these companies will never be limited to what is a fair and reasonable compensation under the circumstances.

Mr. CASWELL. I do not think the courts so held. That is a matter for us to determine. It is very true that nobody has yet claimed but that these companies ought to have what is reasonable and fair compensation for carrying the mails as provided in their original charter; and while the question is pending in the courts to determine what is reasonable and fair compensation, it seemed to be unwise that it should be taken from the courts.

I wish to say further that this amendment which was added to the bill in the House is so indefinite that it would be impossible for the Postmaster-General to execute it. For instance——

Mr. DUNN. How does he execute——

Mr. CASWELL. I insist that the gentleman shall let me complete my sentence. For instance, the amendment provides that the compensation shall be the same as that allowed to companies which have received aid from the Government by grant of lands or by right of way through the public domain. Now, the fact is that those companies which received aid by land grants receive 80 per cent. of the amount allowed to other roads, while those that received simply aid by right of way receive the full amount allowed to other roads. Now, I ask which will be the rule to govern in this case—the amount allowed to land-grant roads or the amount allowed to those roads which have received right of way? There is 20 per cent. difference in the allowance.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman will allow me to ask him this question: If there is any ambiguity in the language of the House provision would it not be a very easy thing for the committee of conference, inasmuch as the subject was before them, to make the necessary amendment?

Mr. CASWELL. In view of the legislation upon this subject and the great confusion existing with regard to what is the correct rule and what is the law itself, I do not think it would be a very easy thing.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CASWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wish to ask the gentleman this question, whether practically these companies are not now claiming the right to charge for the transportation of mail matter as if it were express matter; whether this amendment introduced by the gentleman from New Jersey was not for the purpose of regulating that charge bringing these companies down to ordinary and fair rates; and whether the United States Senate, in its refusal to accede to this amendment and its determination to defeat the Post-Office bill unless the House will recede, is not putting itself before the country in this position, that the people are to have no rights, so far as the Government is concerned, in the ordinary charges of ordinary rates, but these companies must be permitted to charge at express rates or the Senate will defeat the bill? It seems to me that if this committee of conference would stand firm the Senate would have to back down.

Mr. CASWELL. I regard the gentleman's "question" as a speech instead of a question, and it hardly demands reply.

Mr. DUNN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question.

Mr. CASWELL. Very well.

Mr. DUNN. How was it that the committee could find out so easily how to fix the matter for the railroad companies and could not find out how to benefit the Government?

Mr. CASWELL. I do not think that is a fair question.

Mr. CANNON. I hope before the gentleman surrenders the floor he will yield me ten minutes.

Mr. CASWELL. I will move the previous question, and will then yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROBESON. I object. Unless we understand this thing and have a chance to discuss it I hope we will vote it down.

Mr. RYAN. Let us vote down the conference report.

Mr. REAGAN. Allow me a word before the gentleman from Wisconsin calls for the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. I want a moment or two.

Mr. ROBESON. We do not want the time for discussion given to one side and none to the other.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 74.

Mr. REAGAN. I demand tellers on ordering the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. One word. I ask for unanimous consent to make a suggestion.

Mr. ROBESON. I wish to know whether the House is to yield everything to the Senate and we are not to have time to discuss it.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. I believe if the members of the conference committee could have ten or fifteen minutes the House would be satisfied to order the previous question.

Mr. DUNN. Do you propose to give this side of the House ten or fifteen minutes?

Mr. CASWELL. Yes; half an hour.

Mr. DUNN. You have refused us any so far.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think there is any necessity for this contest. I appeal to the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with it.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to appeal to my friend from Wisconsin. [Cries or "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Mr. CASWELL. If I may be permitted, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. That is what I wished to appeal to my colleague to do.

Mr. CASWELL. If I may be permitted to withdraw the demand for the previous question I will yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, a member of the conference committee.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the demand for the previous question will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. CASWELL. I yield now for ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I will take the floor in my own right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do so, as the gentleman from Wisconsin holds the floor and now yields for ten minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, as a member of this conference committee I ask the attention of the House for a very few minutes while I refer to the points involved in the present discussion.

Touching the matter of special facilities the conference committee found the Senate firm. We yielded that point for the reason, it will be observed, there is legislation on the bill authorizing and requiring the Postmaster-General to submit to the next session of Congress a different scheme for the compensation of railways. It was believed this would be the last year this appropriation would have to be made; and as the Senate was firm to the extent of $185,000 service, the House conferees yielded.

Now, touching the principal matter in conference, and in reference to which the House conferees were compelled to yield to the Senate. After discussion the House put a clause on the bill providing land-grant and subsidy railroads should only receive 50 per cent. of what other land-grant railroads were paid for the transportation of the mails. There is no time now to go fully into the merits of the question, and the House, I apprehend, would not have the patience if I sought to do so.

We found the Senate conferees firm and decided. One disagreement had already been reported to the House, and we further ascertained the Senate conferees would not in any event yield on this point. Now, when general legislation is sought to be placed upon an appropriation bill changing existing law the body which seeks to legislate has under the ordinary rule and practice to yield in whole or in part rather than the bill shall fail. That, Mr. Speaker, is the ordinary practice. As other gentlemen on this conference committee I acted in good faith to secure the adoption of the views of the House without regard to any opinion I might have as to the propriety of this legislation or its necessity.

If I can have the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] as well as of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], I will say, after investigation of the recommendation of the House, and on the merits and independent of anything else, in my judgment it is wise to strike out this proposed legislation.

I beg the attention of gentlemen for a moment to say that the method of compensation to these railroads is settled under their charters to be a fair and reasonable compensation, and not more than that paid by private individuals for a similar service. Now, it is alleged, however, that Congress has a power to change that act and modify this compensation. It has been stated by the gentleman from New Jersey that the courts have so decided. For my part I do not so understand that decision. I hold the decision of the Supreme Court reversing the Court of Claims in my hand, and in that I find the following language:

To what extent and upon what considerations Congress has the power to make such change under the reservations in the act in a case where it manifests an intention to do so, is a question which does not arise in this suit and has not been considered.

But grant, if you please, that Congress has the power to change this mode of compensation, I say that in my opinion it is not politic to make the change, and for the following reasons: I hold in my hand the report of the Commissioner of Railways, in which he estimates that under the operation of the Thurman act, setting aside 25 per cent. of the net earnings of these companies, that when the bonds mature they will owe to the Government, after the sinking fund has been applied, the Union Pacific Railroad $70,000,000 and the Southern Pacific Railway $25,000,000; in other words, that if we have the whole of this transportation paid at the present rates or at any rate we may fix by litigation, and add to it the 5 per cent. of the net earnings sufficient to make 25 per cent. of the total net earnings, that when the bonds mature and the sinking fund is applied these roads will still owe the Government $70,000,000 in the one case and $25,000,000 in the other as I have just stated. Now, when Congress comes in and proposes to cut the allowances for transportation it will not affect the amount of the indebtedness when these bonds mature, because——

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me ask the gentleman a question right there.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not my friend assuming that Congress will not modify or amend the sinking-fund act?

Mr. CANNON. I was just coming to that; the gentleman has anticipated by his question what I was just on the point of stating, that from my examination of this question and from all the decisions I doubt very much whether the proposed legislation in the House bill would be sustained by the courts, to begin with.

Now, then——

Mr. HOLMAN. But does not my friend know that the Supreme Court has almost expressly so decided in the sinking-fund case?

Mr. CANNON. Why, by no manner of means.

Mr. HOLMAN. They have unquestionably so decided.

Mr. CANNON. But if you please, continuing the point that I was about making, if you grant that Congress has the power to make this change, I say when you do make the change, when you have this legislation ingrafted as you have now upon the House bill, and compel the roads to conform to it, you gain nothing but a barren victory, a harvest without wheat, for if you pay them all they claim for transportation—which goes into the sinking fund—the roads will still after maturity of the bonds owe the Government $100,000,000. Now, the Supreme Court has sustained the Thurman act, namely, that we take 25 per cent. of the net earnings of these companies and apply it to the sinking fund. Now, what we should do is to so amend the Thurman act as to take 50 per cent. of the net earnings of these roads or a sufficient amount and carry it to the sinking fund, so that when their indebtedness to the United States matures the sinking fund will be large enough to pay every dollar of that indebtedness.

Mr. HOLMAN. But let me ask the gentleman would it not be a perfectly fair proposition to so amend the sinking-fund or Thurman act as to provide for the retirement of these bonds by saying that all of the net earnings of the roads—and I ask him if it would not be an act of justice and fairness to the companies themselves to say that every dollar of the net earnings should go into the sinkind fund except such amount as would realize fair dividends upon the stocks of the companies?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will allow me time to answer this question.

Mr. CASWELL. Very well.

Mr. CANNON. When that case comes up, the case which the gentleman now submits, I will state to him that I am in favor of so extending the Thurman act as to take a sufficient amount of their net earnings and apply it to the sinking fund, so that at the maturity of the bonds there will be a fund adequate to meet them. The courts have decided that such an act is proper, and there can be no question about the power of Congress in the premises. That legislation would be efficacious when it is written upon the statute-books, and you would have a substantial harvest, something that you will never get by the legislation which is now proposed upon the House bill.

Mr. ROBESON. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him a question before he sits down?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBESON. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that we ought to amend the sinking-fund act so as to put more money under it into the Treasury. Now, I ask the gentleman from Illinois and I ask this conference committee why, when they met these technical objections on the part of the conference committee of the Senate suggesting that this would be a barren victory, they did not agree to the Senate proposition with an amendment changing the sinking-fund act and putting that on? Then we would have had real legislation instead of the promise of it in the future. Now we are asked to give up the thing itself for the faint hope of getting some addition to the sinking-fund act in some future legislation through some other Congress. If that is the right thing to do, do it now and here and we will support you in it.

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the gentleman from New Jersey, I have to say that this is a Post-Office appropriation bill and this is a House amendment we had to deal with. The House conferees did present the request, and suggested the propriety of amending the Thurman act; and the reply was made that that would open up a question that could not be exhausted, and it was doubtful whether we had the power to exhaust it legitimately upon this bill.

In further reply to the gentleman from New Jersey as to why the House conferees did not seek so to amend this bill as he suggests, I will ask him why, when he moved this proposition in the House, he did not move an amendment to the Thurman act to increase the amount up to 50 per cent. so as to give the House conferees jurisdiction of a substantial amendment that would be efficacious when it was adopted?

Mr. HOLMAN. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois I will say it was simply because it was not in order under that bill and that provision of the bill. Such an amendment was prepared, and I am confident would have been offered if it had been in order.

Mr. CANNON. Then, if it was not in order for the House to submit a matter of conference to its agents, the conferees, was it in order for the conferees to exceed the power of the principal? [Mr. CASWELL rose.] Just one word before I close. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to allow me another minute. I am as ready by proper and efficacious legislation as any man in this House or country to take these net earnings and set them aside sufficient to pay the indebtedness to the Government. I stand not here as the apologist or advocate of these roads, but I stand to defend them or anybody else, corporate or individual, in the United States in all their rights they are entitled to under the Constitution; and then I stand ready to ask when the time comes, by proper legislation, that the law be amended so that this much-desired object can be accomplished of taking from these roads enough money to pay the debt of the Government by the increase of the sinking fund.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for a question?

Mr. CANNON. If I have any more time I will hear the gentleman's question.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that certain clerical errors existed in the engrossed copy of the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and requested the return to the Senate of said bill for the purpose of correcting said errors.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the message just received from the Senate, which the Clerk will read. This is a privileged matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 26, 1882.

Ordered, That the House of Representatives be informed that certain clerical errors existed in the engrossed copy of the amendments adopted by the Senate to House bill No. 5538, to reduce internal-revenue taxation; and that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the said bill, for the purpose of correcting said errors.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBESON. That is a privileged matter undoubtedly——

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ROBESON. But I desire to know if we are not discussing a privileged matter, the report of the conference committee?

The SPEAKER. That is a privileged matter. The matter under discussion is also a privileged matter.

Mr. ROBESON. I object to considering that until we get through with what the House is now engaged in discussing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that it has been the uniform rule, so far as the Chair is aware, in the whole history of the Congress of the United States for one House to immediately comply with a request of this kind on the part of the other.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is right.

Mr. ROBESON. There will be no objection to it at the proper time——

Mr. ALDRICH. The proper time is now.

Mr. ROBESON. And after the pending matter is disposed of I shall make no objection.

The SPEAKER. This is the proper time.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; that is right.

Mr. HASKELL rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. HASKELL. I rise with reference to the communication received from the Senate, and I make the motion that the request of the Senate be agreed to by the House, and that the bill be returned. There is but one motion to be made, and I make it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question. Is there objection to granting the request of the Senate for the return of the bill indicated?

Mr. COX, of New York. I should like to have it stated what the clerical errors are that the Senate desires to correct.

The SPEAKER. That is not material to the present question. If there be no objection, the bill will be taken from the Speaker's table and returned to the Senate in accordance with the request of that body.

There was no objection.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CASWELL. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. REAGAN. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] that he may ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. KING. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] if the effect of the amendment as to special mail facilities is not to grant to certain railroads from the city of New York privileges in regard to the carrying of fast mails from which other railroads and communities of the country are cut off?

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the gentleman I will say that how it will be expended hereafter I do not know; the gentleman knows how it is expended now. It is proposed to give the same amount for the next year as is being expended for the current year.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman tell us how it is expended now?

Mr. CANNON. It is expended on the route from Boston to New York, from New York to Buffalo and on to Chicago, from New York to Washington, and from Washington down through Virginia, North and South Carolina, and into Florida.

Mr. KING. Is that all?

Mr. CANNON. Substantially all; there may perhaps be one or two minor expenditures.

Mr. KING. Does it reach to New Orleans and to Texas or to Saint Louis?

Mr. DUNN. No.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Nor to Atlanta.

Mr. KING. Nor to San Francisco.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no speech to make and will occupy but little of the time of the House. I will not undertake to discuss that portion of the bill which refers to railroads; I will leave that to gentlemen who are more familiar with that branch of our legislation.

I feel, however, that there ought to be something done, if it can be done, to protect the people against the wrongs intended to be guarded against, and to secure the Government the rights intended to be secured to it by the action of the House heretofore. In regard to the $180,000 for fast mails, I take it that all the members of the House, if they have received the communications which a portion of the members have received, have learned from the portions of country interested in this matter that this proposed appropriation is an unnecessary gift to certain railroads; that their schedules of time already meet the very purpose which it is intended shall be accomplished by this $180,000.

Up to 1872 or 1873 the maximum pay of railroads for mail services was $300 per mile, with 25 per cent. added where night service was required. By an act passed perhaps in 1873, providing a different mode of ascertaining the amount which should be given to railroads—by that act and subsequent legislation the pay of these railroads has been increased to $800, $900, $1,000, and even $1,200 per mile, an increase to nearly four times what was before considered adequate compensation for the service.

The demands of these corporations go on, and here is a proposition to take $180,000 more from the Treasury and add it to their pay, when their ordinary schedules now provide for a service which would accommodate the country just as well, except as regards the matter of sending morning papers a short distance out from New York city; that is all. It is an unnecessary gift of the public money to these railroads. If we mean to represent the people and to protect their interest we ought to guard against such partial and unjust legislation as this.

The House expressed its judgment upon this subject. The conferees tell us that the Senate insisted upon their proposition and they had to yield. Perhaps the conferees felt that they were justified in yielding to the Senate. But this House should not yield both the important amendments which have been made by the Senate to this bill. It ought at least to insist upon a compromise, and not yield everything that the cormorants ask and save nothing to the people.

I hope that the House will refuse to concur in the report of the committee of conference and send it back, so that the will of the House, of the direct representatives of the people, can to some extent be represented in this legislation.

Mr. CASWELL. I now move the previous question.

Mr. ROBESON. One moment. I desire to be recognized before that motion is put.

Mr. CASWELL. Go ahead, then.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] yield?

Mr. ROBESON. I do not ask the gentleman to yield; I ask to be recognized.

The SPEAKER. The recognition would do no good.

Mr. ROBESON. Why not?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has time yielded to him he must take it now.

Mr. CASWELL. I must demand the previous question, unless the gentleman will now proceed.

Mr. CANNON. Will there not be an hour for debate after the question has been ordered?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] has twenty minutes remaining.

Mr. CASWELL. I must demand the previous question, unless the gentleman from New Jersey is prepared to proceed in a part of my time.

Mr. ROBESON. As the previous question has not yet been ordered, may I not be recognized?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] controls the hour.

Mr. ROBESON. When he moves the previous question he yields the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question to the House, and will say that if the previous question is ordered there will be no further debate.

Mr ROBESON. Let me ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] a question. Do I understand that he proposes that we shall confine ourselves to such time as he may choose to yield us of the remaining twenty minutes, or to move the previous question and shut us off entirely?

Mr. CASWELL. My intention is at the close of the hour to demand the previous question. I am entirely willing to yield half of my remaining time to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON], or more if he asks it, but I can not yield the floor.

Mr. ROBESON. There are other gentlemen who desire to speak on the same side as I do; I do not think it fair to claim all the time myself. If this House desires to close out all debate on this question and to yield both demands of the Senate without debate, then let gentlemen take the responsibility.

Mr. CASWELL. I do not think it right that I should be required to yield the floor before demanding the previous question.

Mr. DUNN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What does the previous question include?

The SPEAKER. The conference report.

Mr. DUNN. As an entirety?

The SPEAKER. As an entirety.

Mr. DUNN. Is that divisible on the final vote?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. DUNN. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin, then, to allow us to vote separately on these two propositions, the provision giving $185,000 for special facilities and the provision regulating rates for transportation of the mails by railroads.

Mr. CASWELL. I do not understand that a division of the question would be possible.

Mr. DUNN. The House does not want to yield everything to the railroad companies.

Mr. ROBESON. I suggest to gentlemen on the other side that it is not fair for them to come here and, after consuming forty minutes of the hour, say that we may have half of the remaining twenty minutes, and then ask the House on this question of giving up its rights to order the previous question.

Mr. CASWELL. I have yielded almost all my time to gentlemen on the other side.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that forty minutes be allowed to the other side.

Mr. ROBESON. Thirty minutes will be enough.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks unanimous consent that thirty minutes be allowed for discussion in opposition to the conference report. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] to control the thirty minutes, and then the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] will be again recognized.

Mr. ROBESON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not think I shall occupy five minutes. This is simply a case where the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the other Pacific companies are claiming the right to charge for transportation of mail matter at the rates which they charge for express matter, those rates being fixed by themselves, and where the House, after long discussion, declared by a strong vote that Congress has the right to say what is a reasonable rate of compensation. Now, the Senate is simply taking the position that it will defeat this Post-Office appropriation bill rather than let a little bit of God Almighty's justice flash down upon these railroad companies. That is the whole question; that is the exact issue—whether this House, at the beck of the Senate, shall say: "We will recede from our action in order that at some future time when, in the mysterious providence of God, there may happen to be a chance to amend the Thurman act as against the combined railroad power of the United States in Congress, we may take care of this question."

I hope most devoutly that the House will reject the report of this committee of conference and will tell these conferees to go back and say to the Senate conferees, "Gentlemen, we will take what we can get now, and you must either back down or else you shall not have the Post-Office appropriation bill." That is the right position for the House in this matter. All this talk about something in the future, about constitutional law, about what the Supreme Court might or might not decide, about not gathering our harvest, and all that sort of—I will not say what—does not affect this question at all. The question is whether we shall keep these companies from fixing their own rates on the scale of express-matter rates for carrying the United States mails, and whether this House will permit the Senate to compel us to back down from our defense of the rights of the Government and the rights of the people?

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes, sir, although the gentleman would not allow me one.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman whether he has read the opinion of the Supreme Court touching this very point of the rate of compensation of these railroads.

Mr. ANDERSON. Why, Mr. Speaker, what has that to do with the question? The point here is not what the Supreme Court has decided. I do not care a straw whether it has decided or not; everybody knows that Congress has the right to say what is a reasonable rate of compensation for these companies; that is a legislative, not a judicial question. Everybody knows perfectly well that the condition in the charter which the gentleman alleges to be a condition for the benefit of the companies is not so at all, but is a condition for the advantage of the Government. The gentleman whirls the question right around when he says that the condition is something defending the rights of the companies; it is a defense of the rights of the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROBESON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, after the very careful consideration in this House not only as to the power but as to the policy of paying to railroad companies which have received subsidies in bonds or lands only 80 per cent. of the amount paid to other railroad corporations, it does seem to me that, without some very cogent reason being presented, the House, having acted so deliberately, should not recede from the position it has taken.

The ground assumed by my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is entirely untenable. It is clear my friend labors under a misapprehension. The Supreme Court simply decided that, in the absence of all legislation directly affecting the Union Pacific corporation, they were entitled to receive under the terms of the original grant of 1862-'64 nothing less and nothing more. They did not, but expressly avoided, and it is so declared, enter into the question of the power of Congress to amend the charters of those companies by adding to, altering, or amending the acts of incorporation. That was expressly avoided.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will not overlook another fact, and that is the everlasting and persistent opposition to every measure seeking to impose reasonable restraints and limitations on those powerful corporations. It seems almost impossible to legislate in such manner as will secure to the Government that measure of justice which the people of this country, in my judgment, have a right to demand. We seem to have reached a point where the people of this country have no rights whatever, even in the exercise of legislative power, which this corporation created by us are bound to respect. I think the House proposition is a reasonable one, and it can not be met by the statement that the real remedy is by amendment of the sinking-fund law. It can not be met that way. To some extent the country under this provision now under consideration derives some incidental benefit from the millions of acres of land and millions of bonds invested by the Government in the construction of these great roads. Something is accomplished by it, but the opportunity to amend the sinking-fund law will not occur during this Congress. Every effort to bring that measure forward as yet has failed during the present Congress. It will undoubtedly receive attention hereafter, and Congress will be unmindful of its duty if it does not provide to the full extent suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the net earnings of these roads shall be applied to the creation of a sinking fund sufficient to meet the enormous debt which is to come either on the corporations or the Government, and that, too, in a short period of time.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the House will not concur in this report as to both these questions; first, as to the right of the Government to have its mails transported over these land-grant and bond-subsidy railroads at a less rate than is paid to such corporations as obtained no such grants or subsidies; and secondly, in reference to the appropriation of $185,000, not simply as a "slush" fund, but for the benefit of a single locality, or rather the newspapers of a single locality, a measure which has been denounced and condemned by the press, outside of a single commercial center, all over the country ever since the Senate placed it on the bill. I think, sir, on both grounds this Congress should not concur in the conference report, but should ask another committee of conference to see whether or not some approach to justice can not be secured.

If there is ambiguity in the House provision touching these land-grant and bond-subsidy roads it is before the committee of conference and is easy of amendment. If it is true that provision applies as well to roads simply having the right of way as to those to which grants of land and bonds have been made, the whole subject is before the conference committee by the action of the two Houses and it can readily be amended and made clear.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROBESON. I will yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. DUNN. Is the gentleman from New Jersey satisfied he will have time enough left for himself?

Mr. ROBESON. I have fifteen minutes and that is as long as anybody ought to talk on this subject.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to discuss this matter at length. It has been elaborately discussed heretofore in the House. But I do desire to express my surprise at the fact that matters which are plain and clear to the courts, matters which were clear and distinct enough to secure the favorable action of this House, in conference become suddenly shrouded in mystery, doubt, and uncertainty. The acts which were passed by a former Congress regulating the compensation that land-grant railroads should receive for transporting the United States mails were clear and distinct, and the courts understood them. This act places the Pacific land-grant and subsidy roads on exactly the same footing that the former acts placed the land-grant roads on.

Is there any uncertainty or ambiguity in that? That law is well understood and is being faithfully executed. This House distinctly stated that the Pacific roads should be allowed the same compensation for transporting mails that the land-grant roads received under those laws and under that adjudication. The Supreme Court in deciding on the right of the Pacific roads to larger compensation stated that they were not subject to the provisions of that act because it did not appear that Congress had expressed any legislative intention to change or amend the charter acts creating those corporations, which was necessary to be done in order to subject them to the law. There is a legislative intention expressed here as to those particular roads. Now this conference committee seems to clearly see their way to help the roads, but becomes suddenly shrouded in doubts, clouds, and uncertainty, as to how to help the Government and the people as against the roads.

I repeat the way to serve the railroads—and I do not mean any reflection upon any individual—but the way to serve the interests of the railroad companies seems plain, clear, and free from all doubt; but when it comes to serving the cause of this Government and the people a sudden mist of doubt and uncertainty rises, and gentlemen are lost and can not find the way to a solution of the question.

I sincerely hope that the head-light of the locomotive will not always continue to be "a lamp to the feet and a light to the path" of conference committees of this House, or the light to guide their action. I trust the time will soon come when the people of this country can have a Congress and committees who can find out how to serve the Government and the people. I do not mean, of course, any reflection upon any member of the committee. But it is strange, Mr. Speaker, that committees can get so suddenly lost in mystery and uncertainty, and can not find their way to serve the people, but do always find out just how to do the most good for the railroad corporations. Now, as to this $185,000 for special-facility service. How can this committee justify that sum? If there was in this bill eight or nine hundred thousand or a million of dollars for special mail facilities, that would serve all of the interests of all parts of this country over all of the great trunk lines of railways, there would be a possible reason for it. If special-facility appropriations can be justified at all there might be some reason if it was provided in sufficient amount and equally for all parts of the country. But a special facility which serves only two or three lines of railway to the exclusion of all the others can not be justified on any ground that I can imagine. No reason can be given for it except—well, I will not say what I was about to say. But no justification, certainly none consistent with public interests, can be given for any such action.

It is taking from the Treasury a large sum of money to serve certain private interests. A newspaper in New York says that it is to benefit a "newspaper syndicate," and that it is this syndicate that demands this $185,000. Here is an article from the Albany Argus which I will ask the Clerk to read, and so much as he can not read in the time allotted to me I will ask to have printed as a part of my remarks. That paper calls attention to the matter and shows that it is this newspaper syndicate which demands special facilities for the distribution of certain great newspapers of the country. I ask the Clerk to read the article.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE FAST-MAIL FRAUD IN ANOTHER LIGHT.

In 1875 what is known as the fast-mail fraud began. The beginning, however, showed a bad start. Congress had appropriated $150,000 to enable the Postmaster-General to make contracts with the Central-Hudson and Pennsylvania Railroad Companies for fast trains, to be composed, in part at least, of mail cars exclusively. The fast-mail train was to leave New York city at 4.15 a. m. It was discontinued after a little while, because Congress reduced the appropriation 10 per cent.

The New York morning newspapers then made themselves virtually into a syndicate and demanded that Congress should renew and increase the appropriation and that the Post-Office Department should make contracts with the railroads which could "boom" their circulation at the expense of the Federal Treasury by fast trains. No contracts were to be made, or were made, or ever have been made with any other railroads. The project was strictly limited to giving the New York morning papers a monopoly at the expense of the taxpayers of the United States. Accordingly the Hudson-Central, running to Albany; the Pennsylvania Central, running through New Jersey to Philadelphia, and the New York, New Haven and Hartford road, running through New England, were the only roads with which contracts were meant to be made or ever have been made. The Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Saint Louis, and New Orleans papers, and other papers of other great cities were not to have and never have had such a monopoly. It was to be and is the monopoly of the New York morning papers exclusively.

In its thrifty and special effort the newspaper syndicate of New York was successful. The fast-mail fraud was resumed. The appropriation was, in fact, increased from $150,000 to $450,000, in course of time, but the increase threatened to defeat the monopoly purpose for which the syndicate was formed. There was enough money to enable contracts to be made with roads running out of other great cities where other papers were printed. Accordingly, after shrewdly getting Congress to appropriate $600,000 last year—under the pretense of supplying every section with a fast mail and thereby abating opposition to it among members—the Post-Office Department, in the interest of the New York morning newspaper syndicate, made no contracts whatever with any roads except the three which could "boom" the circulation of the syndicate's newspapers. Only $185,000 of the $600,000 was spent, on the advice of a prominent member of the syndicate, "to keep the ring small."

Thus the intention of Congress was defeated. The scheme of the syndicate was effected. The syndicate and the Department have most beautiful reasons, however, to explain why the Western roads would not touch a cent of the $415,000 of the Government, which Congress ordered should be used up in contracts for fast-mail trains out there. The aversion of all railroads, especially of western railroads, to make or take any money of the United States Treasury, is so well known, that the marines at the Washington barracks have shed tears over the difficulty of the Postmaster-General and over his failure to force the Government money on those corporations. Nevertheless, the tax-payers continued to foot the bills for the monopoly which the syndicate of New York morning papers had out of the Treasury, and despite the heroic efforts of the Postmaster-General the papers of every other city "got left."

Convinced of the obduracy of those western railroads, the Post-Office Department, this year, ask only for the $185,000. It does not intend to expose itself to insult from those western roads any longer. It will deal only with the three roads which, by mere accident, can "boom" the circulation of the syndicate papers alone, and it will contract to pay them, by a like accident, only for the distance to which the papers of the syndicate can be profitably carried in the early morning. It is one of the most touching and encouraging signs of the exalted nobility of human nature that a reformer has ever witnessed to note that the syndicate newspapers are unanimously in favor of this unselfish course. Their unskilled talent warmly supports it in their ethical columns. Their skilled talent ably uses the customary arguments of its kind down in Washington for the same pure purpose.

The practice which they are now pressing the House to continue, by agreeing with the action of the Senate, is this: The transmission of three fast-mail-fraud trains from New York, each morning, as follows: For Albany at 4.35 a. m.; for New Haven, &c., at 5 a. m.; for Philadelphia, &c., at 4.30 a. m.

These trains are loaded up with the New York morning papers. The bundle for each station between the points of destination and New York is thrown off en route. A rate of nearly fifty miles an hour is kept up, until the distance traversed is such as reaches the limit of profit in the circulation "boom" of the syndicate's papers. Then these trains hitch on to slow locals and become humdrum way affairs. Now, to show the minimum of letter parcels and the maximum of the syndicate's paper parcels carried by this swindle train, look at the statistics from December 1 to December 6, inclusive, as confessed by the New York Herald itself and by "Superintendent" Jackson, to whom this job gives title and vocation:

	Sacks of syndicate's papers.	Pouches of letters.
Six days:
To Albany, &c	2,181	199
To Philadelphia, &c	2,467	308
To New Haven, &c	959	58
Average each day:
To Albany, &c	363	33
To Philadelphia, &c	411	51
To New Haven, &c	192	31¼

Total number of pouches for six days	565
Total number of sacks for six days	5,507
Average number of pouches each day	115
Average number of sacks each day	965
Number of pouches per year	41,975
Number of sacks per year	352,225

A pouch may have one or more letters in it. It is locked up, all the same. A sack must be full of papers to be carried—else the number of sacks is reduced by using just the quota which the papers will fill. This will enable Congressmen and tax-payers to see the proportion between the syndicate's New York morning newspapers and that of the public's letters, shown by these figures. Nothing more is needed to present the merits and demerits of the matter to public scrutiny. The fast-mail appropriation is a fraud on the Treasury exclusively for the New York morning papers. In view of the demonstration by facts, which proves it to be such, let Congressmen vote on it with reference to their duty, and with reference to their future account with the press and the taxpayers of the Union.

[Before the reading of the above article was concluded the hammer fell.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. DUNN. I ask permission to print the remainder of the article.

There was no objection.]

Mr. ROBESON. I now ask gentlemen on the other side if they are going to divide their twenty minutes to take some part of it now before I proceed.

Mr. CASWELL. Then I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I think the gentlemen on the other side have the negative; and the committee on conference acting as the servant of this House under all of the ordinary rules of parliamentary procedure, has the right to be enlightened as to the points made by the other side. I certainly desire to hear the eloquent gentleman from New Jersey before I am called upon to reply to his opposition.

Mr. ROBESON. I do not ask gentlemen to take all of their time now; but they have twenty minutes and we have fifteen, and I hope they will take some portion of the time.

Mr. CANNON. I have so much respect for the gentleman from New Jersey that I would like to hear what he has to say, so that I may reply in the light of the wisdom of the argument which he is to submit in opposition to this report.

Mr. ROBESON. Do I understand that gentlemen decline to occupy any part of the time now?

Mr. CASWELL. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from Illinois shall proceed now for a part of the time if he desires it.

Mr. CANNON. "The gentleman from Illinois" absolutely declines to proceed until he has had an opportunity of hearing what is said against this conference report.

Mr. ROBESON. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the gentlemen think they must play this game with all the advantages. But still I desire to present the case fairly to the House; and in presenting it, I shall speak to my associates on my own side of the House, for with them and their principles and the position of their party I and my political views and interests must stand or fall.

The condition of this case is just this, and if I do not state the facts clearly I trust gentlemen will interrupt and correct me. Under the provisions of the law, as they used to stand, the Postmaster-General was authorized under certain regulations in the postal code to fix by weight and distance the price to be paid for carrying the United States mails. If he had authority to do that over railroads which were built by private capital and not affected by public grants he had certainly the legal right to do it when authorized by Congress to exercise similar control over roads which were chartered by the United States and which were affected by public interests. That proposition no man can deny. By an amendment to the postal code known as the "Holman amendment" it was provided some years ago that land-grant railroads should receive only 80 per cent. of what the other railroads who had not received land grants from the Government for this service received. It was supposed when that amendment was adopted that it would apply to all of the land-grant railroads. But it was found when the Postmaster-General attempted to apply it to the Pacific railroads that they claimed by a special provision in their charters that they were exempted from the enforcement of such a provision or condition on the part of the Postmaster-General unless their charter was amended. All of the ordinary roads built by private capital and private subscription submitted to the rate fixed by the Postmaster-General. But the land-grant roads declined. All of the other roads submitted to 80 per cent. of that rate, but the roads which received not only land grants, but also the guaranteed bonds of the General Government, and which now amount to an indebtedness of $103,000,000 in the way of subsidies to these land-grant roads said; "No; we will not accept this; roads that have received no bonds or no grants may submit; but we absolutely decline to accede to these conditions."

Is that true or false? Is that statement of fact right or wrong? When the Postmaster-General attempts to do it they go to the Court of Claims. And the Court of Claims finds against them. They appeal to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court in the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Matthews says that they are right. Why? Because the Legislature has not shown any intention to repeal that clause in their charter which would authorize them to do it; because this question is not judicially before it. He does say that the court will not say what it would do if it were before it. But the decision and the ground of it is that we have not sufficiently legislated to bring that question before the court. I will read upon that point:

The legislation referred to furnishes, therefore, no evidence of any intention on the part of Congress to alter the relation between the appellant and the Government established by the sixth section of the act of 1862; and we are of the opinion that the company is entitled, under its provisions, for the services rendered during the period covered by the present claim to fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the amounts paid by private parties for the same kind of services. To what extent and upon what considerations Congress has the power to make such change, under the reservations in the act, in a case where it manifests an intention to do so, is a question which does not arise in this suit, and has not been considered.

And further on he says:

The Revised Statutes referring to this provision, as we have found, do not apply to, and therefore do not alter, this case.

Now, then, in looking at that charter we find that the Congress which granted it expressly reserved the right to amend and modify it in all its sections. The right of amendment is what? If they reserve the right to amend they reserve the right to do by amendment whatever they could have done in the original bill. Is that a legal proposition which any man will dispute? When Congress or a legislative body reserves the right to amend and modify an act they reserve the right to do by amendment whatever they might have done in the original bill, subject to rights of property acquired under it. But they reserve the right to alter and amend it as a rule of law.

Now, then, in this bill we give legislation which the court says we had not given before. And if we do not give it we must submit—to what? Why, that railroads which the Government has never benefited receive one rate from the Government; that railroads to which the Government has given hundreds of thousands of acres of land take 80 per cent. of that; that railroads to which the Government has given twice as much land and $103,000,000 of money charge express rates on the mails more than any other railroad and stand upon their rights under their charters. And then members of this House, as representing their sentiments, come in and ask us to say we will not give the courts a chance even to try this case in the interest of the people. That is all.

There were two provisions in this bill. One was for special facilities, or rather the Senate have put that in. My friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says that the body originating legislation if it is not agreed to by the other body must yield. Why does not the Senate yield on that provision?

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman want a reply now?

Mr. ROBESON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. For the reason——

Mr. ROBESON. But not in my time. Why do they not yield? Why do you not say, "You should yield that; this is affirmative legislation which we do not agree to."

Mr. CANNON. I will yield the gentleman out of my time a quarter of a minute that I may answer his question now. The provision for special mail facilities is in the law for the current year, and is in harmony with existing legislation.

Mr. ROBESON. Yes; but it is not in the law for the next year, and it is not in the law which this House passed. And if the Senate passed it, it puts it in as affirmative legislation.

Here, Mr. Speaker, are two places where the House planted itself on the rights of the people as against the railroad company. In both of them, and on directly opposite principles, the railroad companies resisted; and the conference committee, permit me to say, yielded both of them on directly opposite principles.

I have only to say that the people of this country are loyal. They believe in the execution and not in the perversion of law. They believe the laws should be made for the benefit of all the people of the country. They do not believe they shall be made safeguards and fortifications behind which organized wrong shall shelter itself forever. And if that be so, they at least will ask their representatives to take such means as the laws and the Constitution provide them to legislate so that that question can be fairly presented to the courts in the rights of the people.

It is admitted that these rates are not reasonable because they are higher than the rates we pay to other railroad companies which have not received the same benefits. The question whether they are reasonable or not is a legislative and not a judicial question. And I think, as a representative of the interests of the people, we are bound to take notice of the situation. The American people, as I have said, are loyal. They stand by the law and all the rights that it guarantees. They are patient. They are forbearing. They are conciliatory. Let me say to my friend they feel like the Indian chieftain. "Metamora is like flint," exclaimed the old chieftain. "Grate on him and he will bear it; but strike too hard, he will burst and show his heart is fire."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CASWELL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. In the five minutes which I have allowed me let me say that I have no self-consciousness of any necessity in this House or before the country for me to make any defense against any insinuation that may have come from the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] or from any other member touching the conferees of the House in presenting this report. I shall pay no further attention to that insinuation.

Mr. DUNN. I meant no insinuation against the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. I stand here with my colleagues, as the servant of this House, reporting this agreement. I do not care whether the agreement be adopted or not. It will be your report if you adopt it. Your conferees have done the best they could to carry out your views and they could not do it. They were not ready to march up to the defeat of the Post-Office appropriation bill in order to strive to carry out the opinions of certain gentlemen in this House who profess to be constitutional lawyers and who have not yet read the law; who profess to instruct the House and the country as to what these railroad charters mean and what the courts have held that they mean, and yet stand here admitting that they have never even read what the courts have said.

This committee of conference reports this agreement, doing the best they could, doing all they could in good faith, to carry out the wishes of the House. We make this report in good faith for your consideration; that is all there is of it. I have no care whether you adopt or reject it.

The gentleman from New Jersey says that the question of the protection of the rights of the people is involved in this matter. That touches the merits of the question. I say that the question of the rights of the people are involved in this matter. What are they? What do these charters provide? They provide that these railroad companies shall transport the mails and the troops of the United States "for a reasonable price," not exceeding that paid by private individuals. I read from the act.

What is a reasonable price? The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] says that one-half of what you pay to other land-grant railroads is a reasonable price. I deny that to be a reasonable compensation, and if it be law it is not justice. I stand here in my capacity as a legislator the advocate of every right under the law, whether it benefits a railroad company or an individual or the Government.

Now, let us see how far it is in the interest of the company. What are the facts? Give the railroad companies every cent that they claim for transportation and then the total amount under the Thurman act will leave these railroad companies, when the principal of their indebtedness to the Government shall mature, indebted to the United States over $100,000,000.

Now, it is doubtful whether we have the right to make this particular legislation, and if we have it, it amounts to comparatively nothing. What have we the right to do? The Thurman act has been sustained by the courts, taking 25 per cent. of the net earnings of these companies for the sinking fund. Now, if you can take 25 per cent. you can take 50 per cent. I am for doing that, for taking enough to go into the sinking fund to make provision for wiping out this indebtedness when the bonds shall mature. That lies along in the line of the interest of the people.

But I want to say to my friend from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON]—and I say it with the greatest respect, for I respect him and his opinions—I want to say to him that this is not the first proposition I have seen involving legislation which by name ran in the interest of the people but in substance was nothing. It has the roar of water running over the dam, but there is no machinery turned by it, and if adopted it will be found that like the apples of Sodom it will turn to ashes on the lips. It is worse than useless, as it will tend to obstruct and defer legislation that will accomplish something.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CASWELL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ROBESON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] one question, for I know he does not wish to make a false statement.

Mr. CANNON. Not at all.

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman has spoken of this provision as one which would reduce the rates of compensation to these roads to 50 per cent. of what other land-grant roads receive.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. ROBESON. That was the original proposition; but as amended on motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] it reduced their compensation to exactly what other roads received.

Mr. DUNN. To 80 per cent. of what other than land-grant roads receive.

Mr. CANNON. Well, 80 per cent. let it be; the merit remains the same.

Mr. ROBESON. And the same as other land-grant roads receive.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I believe we have six more working days in this Congress. We put upon this appropriation bill a provision which certainly was new legislation. Under our rules it was competent to put such a provision on this bill. The Senate struck it off, for the reason that it was new legislation and the Senate was opposed to new legislation on an appropriation bill.

It is not a matter of appropriation which is involved in this. It is whether we shall insist upon new legislation upon an appropriation bill when the effect of so insisting will be to defeat the bill. I warn gentlemen on this side of the House and upon the other side of the House also that we have not much more time to work, and there is abundance of work which we must accomplish before Congress adjourns. I would always have been willing to have substituted for the provision which was reported in this bill and agreed to by the House a provision sending this question to the courts for them to determine what was just and reasonable compensation to railroads for mail services. And it has transpired that that question is now pending in the courts. It is true that the question before the courts is not whether the exact reduction which was made by former legislation should have been made or not, but the question as to what is just, fair, and reasonable compensation is now before the courts.

Shall we then attempt to take that question from the court; shall we attempt to settle and dispose of it here, when I apprehend the House in the first instance would have been willing to adopt upon this bill a provision of that kind? Mr. Speaker, shall we insist upon the provision of the bill in the face and eyes of the exhibit made here by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that under the law to-day this railroad company will be indebted to the United States for over $100,000,000, whether this provision be adopted or not? Why, sir, when gentlemen here talk about the conferees being influenced by the "light of the locomotives," I am almost tempted to retort that gentlemen favoring this provision, in the face and eyes of the statement which has been made, desire to precipitate a sale of these railroads and the crushing out of the stockholders in the interest of the bondholders. There are two sides to this question. There are stockholders and bondholders, and there is the indebtedness to the Government. Upon the statement which has been made and which can be verified it is at least an even question whether reducing the compensation to be paid these railroad companies, instead of being what the "railroad magnates" object to, is in their interest and at their invitation.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, in the few moments remaining for debate it will be utterly impossible for me to review all the arguments which have been presented here. But I wish to say to my friends on the other side that when they resort to the argument that some undue influence seems to have intervened to govern the minds of the conference committee or members on this floor, it shows conclusively to my mind that they have no other argument left.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] says that for some reason there has suddenly appeared a doubt upon this question of the right to control these railroad companies with reference to rates for Government transportation. I want to remind the gentleman that when this clause was under consideration in the House I objected at the very threshold to the proposition upon two grounds: first, that Congress had not the power to divest these corporations of the rights they had acquired; and second, that if we should do so it would be a fruitless victory, because whatever is earned by the transportation of the mails is simply credited on the enormous amount that is due to the Government of the United States from these companies.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] says it can not be questioned that Congress has the right under these charters to adopt a provision of this kind; that the right to do so is reserved in the charters. Let me call attention to the exact language in which the grant was made to these companies. The charter is on the condition, among other things, that the companies shall transport the mails for a reasonable and fair compensation, not exceeding that paid by individuals for similar service. Now, the reservation referred to by the gentleman from New Jersey is this:

> And the better to accomplish the object of this act, namely, to promote the public interests and welfare by the construction of said railroads and telegraph lines and keeping the same in working order, and to secure to the Government at all times, and particularly in time of war, the use and benefits of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, Congress may at any time, having due regard for the rights of said companies named herein, add to, alter, and amend this act.

In the first place, in this provision Congress guarantees to these companies a reasonable compensation for all Government transportation. In the second place, Congress reserves the right to amend this charter, having due regard for the rights of the companies. The Supreme Court in its decision upon the funding act says that clauses of this nature are a contract between the Government and the railroad companies. Now, my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and my friend from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] seemed to labor under the impression that the Supreme Court has decided something as bearing upon this question. I say to those gentlemen that the Supreme Court has not decided a solitary point involved here. It has decided with reference to the Thurman act that the laying aside of 25 per cent. for the sinking fund is in no way in conflict with a single right guaranteed to those companies under the charter, that it simply provides for a sinking fund and does not conflict in any manner with the charter which gave the companies their existence. In no case that I have examined can I find that the Supreme Court has decided that where a right is reserved, as in this case, that these companies shall have reasonable compensation for carrying the mails and for Government transportation, Congress has the power afterward to say to the companies, "You shall have only 60 per cent. or 80 per cent. of that rate." I can not see how gentlemen can claim for a moment, in view of the embarrassed condition of these companies, that it would be just and equitable for this great Government to repudiate this contract now and assume the ground that it will allow these companies for their services to the Government not a reasonable compensation, but one-half or 80 per cent. of that amount. Legislation of this kind, if proper, ought to be put in some general act, not in an appropriation bill, and that is one of the reasons I have opposed it from the very beginning. I do not wish to have incorporated upon this bill a general extension of the Thurman act or a revision of the laws governing the transportation of the mails.

Mr. Speaker, I now demand the previous question.

Mr. ROBESON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question before he sits down. If we vote down this conference report, can not the House conferees go back, and, taking these two things, one in one hand and one in the other, not letting their right hand know what their left hand does, obtain a compromise which will save a little for the House?

Mr. CASWELL. I have no intention in my action on this floor upon any business proposition to conceal from my right hand what my left hand is doing. I am here simply to do what I think is for the interest of the country. Whether the parties concerned are railroad corporations or individuals or the Government of the United States, I seek only to do justice between the parties.

Mr. CANNON. By consent let me answer that question. I think the House should do what it chooses on this proposition. I have no pride about it. It is your act—not mine—from beginning to end. I have sought to carry the House proposition, but the Senate said they would not recede. In good faith we tried to carry out the will of the House. It is with you, and if you send it back and risk the defeat of the Post-Office appropriation bill I have not a word to say.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senate will back down.

Mr. ROBESON. I should like to say——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has demanded the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. CASWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on the adoption of the conference report.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 82, noes 76.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 114, nays 133, not voting 44; as follows:

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. By instruction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I move to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 123, providing for the termination of articles numbered 18

SOLDIERS' HOME AT WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. The next committee in order is the Committee on Military Affairs.

The following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:
Mr. SKINNER with Mr. LATHAM.
Mr. PACHECO with Mr. CABELL.
Mr. HITT with Mr. SPRINGER.
Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, with Mr. HEWITT, of New York.
Mr. CORNELL with Mr. HERNDON.
Mr. URNER with Mr. MCLANE of Maryland.
Mr. HAZELTON with Mr. KENNA.
Mr. VALENTINE with Mr. DAVIDSON.
Mr. HOUK with Mr. MARTIN.
Mr. BELFORD with Mr. CURTIN.
Mr. CAMP with Mr. WELLBORN.

Mr. CURTIN. I am paired with Mr. BELFORD. If he were present, I would vote in the negative.

Mr. KENNA. If not paired, I would have voted "no."

On motion of Mr. BEACH, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was rejected; and also voted that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CASWELL. I move that the House ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as managers of said conference on the part of the House Mr. CASWELL, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. ELLIS.

Mr. CANNON. I would prefer some other should be appointed than myself.

Mr. ROBESON. I hope the gentleman will not decline.

Mr. CASWELL. So do I.

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman has told us he acts as the agent of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Under what I understand to be the precedents, I must decline.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois declines. The Chair will fill the vacancy during the day.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order is the proceeding under the "Pound" rule.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the first thing in order the call of States for the introduction of bills?

The SPEAKER. The Pound rule provides in the body of it that the hour shall commence immediately after the reading of the Journal; and the call of States will follow.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The rule reads that immediately after the reading of the Journal the call of States and Territories shall begin for the introduction of bills.

The SPEAKER. This is a special rule and takes precedence.

On last Saturday when the hour expired the Committee on Agriculture having been called had presented for consideration a bill creating an agricultural commission, which had been read and was ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is now in order to resume the consideration of that bill at the point reached by the House at the expiration of the preceding hour.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to make a privileged report.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve all points of order upon this bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ATKINS. I thought the gentleman intended to have this bill recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am entirely indifferent as to whether it is recommitted or not.

Mr. ATKINS. That was the understanding in committee this morning.

Mr. HISCOCK. I never heard of it.

Mr. ATKINS. Why, the gentleman made it himself.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman is entirely mistaken; he asked me if certain amendments were adopted to the bill if they would be moved as committee amendments, and I said they certainly would be. But I have no objection to the recommittal of the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I did not suppose that we would consider amendments to a bill that was not before the committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is no need to have the bill before the committee for that purpose; these amendments can be offered as amendments of the committee. Still I have no objection to its recommittal if the gentleman prefers it.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill which has been ordered to be printed will be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate returned to the House the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, recalled by the Senate to correct certain errors in the engrossment of the amendments to the same, said errors having been corrected.

AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill which was pending when the hour under the Pound rule expired on Saturday last.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6920) to create an agricultural commission.

Mr. ANDERSON. In the temporary absence of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, whom I do not see in his seat, I call for the reading of the report accompanying that bill.

Mr. PAGE. Will that be read in the time allowed for discussion?

The SPEAKER. It may be read for five minutes under the rule. The bill was read on Saturday last.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The Chair did not ask for objections to its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The time had not then come.

Mr. VALENTINE. I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. It may be read before objection is asked for in lieu of a statement for five minutes.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6920) to create an agricultural commission, respectfully report the same to the House with amendment and recommend the early consideration and passage of the bill as amended.

It provides for the appointment by the President of a commission consisting of nine persons to investigate and report upon the transportation of the agricultural products of the United States from the point where produced to their final market, the actual cost of such transportation to the common carrier and his charge to the shipper together with such cognate matters as practically affect the difference between the price received by the farmer and that paid by the consumer. It contemplates the division of the commission into sub-committees of three persons each, who may visit such points in the United States as they shall deem expedient and take testimony which shall be distributed to members of Congress as was that of the Tariff Commission, and requires a final report December 3, 1883.

Thirty millions of our people are dependent upon profitable farming for support. In 1880 the value of all agricultural products was estimated at $9,000,000,000, and that of all manufactured products at $6,000,000,000, so that the farm yielded 60 per cent. of the aggregate product of these two great branches of national industry. These significant facts would alone not simply justify but imperatively demand such an investigation of transportation charges as may indicate any legislation that will protect the producer to tend to render the pursuit of agriculture more profitable than it has been heretofore, because the prosperity of the nation is but the aggregated prosperity of the individuals who compose it; and anything which tends to increase the wealth of three-fifths of our population tends to increase the prosperity of the nation. The action of many of the States in not only scrutinizing but regulating the charges made by common carriers and the widespread belief that an unjust proportion of the final price received for an agricultural product is withheld by the carrier from the farmer are fair evidences of the popular demand for such an investigation of the whole subject as shall place the exact facts before Congress and the country. If there was wisdom in the appointment of a tariff commission to investigate the protection that should be given to our manufacturing industries, then there is greater wisdom by one-half in availing ourselves of the labors of an agricultural commission, since the annual value of our agricultural products is one-half greater than that of manufactured articles.

An additional reason for the favorable recommendation of this bill by your committee exists in the important part which farm products play in our foreign commerce. So long as we sell more to other nations than we buy from them we shall grow rich, and when we buy more than we sell we shall grow poor as a nation.

During the last sixty years agricultural products have composed four-fifths of our exports, and in 1880 they constituted 83 per cent. of the total value of exports. Our imports will always be affected by exports, and as the chief source of national revenues is the import duty, Government has a peculiar interest in stimulating agriculture by making its practice profitable to the farmer, and hence in causing a thorough investigation of all charges now made from the time a product leaves the farm until it reaches the consumer.

Since the great transportation companies are usually carriers of passengers as well as of freight, and since the profits on their whole business must necessarily be affected by their profits on the passenger traffic, your committee have amended section 4 by inserting the following in line 7 after the word "products:" "And in order that full and adequate justice shall be had between said company or corporation and the people, said commission shall investigate and report upon all questions relating to the establishment and maintenance of reasonable and just interstate transportation tariffs; and said commission is empowered to issue subpœnas," &c.

The consideration of this subject, in connection with that of the transportation of agricultural products, is so evidently proper and necessary, both to the interests of the people and the carriers, as to require no further comment. We have amended the title of the bill accordingly, and earnestly recommend early and favorable action by the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question to the House whether or not the bill shall now be considered.

The question was submitted. Ten gentlemen rising in opposition, the bill was not considered.

FISHERIES TREATY.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs was called.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. By instruction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I move to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 123, providing for the termination of articles numbered 18 to 25, inclusive, and article numbered 30 of the treaty between the United States of America and Her Britannic Majesty concluded at Washington, May 8, 1871, and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That in the judgment of Congress the provisions of articles numbered 18 to 25, inclusive, and of article 30 of the treaty between the United States and Her Britannic Majesty, for an amicable settlement of all causes of difference between the two countries, concluded at Washington on the 8th day of May, A. D. 1871, ought to be terminated at the earliest possible time, and be no longer in force; and to this end the President be, and he hereby is, directed to give notice to the government of Her Britannic Majesty that the provisions of each and every of the articles aforesaid will terminate and be of no force on the expiration of two years next after the time of giving such notice.

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he hereby is, directed to give and communicate to the government of Her Britannic Majesty such notice of such termination on the 1st day of July, A. D. 1883, or as soon thereafter as may be.

SEC. 3. That on and after the expiration of the two years' time required by said treaty, that each and every of said articles shall be deemed and held to have expired and be of no force and effect, and that every department of the Government of the United States shall execute the laws of the United States (in the premises) in the same manner and to the same effect as if said articles had never been in force; and the act of Congress approved March 1, A. D. 1873, entitled "An act to carry into effect the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed in the city of Washington the 8th day of May, 1871, relating to the fisheries," so far as it relates to the articles of the said treaty so to be terminated, shall be and stand repealed and be of no force on and after the time of the expiration of said two years.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to move the adoption of the resolution; and I will ask the House to listen for a moment to a brief explanation of it.

Mr. WASHBURN. Before leave is given to consider this resolution I wish to ask my friend a question.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I think if the gentleman from Minnesota will hear the explanation which I will briefly give it may, perhaps, satisfy him on all points with reference to the propriety of the adoption of this measure. By the treaty of Washington certain sections were devoted to rights given in British waters to American fishermen. The amount that the United States was to pay for the privilege was to be settled by the Halifax commission. The sum that was to be awarded by that commission paid for that right for the term of twelve years and no longer. The sum awarded by the Halifax commission was five and one-half millions of dollars. We must now give notice by the 1st of next July of the abrogation of these clauses of that treaty, and provision is contained in the treaty for the abrogation of these clauses and nothing else. So that the matter stands by itself, or else we enter upon another term for which England may demand ample payment from the United States according to the enormous and unjust awards of the Halifax commission for privileges which nobody in the United States who has investigated the subject considers worth keeping. The Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs unanimously reported this resolution. It was adopted by the Senate without an objection; and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House, having fully examined the matter, unanimously instructed me to move the adoption of the resolution by the House, which I now do under that instruction.

With this explanation I trust that no objection will be made to the consideration of the resolution, which I am very sure I can satisfy everybody ought to be adopted, to avoid liability to further payment of an extortionate sum to Great Britain for that which is not considered worth anything to us by parties who are interested in the matter and who have examined into it.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether the passage of this joint resolution will in any way interfere with section 2866 of the Revised Statutes which provides for the carrying of goods in transit through this country?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Those provisions are excepted from the operations of this resolution in terms in the resolution. This applies only to the fisheries.

Mr. WASHBURN. If that is the case, I have no objection to the passage of the resolution; otherwise I would have objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question whether there is objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution is before the House for consideration. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] desire to be heard on it?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I do not desire to occupy any time.

The SPEAKER. Does any gentleman desire to be heard in opposition? [After a pause.] The Chair does not observe any gentleman rising in opposition. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS' HOME AT WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. The next committee in order is the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to move that the bill (S. 1821) prescribing the regulations for the Soldiers' Home located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, be taken from the House Calendar, and that it be passed with certain amendments recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Board of Commissioners of the Soldiers' Home shall every year report in writing to the Secretary of War, giving a full statement of all receipts and disbursements of money, of the manner in which the funds are invested, of any changes in the investments, and the reasons therefor, of all admissions and discharges, and generally of all facts that may be necessary to a full understanding of the condition and management of the home. The Secretary of War shall have power to call for and require any omitted facts which in his judgment should be stated to be added. This annual report shall be, by the Secretary of War, together with the report of the inspecting officer hereinafter provided for, transmitted to Congress at the first session thereafter, and he shall also cause the same to be published in orders to the Army, a copy thereof to be deposited in each garrison and post library.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War shall, once in each year, detail a suitable officer from the inspectors' corps of the Army, who shall thoroughly inspect the home, its records, accounts, management, discipline, and sanitary condition, and shall report thereon in writing, together with such suggestions as he desires to make.

SEC. 3. That no new buildings shall be erected or new grounds purchased, nor shall any expenditure of more than $5,000 be made, until the action of the board thereon shall be approved by the Secretary of War. All supplies that can be purchased upon contract shall be so purchased, after due notice by advertisement, of the lowest responsible bidder. Such bidder shall give bond, with proper security, for the performance of his contract.

SEC. 4. That any inmate of the home who is receiving a pension from the Government, and who has a child, wife, or parent living, shall be entitled, by filing with the pension agent from whom he receives his money a written direction to that effect, to have his pension, or any part of it, paid to such child, wife, or parent. The pensions of all who now are or shall hereafter become inmates of the home, except such as shall be assigned as aforesaid, shall be paid to the treasurer of the home. The money thus derived shall not become a part of the funds of the home, but shall be held by the treasurer in trust for the pensioner to whom it would otherwise have been paid, and such part of it as shall not sooner have been paid to him shall be paid to him on his discharge from the institution. The board of commissioners may from time to time pay over to any inmate such part of his pension-money as they think best for his interest and consistent with the discipline and good order of the home, but such pensioner shall not be entitled to demand or have the same so long as he remains an inmate of the home. In case of the death of any pensioner, any pension-money due him and remaining in the hands of the treasurer shall be paid to his legal heirs, if demand is made within three years; otherwise the same shall escheat to the home.

SEC. 5. That a suitable uniform shall be furnished to every inmate of the home without cost to him.

SEC. 6. That the board of commissioners are authorized to aid persons who are entitled to admission to the home, by out-door relief, in such manner and to such an extent as they may deem proper; but such relief shall not exceed the average cost of maintaining an inmate of the home.

SEC. 7. That the officers of the home shall be selected as now provided by law, except that they shall hereafter, upon expiration of present detail, be taken from the retired list of the Army; and preference shall be given to such as were disabled by wounds received in the line of duty. And the treasurer of the home shall be required to give a bond in the penal sum of $20,000 for the faithful performance of his duty.

SEC. 8. That all funds of the home not needed for current use and which are now invested in United States registered bonds shall, as soon as received, or as soon as present investments can be converted into money without loss, be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the home as a permanent fund, and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, which shall be paid quarterly to the treasurer of the home; and the proceeds of such registered bonds, as they are paid, shall be deposited in like manner. No part of the principal sum so deposited shall be withdrawn for use except upon a resolution of the board of commissioners stating the necessity, and approved by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 9. That no officers of the home shall borrow any money on the credit of the home for any purpose, nor shall any pledge of any of its property or securities for any purpose be valid.

SEC. 10. That the Board of Commissioners of the Soldiers' Home shall hereafter consist of the Surgeon-General, the Commissary-General, the Adjutant-General, the Quartermaster-General, and the Inspector-General of the Army. Any three of them shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

SEC. 11. That all laws and parts of laws relating to the Soldiers' Home now in force and not inconsistent with this act are continued in force, and such as are inconsistent herewith are to that extent repealed.

SEC. 12. That the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury in the employment of additional clerical force to be used in adjusting the accounts in the Second Auditor's Office of those funds which under the law belong to the Soldiers' Home.

Passed the Senate June 20, 1882.

Attest: F. E. SHOBER, Acting Secretary.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask that the amendments proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs may be read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] desire to have the report read or to make an explanation?

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask that the amendments reported by the committee may be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question as to objections. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Only one gentleman objecting, the bill is before the House for consideration.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer the following amendments:

In line 3, section 1, strike out the words "board of commissioners" and insert the word "governor;" and in line 4 insert the words "administer the affairs thereof, and shall;" so that it will read: "That the governor of the Soldiers'

Mr. BRAGG. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] if he has taken the trouble to read this bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. No, sir, I have not; I have not had the time. That is the magnificent beauty of this new rule; something is popped did not contribute to them, I trust that no member of the House will object to this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Home shall administer the affairs thereof, and shall every year report in writing," &c.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to be heard on that.

Mr. FLOWER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] a question. In the sundry civil appropriation bill, passed on Saturday, there are some provisions in relation to soldiers in these soldiers' homes. Does this bill interfere with those provisions?

Mr. HENDERSON. No, sir; this is for the Soldiers' Home here, at the city of Washington, and I should like, if I can have unanimous consent to do so, to state that this bill has been prepared by the Senate committee, after a thorough investigation of the Soldiers' Home, and that the bill is approved by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, with the amendments which are proposed by the committee.

Mr. BROWNE. Do I understand the gentleman to state that this bill simply applies to the Soldier's Home at Washington?

Mr. HENDERSON. That is all.

Mr. ANDERSON. Now, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois whether the government of that home at present is not in the hands of a commission; whether this bill as prepared by the Senate does not contemplate that it shall remain in the hands of the commission; and whether the amendment of the House committee is not to substitute the governor of the home for the commission? If that be the case, and I have no doubt it is, then it seems to me an unwise amendment to be made, with only a five minutes' debate, to take the conduct of that home out from under the control of the body in whose hands it is now vested by law and put it in the hands of the governor.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] yield?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman is rapidly running out.

Mr. SPARKS. I desire to say that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] is, I think, mistaken. The bill does not confer extravagant or undue power on the governor. It does, however, confer powers on the governor beyond those now authorized, and which the Committee on Military Affairs of the House thought it wise to confer.

Mr. BRAGG. This puts it on the same footing as all other homes.

Mr. SPARKS. The commission is abolished, but a board of visitors is provided for, increased by two members over the present board of commissioners.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] desire to be heard?

Mr. HENDERSON. I would say this to the House. I think it has been found difficult, if not impracticable, to administer well the affairs of the Soldiers' Home by a board of commissioners, and the intention is to clothe the governor with authority to administer the affairs of the home subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, and subject to a board of visitors instead of a board of commissioners, who are required to visit the institution as often as once every three months, and to examine into and report the condition of the home, with such recommendations as they may deem necessary, to the Secretary of War.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. I will say that at present the governor, while nominally in charge of the home, has not the power to purchase anything whatever that may be necessary and proper for the home; it has to be done by this board of commissioners. The governor can not, as I understand it, even have a gate put up which has blown down or purchase a box of matches that may be necessary or put in a pane of glass that has been broken. But the commissioners must be hunted up for these purposes; so that while the governor is nominally responsible for the administration of the affairs of the home, he really has no authority.

The Committee on Military Affairs of the House believe it would be wiser and better to clothe the governor of the home with some powers and to make him responsible for the proper management of the same. They think it far better to do this, subject always to the approval of the Secretary of War, and to constitute a board of visitors, who shall, from time to time, visit the home and investigate the books and accounts and the management of the home, and report thereon to the Secretary of War, with such recommendations as they may deem necessary and proper.

Mr. ANDERSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON. If I understand the gentleman's statement, it is proposed to give the governor of this home the power to make whatever regulations he pleases?

Mr. HENDERSON. Not at all.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. He is only the administrative officer to carry out the law.

Mr. HENDERSON. I only desire to say further, that the action of the committee in submitting these amendments was unanimous.

Mr. BRAGG. The difficulty with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] is the farm connected with the home; he seems to have got a little off on that farm. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. There are various amendments recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs to this bill, which I ask may be now considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the amendments be read consecutively through the bill, and unless some question is raised they will be considered as adopted. That will save time.

Mr. HENDERSON. Very well.

The Clerk read the several amendments to the bill; which were adopted.

Mr. HENDERSON moved to reconsider the various votes adopting the amendments; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the governor of the Soldiers' Home shall administer the affairs thereof and shall every year report in writing to the Secretary of War, giving a full statement of all receipts and disbursements of money, of the manner in which the funds are invested, of any changes in the investments, and the reasons therefor, of all admissions and discharges, and generally of all facts that may be necessary to a full understanding of the condition and management of the home. The Secretary of War shall have power to call for and require any omitted facts, which in his judgment should be stated, to be added. SEC. 5. That a suitable uniform shall be furnished to every inmate of the home without cost to him.

SEC. 6. That the governor is authorized to aid persons who are entitled to admission to the home by out-door relief, in such manner and to such an extent as they may deem proper; but such relief shall not exceed the average cost of maintaining an inmate of the home.

SEC. 7. That the governor of the home shall be selected by the President of the United States, and all other officers of the home shall be selected by the Secretary of War, and the treasurer of the home shall be required to give a bond in the penal sum of $20,000 for the faithful performance of his duty.

SEC. 8. That all funds of the home not needed for current use, and which are not now invested in United States registered bonds, shall, as soon as received, or as soon as present investments can be converted into money without loss, be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the home as a permanent fund, and shall draw interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, which shall be paid quarterly to the treasurer of the home; and the proceeds of such registered bonds, as they are paid, shall be deposited in like manner. No part of the principal sum so deposited shall be withdrawn for use except upon a warrant of the governor stating the necessity, and approved by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 9. That no officers of the home shall borrow any money on the credit of the home for any purpose, nor shall any pledge of its property or securities for any purpose be valid.

SEC. 10. That the Surgeon-General, the Commissary-General, the Adjutant-General, Quartermaster-General, and the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army shall constitute a board of visitors, whose duty it shall be to visit and inspect the home at least once in every three months, and examine into the condition and management of said home and the books and accounts of the treasurer, and report the same, with such recommendations as they may deem necessary and proper, to the Secretary of War. Any three of them shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

SEC. 11. That all laws and parts of laws relating to the Soldiers' Home now in force and not inconsistent with this act are continued in force, and such as are inconsistent herewith are to that extent repealed.

The bill as amended was then ordered to a third reading and read the third time.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is there five minutes allowed in opposition to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The five minutes in opposition to the bill have not yet been taken.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to say one word. I am not conversant with the details of this bill, but I am inclined to think that the change proposed here is not a wise one. I only want to express with due deference my opinion in opposition to that of gentlemen who have examined into the subject more carefully.

I say this for the reason that I fear that the affairs of the home will not be subject to that supervision and close observation which ought to characterize the government of that institution. What I am afraid of is that in giving the governor of this home power to put in a pane of glass, which, of course, he ought to have, and the power to do some other little things, which of course he ought to have, you will after a while find out that you have given all the power over this home to him, and that I do not think ought to be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of [illegible] resolution? [A pause.] No one rises to object, and the joint

Mr. BRAGG. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] if he has taken the trouble to read this bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. No, sir, I have not; I have not had the time. That is the magnificent beauty of this new rule; something is popped up here when you are not expecting it and can not examine it. Whether I have read the bill or not has nothing to do with this proposition; that is a question of fact. I do not believe this bill should pass.

Mr. McCOOK. Has the gentleman read the Senate report in regard to the management of this home?

Mr. ANDERSON. "The gentleman" has read a part of the report.

Mr. McCOOK. And yet the gentleman says, after reading that report, that this is a dangerous bill to pass.

Mr. ANDERSON. So far as I understand it, I think so.

Mr. McCOOK. I do not think so.

Mr. ANDERSON. I have not the information which the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] and other members of the committee have.

Mr. McCOOK. If you have read the report you have information enough.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is because of that report that I do not wish to see all power put into any one man's hands. That is all I have to say.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. HENDERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLOR-BLINDNESS IN THE NAVY, ETC.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to call up from the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for consideration at this time the joint resolution (H. Res. 135) relating to color-blindness and visual acuteness in persons employed in the Navy and merchant marine.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it is important that definite and uniform standards of examination for color-blindness and tests for visual acuteness in persons employed in the Navy and merchant marine should be established which shall be in harmony with such standards and tests as are or may be established by other nations: Therefore,

Resolved, &c., That the President is hereby authorized and directed to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, some suitable person qualified for such service, who, with one line officer of the Navy and one medical officer of the Navy, to be detailed or designated by the Secretary of the Navy, shall attend and represent the United States in any international congress or convention held by authority of law in any European nation to consider and act on said subject; and the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended, or so much thereof as may be needed, under the direction of the President, to compensate the person so appointed and defray the necessary expenses of the person so appointed and of the officers of the Navy so detailed or designated. And the person so appointed and the officers of the Navy so detailed or designated under the provisions of this act shall join in a report of the proceedings of such congress or convention, and of the conclusions reached thereby, if any, to the President, to be by him laid before Congress, to the end that an international system of examinations for color-blindness and tests for visual acuteness, and standards for colors for signals used at sea, may be established by law.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Without calling for the reading of the report, which is somewhat long, I will state in two or three minutes the purpose and scope of this bill. It was reported unanimously by the Committee on Naval Affairs to the last House of Representatives, but was not reached upon the Calendar, and therefore was not passed.

It is known, I suppose, to every member of the House that the subject of color-blindness of persons engaged in navigating vessels of the Navy and the merchant marine has been found to be of the very greatest importance affecting the safety of vessels at sea. This bill proposes, if foreign countries shall join with us, to establish an international congress to determine upon the tests of visual acuteness, and also to determine the necessity of uniform signals at sea in the navies and the merchant marine of different countries. Professor Holmgren, of Sweden, who started the inquiry into this subject, has induced his own government to recommend the adoption of a system such as that proposed in this bill; and the King of Sweden has announced his readiness to join the United States in organizing a commission. The English Government also has had the subject under consideration.

It must be manifest to every gentleman that it is of no use for the United States to establish tests as to color-blindness or to establish standards for lights and signals at sea unless the same system prevails in the marine service of other nations. If an American vessel be provided with men who have been thoroughly examined as to their visual acuteness, and if the lights and signals of our service can not be responded to by vessels of other countries, it is as if nothing had been done. This joint resolution provides simply for a commission on the part of our Government, to consist of three members, to unite with such persons as may be appointed by other governments, to examine and report upon this subject in the hope that all the commercial nations of the world may join in a uniform system which shall have the effect to make life upon the sea tolerably safe. In view of recent marine disasters, of which no man can say that the want of visual acuteness did not contribute to them, I trust that no member of the House will object to this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. SPARKS. I think this is a measure in the right direction; but I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HARRIS] why this commission on the part of our Government should not consist entirely of naval officers, thereby avoiding the creation of new offices?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I will answer the gentleman. In this country the subject was investigated first by gentlemen not connected with the Navy——

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I believe the question was put upon objecting to the resolution. A number of gentlemen have risen to object.

The SPEAKER. Eight members objecting, the resolution is not before the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2507) to punish the false personation of officers or employés of the service of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 7321) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department; and

A bill (H. R. 7486) to prevent the importation of adulterated and spurious teas.

The message further announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 7482) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 7181) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate, Mr. PLUMB, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL.

VALIDATION OF MAIL CONTRACTS.

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads being called,

Mr. BINGHAM said: By instruction of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, I ask consent to have taken from the House Calendar for immediate consideration the joint resolution (H. Res. 333) validating certain contracts executed by the Postmaster-General.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the contracts executed by the Postmaster-General for routes numbered 6772, in the State of New York, under advertisement of February 10, 1881; 3266, in the State of Massachusetts, under advertisement of February 10, 1881; 23532, in the State of Illinois, under advertisement of June 20, 1879; 10295, in the District of Columbia, under advertisement of March 10, 1882, are hereby validated and declared to be in full force and effect, any omission in said contracts to conform to the requirements of the statute notwithstanding.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask for the reading of the report, which is very brief.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom was referred H. Res. 333, submit the following report:

The committee recommend the passage of H. Res. 333 for the reasons contained in the letter of the Postmaster-General herewith submitted:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 31, 1883.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a draft of a resolution to validate contracts for star service on routes 3266, 6772, 10295, and 23532, in the States of Massachusetts, New York, the District of Columbia, and Illinois. These contracts are for service in the cities of Boston, New York, Washington, and Chicago, and were irregularly drawn, and did not conform to the advertisements for the service. The advertisements stipulated that all additional service required during the term of the contracts should be performed without additional compensation, and that there should be no decrease of compensation for decrease of service; and the contracts were irregularly drawn to pay pro rata for all additional service required, and to decrease compensation pro rata on all service dispensed with.

If these contracts should be now annulled, it would be impossible to obtain temporary service at the rates of pay authorized by law, while to continue them as mail-messenger service would be impossible, as the appropriation for that branch of the service would be inadequate to meet the expense. If the service could now be temporarily provided for without danger to the postal interests in the cities named, it could not be relet without large additional expense, for the reason that this kind of service can not be provided for without delay and a large outlay, and in some cases the term of the contracts has nearly expired.

I have the honor to request that early action may be taken on this proposed resolution.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. O. HOWE, Postmaster-General.

Hon. H. H. BINGHAM,
Chairman Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads,
House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution? [A pause.] No one rises to object, and the joint resolution is before the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker [cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"], I am perfectly willing to rest this question upon the report.

Mr. REAGAN. I would like to ask the gentleman why these contracts need validating?

Mr. BINGHAM. The contracts were drawn in error. They have been examined at the Post-Office Department in consequence of the failure of a contractor, and it has been found that four contracts were erroneously drawn. Service is now being performed under them. The simple purpose of this measure is to validate them. The matter has been thoroughly investigated.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONFIRMATION OF PUBLIC LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. POUND. Mr. Speaker, I desire, on behalf of the Committee on the Public Lands, to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 5543) to confirm certain entries on the public lands.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in all cases where lands reduced in price to $1.25 per acre by the act of June 15, 1880, but which have not been offered at public sale at such reduced price, were inadvertently sold at private entry by the officers of the Land Department between the date of the passage of said act and the date of the receipt at the local offices of the instructions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office relative thereto of October 10, 1881, the entries so inadvertently permitted to be made by innocent purchasers, and which are regular in all respects except as to time of entry, shall be confirmed as of the dates of entry, respectively: Provided, however, That no valid adverse claim to any of such lands had attached prior to the date of such entry: And provided further, That where lands have been entered since the approval of said act, and a greater price paid therefor than said reduced price, such excess shall be refunded to the purchaser or his legal representatives in the same manner as repayments of excess purchase-money are made in other cases under existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the report under the rule.

Mr. NEAL. The hour has expired.

Mr. POUND. I ask, by unanimous consent, the report and bill be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish the report read, and under the rule we have five minutes for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The hour has expired, and the bill goes over.

Mr. POUND. I desire before the bill goes over to move an amendment to strike out the last proviso. Let the report be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

It is as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3492) "relating to the public lands of the United States, and construing and amending the act entitled 'An act relating to the public lands of the United States,' approved June 15, 1880," report the same back with a substitute, the adoption and passage of which is recommended.

The third section of the act of June 15, 1880, reads as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the price of lands now subject to entry which were raised to $2.50 per acre and put in market prior to January, 1861, by reason of the grant of alternate sections for railroad purposes, is hereby reduced to $1.25 per acre."

After the passage of this act the local land agents in several districts, under direction and authority of the General Land Office, sold a quantity of lands of the class referred to in the above section at the price of $1.25 per acre. The instructions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of date July 17, 1880, authorizing or recognizing the authority to make such sales, contained these words:

"The third section reduces to $1.25 per acre the price of any lands which were subject to ordinary private entry at $2.50 per acre at the date of the approval of the act, having been doubled in price by reason of the grant of alternate sections for railroad purposes, and which were put in market at that price prior to the 1st of January, 1861. Lands which have not been put in market for sale at ordinary private entry at $2.50 per acre, or which were so put in market subsequent to the 1st of January, 1861, are not changed in price by this section. You will carefully observe the rule, as to price, thus introduced. By reference to your official records, it will be in your power to ascertain the facts with regard to any lands from which to decide as to its applicability to them. In case of doubt you may correct your records to exhibit the facts by correspondence with this office."

These sales were made at private entry without a reoffering of the lands at public sale first being had. The parties purchasing acted in good faith, and in many instances have made improvements, begun operations on the land, and expended considerable sums on the faith of the purchase.

After the lapse of nearly a year, the officers of the local land offices were instructed to sell no more lands at the reduced price of $1.25 per acre, for the reason that the lands had not been offered at public sale at the reduced price, although the lands had been offered at $2.50 per acre, and had been in market at that price for over twenty years. Thereafter some lands were sold at $2.50 per acre, of the class reduced in price by the act of 1880. By later instructions the Department has held that the lands must first be reoffered at public sale, and has suspended the sales so made.

The action of the Department works a grievous hardship on the purchasers. If the sales are canceled they will in some instances lose all their improvements and expenses incurred on the faith of the purchases. In others, which have been made known to the committee, the purchasers have made contracts to convey and give title, and the cancellation of the sales to them will subject them to actions for breach of contract and onerous damages.

The substitute proposed is prepared by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and is approved by him and by the Secretary of the Interior. The Commissioner, in a letter answering inquiries respecting the proposed legislation, says:

"Such entries were made, however, in good faith by the respective parties. They were allowed by the local officers through a misapprehension of the law, and in consequence of the absence of proper instructions by this office. Under this state of facts the legislative relief desired by the parties interested is, in my opinion, proper to be afforded."

In these views the Secretary of the Interior concurs, and recommends the passage of the substitute.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the amended tariff bill from the Senate be printed.

Mr. HASKELL. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion, as that takes it out of the House.

Mr. KELLEY. No, it does not. My motion relates merely to the matter of printing. I do not propose to take it out of the House. It is merely to print it, in order that members may see what the Senate has or has not done in the way of amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. Does the gentleman propose to call up the bill to-day?

Mr. KELLEY. I do not; but I do not know what other gentlemen may do.

Mr. KELLEY's motion was agreed to.

PRODUCTION OF GOLD AND SILVER.

Mr. VAN HORN, from the Committee on Printing, reported back the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring therein), That 9,000 copies of the report of the Director of the Mint on the annual production of gold and silver in the United States be printed; 4,000 copies for the use of the House, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Director of the Mint.

Mr. VAN HORN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS' EXHIBIT AT THE CENTENNIAL.

Mr. VAN HORN also, from the Committee on Printing, reported joint resolution (H. Res. 359) to print 5,000 copies of the report of the board on behalf of the United States Executive Departments at the international exhibition of 1876; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That there be printed and bound, in continuation of the series of volumes heretofore published by Congress under joint resolution of June 20, 1879, containing the final report of the United States Centennial Commission on the International Exhibition of 1876, and uniform therewith, 5,000 copies of the report of the board on behalf of the United States Executive Departments at said exhibition, being the report which was submitted to Congress by the President of the United States by special message of February 9, 1877, and again in his annual message of December 3, 1877, of which number 3,000 copies shall be for the House, 1,000 copies for the Senate, 200 copies for the Smithsonian Institution for distribution to such foreign governments and others as made contributions from such exhibition to the National Museum, 300 copies for the late members of said board, and 500 copies for distribution by the late president of the Centennial Commission, the printing to be done by the Public Printer, under the supervision of the late chairman of said board, upon whose order may be allowed by the Public Printer to the late secretary of the board not exceeding $300 for services to be performed and incidental expenses to be incurred in connection therewith: Provided, That the photographic views of the Government exhibit accompanying the manuscript report shall not be printed or reproduced for the publication herein authorized.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VAN HORN moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, this being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, also resolutions calling for executive information, for printing and reference to their appropriate committees. Under this call resolutions and memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures are in order for reference to their appropriate committees.

Mr. PAGE. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of States for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. PAGE. I move to suspend the rules for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. It is not usual to dispense with the call of States for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

MEMPHIS, ATLANTA AND SAVANNAH RAILROAD.

Mr. WHEELER introduced a bill (H. R. 7638) to grant the right of way over the public lands in Alabama, and to grant lands to said State in aid of the Memphis, Atlanta and Savannah Railroad, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

RETURN OF COTTON TAX.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 7639) to provide for refunding to the several States certain sums of money which were collected from persons residing in said States as a tax upon cotton; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. E. C. COWLES.

Mr. HERBERT introduced a bill (H. R. 7640) for the relief of Mrs. E. C. Cowles; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF JAMES A. WARE, DECEASED.

Mr. HERBERT also introduced a bill (H. R. 7641) for the relief of the estate of James A. Ware, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM T. JUDKINS.

Mr. HERBERT also introduced a bill (H. R. 7642) for the relief of the estate of William T. Judkins; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN C. JUDKINS.

Mr. HERBERT also introduced a bill (H. R. 7643) for the relief of the estate of John C. Judkins; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES H. JUDKINS.

Mr. HERBERT also introduced a bill (H. R. 7644) for the relief of the estate of James H. Judkins; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

COLONEL GEORGE W. GETTY.

Mr. ROSECRANS introduced a bill (H. R. 7645) to reward the long, faithful, and distinguished services of Colonel George W. Getty, Fourth United States Artillery, and brevet major-general, United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CARTE DEL MADERA DEL PRESIDIO.

Mr. BERRY introduced a resolution of inquiry relative to the private land claim in California known as the Carte del Madera del Presidio; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land-Claims.

PENSACOLA AND PERDIDO CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. BISBEE introduced a bill (H. R. 7646) to incorporate the Pensacola and Perdido Canal Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

CALUMET RIVER, ILLINOIS.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (H. R. 7647) to preserve and prevent encroachment upon the excavated channel of the Calumet River, Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

IMPORTATION OF GERMAN WINES.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 360) prohibiting importation of wines from Germany until some means can be provided by law to prevent the importation of deleterious wines from that country.

Mr. GUENTHER. I ask that this joint resolution be read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. Its reading does not necessarily take it into the RECORD. If the gentleman desires to have it read for information the Chair will order it to be read.

Mr. GUENTHER. I would like to have it read.

The joint resolution was read at length.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. GUENTHER. That ought to go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BRAGG. Civil Service Reform would be the proper committee. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. It will be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BRAGG. The Committee on Ways and Means ought to find out how to get money into the Treasury, not to prevent its collection. It had better go to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

The SPEAKER. The proper reference for the joint resolution is the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. GUENTHER. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. This is not a matter relating to commerce.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I think it could be referred either to the Committee on Commerce or the Committee on Ways and Means. I have no objection, however, to the reference indicated by the Speaker.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. PAYSON presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Illinois relative to the increase of pensions in certain cases; which were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

BRIDGES ON THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. PAYSON also presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Illinois relative to the protection of bridges, &c., on the Mississippi River; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

TAX ON THE MANUFACTURE OF STILLS.

DOUBLE POSTAL CARD.

Mr. HILL also introduced a bill (H. R. 7660) to amend section 32 of the act of March 3, 1879, directing the Postmaster-General to introduce and furnish for use a double postal card; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

ALLEGED ARREST OF EMIGRANT ON BRITISH SHIP.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State inform this House whether the officers of the British steamship Republic within a few days past held an emigrant under arrest until they sent for the British consul and held a pretended trial before the British consul within the territory of the United States before allowing said emigrant to land.

RELIEF OF ENGLAND, ETC.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, also introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 362) for the relief of England, the benefit of Ireland, and the glory of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. As that joint resolution is of some importance, I should like to have it read at length and published in the RECORD.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. The joint resolution looks to the annexation of Ireland to the United States, thereby getting her out of her present thralldom. I should like to have it read and published in the RECORD. It simply recites the situation of Ireland, and declares that she can never be happy in that situation. It is for the relief of England I offer it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. For the information of the House I think the joint resolution had better be read.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. It is principally for the benefit of England, which seems to be troubled with possessions she can not govern. There is nothing disrespectful in it.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution was read at length and was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ROSINA HEINEMAN.

Mr. SCOVILLE introduced a bill (H. R. 7661) for the relief of Rosina Heineman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. GLEASON.

Mr. COX, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. 7662) granting a pension to John H. Gleason; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MARY ASHBY.

LEAGUE ISLAND NAVY-YARD.

Mr. WISE, of Pennsylvania, also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania in reference to the navy-yard at League Island; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. TUCKER. Should not these resolutions go to the Committee on Rules? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there are so many of them they should be divided up among the committees.

Mr. TUCKER. I think it would be well to refer them to the Committee on Rules.

MYRON BARNES.

Mr. JADWIN introduced a bill (H. R. 7666) for the relief of Myron Barnes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions is now concluded.

Mr. NEAL. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. PAGE. I move to dispense with the regular order.

Mr. NEAL. To-day is set apart for the consideration of business coming from the Committee on the District of Columbia, and, Mr. Speaker, I will, by unanimous consent, state, on the part of that committee, we propose to call up only two Senate bills of minor importance. I do not think they will take more than a few minutes to pass them. I hope the gentleman from California will withhold any proposition he has to submit until those two bills have been considered and passed.

Mr. PAGE. I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. NEAL. I hope the gentleman will not raise it until I can dispose of these two bills.

Mr. WHITE. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Mr. PAGE. How much time does the gentleman think the two bills he refers to will consume?

Mr. NEAL. Certainly not more than ten minutes.

Mr. RYAN. Will they provoke any debate?

Mr. NEAL. I do not think they will.

Mr. PAGE. Very well; I withdraw my motion for the present.

ISHERWOOD ESTATE.

Mr. NEAL. I move to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration Senate bill No. 1342, authorizing the trustees of the Isherwood estate to amend a certain plan of subdivision of said estate recorded in the land records of the District of Columbia.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken up and read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the trustees of the Isherwood estate are hereby authorized to withdraw or annul so much of the plat or subdivision of said estate which has been approved and placed on file in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia as relates to squares thereon numbered 7 and 13 and the street between said squares, and are permitted to resubdivide the said squares and lines of street running through and between the same, and to place the new subdivision of the squares above named on file in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia; and upon filing said new subdivision the present street between said squares 7 and 13 is hereby vacated: Provided, That if the vested rights of any person or persons who have purchased land in said Isherwood estate from the trustees or their beneficiaries shall be injuriously affected by the change as herein provided, the said trustees shall be liable in damages therefor: And provided further, That any action for damages hereunder shall be brought within one year from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. NEAL. Just one word. The trustees of the Isherwood estate, and one of them is Mr. Clark, the Architect of the Capitol, caused to be surveyed a plat of that estate. Mr. Forsythe, the county surveyor, made a mistake and located a spring right in the middle of a street. They wish to vacate that street and to locate a street on each side of the spring. None of the lots have been sold, but out of abundant caution the Senate have put in a proviso authorizing anybody who might find themselves injured to bring suit to recover damages.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NEAL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DANIEL BREED.

Mr. NEAL. I now move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2316) for the relief of Daniel Breed for present consideration.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the deed of conveyance executed by the trustees of public schools for the county of Washington, District of Columbia, to Daniel Breed, on the 6th day of February, 1873, of lots numbered 42 and 43, as numbered on plat-book numbered 1 and folio 62 of records of land surveys of said county, and recorded in liber numbered 702, folio 407, one of the land records for Washington County, District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, approved and the sale affirmed; and the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to make and execute any other deed of assurance in law for the more sure and effectual conveyance of the said premises in conformity to the terms of the said deed.

Mr. REAGAN. Why is it we are called upon to confirm private deeds?

Mr. NEAL. There was a small school lot out here near Mount Pleasant. The trustees of the school were not satisfied with the location. They bought another lot and built the school-house upon it. Under what they supposed was adequate authority in the premises, they sold the first lot for the sum of $1,100. There is some question as to whether the purchaser of the same secured a good title. In order that there should be no question about it a bill was introduced in the Senate, passed the Senate, and is now before the House, to settle the question of title. This bill, therefore, which I now present, is merely to confirm the title of this lot. I have prepared a report setting forth the facts which I shall ask to have printed in the RECORD. The attorneys of the District recommend the passage of this bill and there is no objection to it anywhere.

The report referred to by Mr. NEAL is as follows:

Mr. NEAL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted the following report:

That said committee have had under consideration said bill and do find that "prior to the year 1873 a small school-house had been built on the outskirts of the village of Mount Pleasant, in the District of Columbia, and located on lots numbered 42 and 43, as numbered on plat-book No. 1 and folio 62 of records of land surveys of said county, and recorded in book No. 702, folio 407, one of the land records for Washington County, District of Columbia. On account of its insufficient size and inconvenient location it was abandoned, and another and larger building erected in a more central location. On account of its abandonment and the improbability of its ever again being required for a school-house or school-house site, it was deemed advisable by the trustees of the public schools of the county of Washington, and so recommended by them to the then District government, to sell said property, and the sale was officially authorized by Governor Cooke, advertised over his official signature, and the property was sold to Daniel Breed for $1,110, the consideration paid therefor, and warranty deed was executed to him by the trustees, who, believing themselves under the act of the Legislature of August 21, 1871, the successors of the school commissioners created under the act of June 25, 1864, supposed they had the legal right to convey real estate, and Mr. Breed, the innocent purchaser, now finds himself threatened with litigation to perfect the title of his grantee." Upon the foregoing state of facts said committee report said bill favorably and do recommend the passage of the same.

The bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read by its title a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NEAL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. NEAL. I hope the question of consideration will not be raised now in reference to certain House bills——

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires at this time to lay before the House certain executive communications.

VACANCIES UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a tabular statement in regard to the number of vacancies that have occurred at the United States Military Academy for each year during the last five years preceding July 1, 1883; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MAIL CONTRACTS, ETC.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting the annual report of offers and contracts for carrying the mails, the report of land and water mails, report of allowance to contractors, and the report of curtailment in the service and pay of contractors; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

CONFERENCE ON POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the appointment, as an additional conferee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the post-office appropriation bill in place of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], excused by his own request, of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] as a member of that conference.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to make a privileged motion.

Mr. NEAL. I believe the special order is not yet exhausted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand that the gentleman from Ohio had anything else to present on behalf of the District Committee.

Mr. NEAL. I stated that I hoped the question of consideration would not be raised. There are a number of House bills which the committee would be glad to call up.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. REED. I desire to call up at this time the proposed amendment to the rules reported by the Committee on Rules and laid over.

Mr. PAGE. Pending that I rise to a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to move that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, without deciding whether that is a privileged motion or not, that the right of the gentleman from Maine to call up the proposed amendment to the rules is a matter of high privilege.

Mr. CARLISLE. And against that I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule.

Mr. PAGE. Does the Speaker decide that I do not present a question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Chair only decides that it is not a question of higher privilege than the motion of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to submit to the Speaker whether it is not a question of higher privilege, this being a general appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the motion of the gentleman from Maine is of higher privilege.

Mr. PAGE. Then, if I have the right to do so, I shall antagonize that motion with the motion which I have made, unless I understand the Chair to decide that I can not antagonize it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so decide; the gentleman may antagonize the motion if he so desires.

The Clerk will read the rule reported by the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

During the remainder of this session it shall be in order at any time to move to suspend the rules, which motion shall be decided by a majority vote, to take from the Speaker's table House bill No. 5538, with the Senate amendment thereto, entitled "A bill to reduce internal-revenue taxation," and to declare a disagreement with the Senate amendment to the same, and to ask for a committee of conference thereon, to be composed of five members on the part of the House. If such motion shall fail, the bill shall remain upon the Speaker's table unaffected by the decision of the House upon said motion.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Upon that I raise the point of order. If it be the purpose of the gentleman from California, chairman of the Committee on Commerce, to antagonize the motion of the gentleman from Maine by raising the question of consideration I will content myself with reserving the point of order upon the resolution reported by the gentleman from Maine from the Committee on Rules, until that question of consideration may be determined.

Mr. CARLISLE. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky raises the question of consideration. The question is: Will the House——

Mr. BLACKBURN. The point of order is reserved?

The SPEAKER. It may be reserved. The question is: Will the House now proceed to consider the rule just read?

Mr. RANDALL. Upon that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays 126, not voting 31; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, his Secretary, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed a bill and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 6957) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 337) to provide for the admission free of duty of articles intended for a special exhibition of machinery, tools, implements, apparatus, &c., for the generation of electricity, to be used in Philadelphia by the Franklin Institute;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 346) to print certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late William M. Lowe;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 347) for the printing of certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Godlove S. Orth;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 348) to provide for the publication of the memorial addresses delivered in Congress upon the late Jonathan T. Updegraff;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 349) to provide for the publication of the memorial addresses delivered upon the life and character of Hon. R. M. A. Hawk, of Illinois; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 356) accepting the invitation of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution to attend the inauguration of the statute of Joseph Henry.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

The House resumed the consideration of the report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. REED. If there is no objection, I will now call the previous question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. A point of order has been submitted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] stated, before the vote was taken on the question of consideration, that he reserved a point of order, but no point of order was disclosed to the Chair.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am ready to submit it now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The point of order I make against the proposed rule submitted by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] is that it does not constitute and is not a rule.

I do not, at this stage, undertake to discuss the scope and effect of the proposition under consideration. I certainly will waste no time in a futile effort to describe and fitly characterize the method which the majority of the Committee on Rules have seen fit to embody in this proposition, to accomplish the purpose to which their desperate strait has driven them. That will come up if this point of order be not sustained, and if the majority side of this House sees fit in its oft-employed magnanimity to allow a discussion on a proposition so radical and revolutionary as this.

At that time I will ask to be heard upon the merits, if merit there be in the arbitrary proposal to which the attention of this House is now invited. I will endeavor to confine myself legitimately and fairly to a discussion of the point of order; and I promise in advance that it shall be my best effort (and I feel sure that I shall succeed) to keep so close to a discussion of the point of order technically considered that no gentleman upon the other side shall have reason to complain.

The proposition submitted to this House is in these words:

> During the remainder of this session it shall be in order at any time to move to suspend the rules, which motion shall be decided by a majority vote.

That surely changes the existing rule of this House. We are now within the last six days of the session, and under the rules at present existing you may at any time move to suspend all rules; but in order to carry your proposition the rule requires that you shall show a two-thirds vote. The first clause or sentence of the proposition here is to accomplish that purpose by a bare majority vote. It goes on defining the purpose for which this motion may be made:

> To take from the Speaker's table House bill No. 5538, with the Senate amendment thereto, entitled "a bill to reduce internal-revenue taxation," and to declare a disagreement with the Senate amendment to the same, and to ask for a committee of conference thereon to be composed of five members on the part of the House.

The proposition is to limit and restrict the power to suspend the rules by a majority vote for the remainder of this session, and make it applicable to one bill and none other. Not only that, but you are limited and ruled down to one motion upon that bill, and that a motion to disagree with the amendment submitted by the Senate. Not only that; it goes on to declare that you shall have the power to ask for a conference—a conference upon what? Upon a bill not one sentence or line or syllable of which was ever in this House before. The bill which you sent to the Senate was an internal-revenue taxation bill. The bill which is sent back to you carries one hundred and ten pages of printed matter, not one word or syllable of which was in the bill when you sent it from this Chamber. The Senate has even changed the title—has left not an atom of your bill except the enacting clause. "Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled" is every atom of these one hundred and ten printed pages that you sent to the Senate Chamber.

Now, you are proposing here to do—what? To let a bare majority of this House suspend all rules and take up that bill for but a single motion, not to agree to the amendment of the Senate, not to consider the amendment of the Senate, but to disagree and ask for a conference, under the operation of the previous question, which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] a moment ago indicated his purpose to demand, on a great internal revenue taxation and tariff bill originating, in the face of the Constitution and against its express limitations, in the other wing of this Capitol. The gag law is to be applied to the representatives of the people, and they are to be stripped of their right to originate all bills for raising revenue.

That is not all. The proposition is that the only motion you shall make is to non-concur; that you shall not have the right to move to concur; you are limited to the motion to non-concur.

More. Unwilling to trust to a count which, if common rumor is to be credited, has been carefully made—a count made upon a written agreement signed by members on the other side binding and obligating themselves to stand for this report and to stand for the motion of non-concurrence—though with care and particularity, as rumor has it (and I doubt not correctly) you have taken time since the Kasson resolution was sent to the Committee on Rules, two weeks ago, to marshal your forces, to obligate them in every manner that is binding, unless it be in an open bond with "good and approved securities," for the performance of the contract—in the face of all this the majority side of the House dare not allow a motion which is admitted under every parliamentary law or parliamentary rule or parliamentary practice ever known among civilized men. You dare not allow a vote to be taken to concur in the Senate amendments to the text of the bill. You go further and say that when you have made your motion to non-concur—mark the last sentence of your resolution as you propose it—

If such motion shall fail, the bill shall remain upon the Speaker's table unaffected by the decision of the House upon said motion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I come to the question whether the resolution submitted can be construed as a rule of this House. What is a rule? I admit that this House as a deliberative body has the constitutional power to adopt rules under which it will conduct its business. I admit that this body has the power to change those rules in its discretion from time to time at its pleasure. But I deny that the proposition submitted here can be construed or denominated a rule. If you adopt it what happens? It goes into your Manual and list of rules as a standing rule of this House (to become in all probability functus officio within thirty minutes after its enactment) that for the rest of this session you may have this unknown, unprecedented right and power applying to a single motion upon a single bill which is no longer pending as a measure of legislation in the Congress of the United States. It is an absurdity upon its face. A rule is not a provision or a declaration that reaches to a separate, distinct, specific measure. Go back to the very authors from whom we draw all definitions, all conclusions, all accurate judgments in such matters. You will find the greatest English commentator and law-giver civilization has furnished to the world, Mr. Justice Blackstone, declares, when he comes to define a rule, as follows:

Municipal law thus understood is properly defined to be "a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state, commanding what is right and prohibiting what is wrong." (i.) Let us endeavor to explain its several properties as they arise out of this definition. And, first, it is a rule, not a transient, sudden order from a superior to or concerning a particular person; but something permanent, uniform, and universal. Therefore a particular act of the Legislature to confiscate the goods of Titius, or to attaint him of high treason, does not enter into the idea of a municipal law, for the operation of this act is spent upon Titius only and has no relation to the community in general; it is rather a sentence than a law. But an act to declare that the crime of which Titius is accused shall be deemed high treason, this has permanency, uniformity, and universality, and therefore is properly a rule. It is also called a rule to distinguish it from advice or counsel, which we are at liberty to follow or not as we see proper, and to judge upon the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the thing advised.

He says further "upon these accounts law is defined to be a 'rule.'" And so all the authors have held.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to look at the effect if that resolution shall be adopted. Tell me whether it constitutes in any just sense of the term a rule of the House of Representatives? Does it not practically constitute legislation itself? Answer he who will and tell me what is the difference between the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and the motion made by any member of this House when he asks unanimous consent to take up a certain bill and pass it? Or, to make the analogy closer, and I think identical, answer and tell me what is the difference between the proposition here submitted and that of a member of a committee who comes in when he has authority and by its instruction upon a call of committees on suspension Monday and moves to suspend the rules and pass a bill that his committee has designated and indicated? What is this but an order from the Committee on Rules to move a suspension, in order that a particular bill may be reached? And the limitations applied rule you down to a single motion and deny to this House every other right in connection with that legislation.

Mr. HOUSE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question for information?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSE. I understand under this resolution that a motion to non-concur in the Senate amendment may be made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir; that is the only motion under this rule which can be made.

Mr. HOUSE. Suppose one member of this House votes for the motion to non-concur and two hundred vote against it, do you mean to say the one man overrules the two hundred?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do mean to say that, and nothing more or less. I mean to say when that motion to non-concur is made, if there be not a single member in this House to vote for it, if the mover of the motion refuses to support it, if two hundred and ninety-two members vote against it, their vote is not counted, simply because the gag feature of this resolution refuses to allow it to be considered. It is what Blackstone has denominated, not a rule, not a law, but a sentence pronounced and that without a hearing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know I have authority, or even the semblance of authority, to express an opinion as to what is or may be the purpose of any member of this House except my own, but I do sincerely declare that I have no purpose of offering any obstruction or interposing any improper difficulties in the pathway of this House if it means to make an effort toward tax or tariff legislation.

We do not want to make threats, for we have no purpose of putting them into execution so far as I know or believe. We have come to ask what every deliberative body in this and every other country on earth has in every age of the world's history had without being forced to demand it. We have come to ask that this House if it is to be stripped of its constitutional prerogative to originate tariff legislation shall at least have the opportunity of concurring in that which the Senate may originate if it shall commend itself to our best judgment.

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, if we could lay aside all partisan prejudices, by which, I doubt not, to a degree at least we are all influenced and controlled, if we could for the instant forget the necessities of party and come to consider the proposition here reported from the Committee on Rules, I can not but believe that the unbiased judgment of every intelligent man on this floor would force him to the conclusion that it is a makeshift under party exigency and can not be fairly incorporated into the system of rules of this House. It is not a rule; it will not be a rule the day after you pass it, if indeed you pass it. You will have accomplished a specific purpose, and you will have done it—and I speak the word not with the intention of being offensive—you will have done it by a process of indirection, by a parliamentary twist of the wrist. You will have reached legislation that you can not reach inside the present limitations of the law.

The SPEAKER. The point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky the Chair would hold was made too late if it were not for the fact that the gentleman would have the right to claim that he reserved the right to make it before the question of the consideration of that rule was submitted to the House. The Chair was not advised of the nature of the point of order reserved by the gentleman; and the Chair is clearly of the opinion that it ought to have been stated before the House decided to go forward with the consideration of the resolution; for that is now the action of the House, and the Chair does not very well see how his decision now would affect that order or override the action of the House, even if it should be held that the point of order was good. The Chair, however, will take no advantage——

Mr. BRAGG. Let me inquire, Mr. Speaker, if the Chair did not state to the gentleman from Kentucky that the point of order could be reserved?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not intend or propose to take any advantage of the condition in which this resolution has been placed by the action of the House. But at the time that this reservation of the point of order was made of course it could not be foreseen what action the House would take on the question of consideration.

Mr. BRAGG. But the Chair expressly stated that the reservation of the point of order would be observed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair repeats that it has no intention of taking advantage of the situation, and remembers very well all that took place.

It is proper for the Chair to say that with the question of the constitutional prerogatives of the House, in the matter of originating revenue bills, the Chair now at least has nothing to do. That question does not enter into the decision of the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order and rests his point solely upon the claim that this resolution, if adopted, would not be a rule of the House. It would be rather early for the Chair to undertake to decide on that which is not before the House. It is reported as a rule from the Committee on Rules.

But passing that, it is perfectly competent, as the Chair thinks, for this House, when the subject is properly brought before it, to change every rule of the House and all of the rules that have been adopted by the House. And early in this session a resolution of the House was adopted authorizing the Committee on Rules to report at any time any change or modification of the rules or any new rules. That right of the committee has been exercised perhaps in this case. But in this case the Committee on Rules has reported this rule as a substitute for various propositions of a similar character that have been introduced in the House and referred to the committee. This comes from the committee as a substitute for them all.

Its effect, if the Chair is to look to that, may be, in this exceptional case named, to put aside other rules which would prevent the motion that the rule proposes to allow. But the greater certainly includes the lesser. It was in the power of the committee to report a rule to suspend the whole of Rule XX, which would require an amendment of the Senate, on the point of order being made, to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It is in the power of the committee to report to the House a proposition to suspend the rule that authorizes the suspension of the rules by a two-thirds vote. In other words, a rule might have been reported from the committee, and properly, which would suspend or repeal or annul or set aside every rule of this House, standing or special; and if the House so decided to affirm that report by a majority vote it could do so. In this case, though it may apply to a single great and important measure now pending before Congress, it seems perfectly clear to the Chair that it would be a rule to the extent that it goes; and perhaps gentlemen, on consideration, may see that in this particular case it goes far enough.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. With all proper deference to the opinion of the Chair I beg leave respectfully to appeal from that decision.

Mr. ROBESON. I wish to ask unanimous consent, as we are now within ten minutes of the time fixed for the recess, to revoke the order for a recess this evening so that we may go on and dispose of this matter. [Cries of "No!" No!"]

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me understand the proposition of my friend from New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state it. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to dispense with the special order for this evening, which requires the House to take a recess from half past 5 until half past 7 o'clock. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. ROBESON. I withdraw the request.

Mr. BLACKBURN. How long does the gentleman propose to continue in session to-night if that order is revoked?

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. The gentleman from New Jersey has withdrawn the request. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the order providing for a night session.

Mr. ROBESON. That was my intention.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I make that request.

Mr. ERMENTROUT, Mr. MILLS, Mr. SPARKS, and others objected. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. REED. I move that the appeal be laid upon the table.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And upon that I call the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I understand that the gentleman from Maine moves to lay that appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. That is the pending question. The gentleman from Maine moves to lay the appeal from the decision of the Chair on the table; and on that motion to lay the appeal upon the table the gentleman from Kentucky demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, I want to ask if we can not agree by common consent to revoke the order for the night session and go on until 6 or 6.30 o'clock, or such reasonable hour as gentlemen on the other side may deem proper?

Mr. KASSON. Let us go on until we have finished this subject.

Mr. ROBESON. My idea was that as we are all present now, we might be able to get through with this matter without the necessity of returning to-night; but I understand objection is made on all sides to dispensing with the special order, and I have therefore withdrawn the request.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If there is objection, I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the matter to the judgment of the House, if desired, again.

Mr. TALBOTT. Would it be in order to move now that the House take a recess till half past 7 o'clock?

The SPEAKER. The House in the course of a few minutes will have to take a recess in pursuance of its own order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is there objection to my proposition?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] renews the request that the special order requiring a recess to be taken from half past 5 o'clock till half past 7 o'clock be rescinded for this day.

Mr. MILLS, Mr. HAZELTON, and others objected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to lay on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair. On that question the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that there is sufficient business perhaps on the Speaker's table, Presidential messages and other matters, to occupy the time till half past 5; and if there be no objection, the yeas and nays having been ordered, those matters will be submitted and the roll-call will not be commenced before the hour for taking a recess.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBESON. If the roll-call is commenced before the hour fixed for the recess, will the roll-call stop when that hour arrives? Or what will be the situation?

The SPEAKER. Unless it was on the motion to adjourn the Chair is inclined to hold the roll-call would stop at the hour of recess. That has been held to be a motion of a different character from other business. But if a roll-call was proceeding on other business, no matter what, there would have to be a recess declared.

Mr. ROBESON. A recess declared interrupting the call of the roll?

The SPEAKER. Yes; except on a motion to adjourn. That is the Chair's understanding of the rule.

Mr. ROBESON. May I ask unanimous consent that the roll-call be postponed? Or if it be necessary to bring it about I will call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I would suggest a motion that would accomplish this. I move that the House now take a recess till half past 7.

The SPEAKER. That would not be now in order.

Mr. RANDALL. It could be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLACKBURN rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky desires to submit his proposition again.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Objection being withdrawn on this side I now ask if we can not agree to revoke the order for a recess at half past 5, with the understanding that we will go on now till 6, or half past 6, or whatever time you please?

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. That is, we will go right on and finish it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] renews his request that the special order requiring a recesss to be taken at half past 5 until half past 7 shall be set aside for this day.

Mr. HASELTINE and others objected.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is there any special order for to-night?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. ROBESON. I would like to make a privileged motion. I move that the House concur in the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations to disagree to the Senate's amendments to the naval appropriation bill and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. ATKINS. I suggest to the gentleman from New Jersey to allow the Speaker to submit to the House the various matters here referred to, and in that way we will reach the hour of recess.

Mr. RANDALL. I would suggest to the gentleman from New Jersey there might be some amendments of the Senate in which we want to concur.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion could not now be disposed of before the hour for recess arrives. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order can not be proceeded with unless the House is in order.

Mr. MILLER. I insist on my motion that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on a viva voce vote, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. MILLER. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 96.

Mr. MILLS and others called for tellers.

Mr. MILLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, the Speaker said that evidently a sufficient number had voted in the affirmative.

Mr. ROBESON. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the hour of half past 5 having arrived, the House in pursuance of its order is now in recess until half past 7 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half-past 7 o'clock p. m., the Speaker in the chair.

ADDITIONAL MEMBERS OF COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the members of the Committee on Enrolled Bills report that the labors of that committee at this period of the session are so great that they are unable to get through their work without further assistance. The Chair therefore asks unanimous consent of the House to be allowed to appoint two additional members on that committee.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as additional members of the Committee on Enrolled Bills Mr. SPAULDING of Michigan and Mr. HARDY of New York.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some remarks which I failed to make on the Congressional Library bill.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BELMONT asked and obtained leave to print in the RECORD some remarks prepared by him relative to the bill (H. R. 7417) for the free importation of works of art. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BLANCHARD asked and obtained unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some remarks prepared by him on the educational bill. [See Appendix.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MATSON, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HASELTINE. I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration a bill reported unanimously from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on a proposition which is now pending, and which is the first business in order.

Mr. HASELTINE. If unanimous consent is granted there can be no objection, can there?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HASELTINE]

asks unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 6391) to amend an act dividing the State of Missouri into two judicial districts, and to divide the eastern and western districts thereof into divisions, and to prescribe the times and places for holding court therein, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order is equivalent to an objection, and the bill is not before the House.

UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of Congress a copy of the annual report of the Government directors of the Union Pacific Railway Company, under date of the 19th instant.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, D. C., February 26, 1883.

DAMAGE BY FLOODS ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in further response to the House resolution of February 17, 1883, relative to damages by flood or otherwise to the works of channel improvement at or near Plum Point, Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in further response to the House resolution of the 17th instant calling for information as to the damage done to the works for channel improvement at or near Plum Point and at or near Lake Providence in the Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS FOR SOLDIERS OF THE MEXICAN WAR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions:

RICHMOND, KY., February 22, 1883.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The Kentucky Mexican veterans, on the anniversary of the battle of Buena Vista and the birthday of the Father of his Country, send greeting to the Forty-seventh Congress, and hope that it will not adjourn without showing its appreciation of the services of the men who added an empire to the national domain.

SPEED S. FRY,
President of the Association.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ROBESON, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back with the Senate amendments thereto the bill (H. R. 7314) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, and moved that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurrred in and that a conference be requested of that body.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER announced as the conferees on the part of the House, Mr. ROBESON of New Jersey, Mr. KETCHAM of New York, and Mr. ATKINS of Tennessee.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate further insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 7049) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, and agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. PLUMB, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BECK.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 361) granting a pension to Wellington V. Heusted;
A bill (H. R. 507) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria Worthington;
A bill (H. R. 984) for the relief of Ralph P. Ford;
A bill (H. R. 1188) granting a pension to Thomas Allcock;
A bill (H. R. 1291) granting a pension to D. D. Edwards;
A bill (H. R. 1341) granting a pension to James B. White;
A bill (H. R. 1581) granting a pension to Mary A. Conken;
A bill (H. R. 2095) granting a pension to Esther M. Carey;
A bill (H. R. 2877) for the relief of William M. Meredith;
A bill (H. R. 2912) granting relief to the heirs of Kunigunda A. Miller, deceased;
A bill (H. R. 3106) restoring the name of Mary J. Stover to the pension-roll;
A bill (H. R. 4387) granting a pension to Anthony B. Graves;
A bill (H. R. 4562) for the relief of Julia A. Stimers;
A bill (H. R. 5118) granting a pension to Elizabeth Weinstein;
A bill (H. R. 5384) restoring the name of James M. Akin to the pension-roll;
A bill (H. R. 5808) to rerate the pension of Frank S. Sowers;
A bill (H. R. 5906) granting a pension to Harriet N. Abbott;
A bill (H. R. 6400) granting a pension to Mrs. Orpah Meechum;
A bill (H. R. 6425) to increase the pension of Robert Henne;
A bill (H. R. 6524) granting a pension to George C. Rust;
A bill (H. R. 6833) granting a pension to Kate Quilligan; and
A bill (H. R. 6943) granting a pension to the widow of the late Major-General G. K. Warren.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 5771) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a pension to A. Schuyler Sutton," approved June 4, 1872; and
A bill (H. R. 6181) to increase the pension of Richard Jobes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 276) granting a pension to John C. Hargrave;
A bill (S. 319) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Virginia Zeilen;
A bill (S. 1356) for the relief of Betsey A. Mower;
A bill (S. 1530) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Major D. Williams;
A bill (S. 1546) to increase the pension of George W. Bousman;
A bill (S. 2139) granting a pension to A. M. Wilson;
A bill (S. 2218) for the relief of Mary L. Walker and Ella Walker;
A bill (S. 2367) granting a pension to Fannie S. Beaumont; and
A bill (S. 2478) granting a pension to James P. F. Toby.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. At the time the House took a recess this afternoon the pending question was upon the call of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn. The Chair does not know whether that motion should be regarded as pending or not. If not insisted upon, the Chair will treat it as withdrawn.

Mr. BRAGG. I do not understand the question to be in the form put by the Speaker. The yeas and nays by a viva voce vote had been ordered, thereupon the gentleman from New Jersey called for tellers on the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. That call was pending at the time the House took the recess.

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. TUCKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TUCKER. I wish to know whether it is in order to withdraw the motion of a gentlemen who is not present?

The SPEAKER. A recess was taken, and the Chair does not understand that the motion is insisted upon; but if it is, the question will be proceeded with.

Mr. TUCKER. I understood merely that the Speaker had said that in the absence of objection the motion would be considered as withdrawn. The gentleman who made the motion was not here. I thought perhaps he ought to be consulted in the matter.

The SPEAKER. If all the members of the House who are present consent, the Chair thinks no harm can be done by treating the motion as withdrawn, although the gentleman is not here. If there be no objection the motion will be considered as withdrawn by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] to lay on the table the appeal taken by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] from the decision of the Chair. On that question the yeas and nays had been ordered.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent to make a report at this time from the Committee on Woman Suffrage. [Laughter, and cries of "Regular order!"]

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 116, nays 97, not voting 78; as follows:

YEAS—116.

Mr. MILES with Mr. SCOVILLE.

Mr. BOWMAN with Mr. ATHERTON.

Mr. BELFORD with Mr. CURTIN.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have voted, supposing my vote might be necessary for a quorum; if not, I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's vote will be withdrawn.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, as there seems to be but little prospect of debate on this subject, I will call for the previous question.

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] whether he will allow an amendment to be offered to this proposition, so that the House may have an opportunity to vote either to concur or to non-concur in the Senate amendment to the bill of the House?

Mr. REED. No, sir.

Mr. CARLISLE. Then, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine demands the previous question.

Mr. UPSON. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 121, nays 105, not voting 65; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. BUTTERWORTH with Mr. THOMPSON of Kentucky.

Mr. CROWLEY with Mr. MATSON.

Mr. BARR with Mr. FROST.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I am paired with Mr. VAN HORN, and the pair was not announced.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Mr. MATSON by advice of his physician is confined to his room.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. SPRINGER is paired with Mr. HITT.

On motion of Mr. MCCOOK, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. REED. I suppose we have now one-half hour of debate, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] would have charge of the time in opposition.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule fifteen minutes is allowed in support and fifteen minutes in opposition.

Mr. CARLISLE. My colleague does not appear to be in the House at this moment, and I presume there will be no objection to gentlemen on this side occupying the time. For myself I wish to be heard only a few minutes, simply to say that in my judgment——

Several MEMBERS. Let us have order, so we may hear what is said.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky, and members will resume their seats and observe order.

Mr. CARLISLE. I do not suppose any amount of debate or any form of argument which might be submitted to the House will change the final result on this proposition. In my opinion it is a most monstrous proposition. It is one which for a particular purpose and to meet a particular exigency sets aside or proposes to set aside all the rules of this House and permit a majority to do just as it pleases with this one measure. It was correctly argued by my colleague this afternoon that this is not a rule but simply an order to be made for this one purpose, an order which will cease to be operative the moment the occasion passes.

But, sir, if it be the purpose of this House to set this example, then it seems to me that the friends of the measure ought at least to accord to gentlemen who differ from them the poor privilege of casting their votes according to their honest convictions and have them counted. With that view I propose to recommit the resolution with instruction that if it shall be again reported to the House it shall be so amended that the House may be permitted to vote either to concur or to non-concur in the Senate amendments. And on that at the proper time I shall ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman propose to submit this at the present time?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. CARLISLE. It may be read now as a part of my speech.

The SPEAKER. Is it proposed now?

Mr. CARLISLE. I propose it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman offer it now?

Mr. CARLISLE. I do.

Mr. REED. If it is offered now I may desire to make a point of order on it.

Mr. CARLISLE. I send it up to be read with the full understanding that it can not be voted upon under the practice of the House until the debate is ended.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to understand whether it is offered now or whether it is merely read as a part of the gentleman's remarks. The Chair desires it to be understood clearly. Is it sent up to be read as a part of the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. CARLISLE. I offer that to be voted upon at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the proposed resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the proposition now under consideration be recommitted to the Committee on Rules, with instructions that if the same shall be again reported it shall be so amended as to permit the House to vote upon a motion either to concur or to non-concur in the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 5538, entitled "An act to reduce internal-revenue taxation."

Mr. REED. I make the point of order——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I was going to ask whether this comes out of the fifteen minutes allowed for debate on this side?

The SPEAKER. Only that part that relates to the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky comes out.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well.

Mr. REED. I desire to make the point of order upon that motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED. The point of order I make is this: that there is no rule of the House, there is nothing in our system of parliamentary procedure, which permits an amendment of that kind to be offered after the previous question has been ordered by the House upon the adoption of a new rule. And in order to make the point clear, and to more fully explain the objection which I have to the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, I shall call his attention to the seventeenth rule of the House, which is the only rule that we have permitting a motion to recommit with or without instruction. If he will examine the terms of that rule he will observe that there is no allusion whatever made to a proceeding of the nature of this upon which we are engaged to-night.

Mr. CARLISLE. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. TUCKER. There never was anything of the kind.

Mr. REED. The gentleman may make a very easy catch on that statement; but if he had attended to what I have been saying he would have observed that his criticism would be more suitable and proper if he had addressed it to his own side, and by them it would be more likely to be appreciated.

The language of the rule is as follows:

The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rule, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill—

And I call attention particularly to this language—

the bill to its engrossment and third reading, and then on renewal of said motion to its passage—

That is the passage of the bill—or rejection. It shall be in order pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage—

To wit, the bill—

for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit—

That is the bill—

with or without instructions, &c.

That is the clear and explicit language of the rule.

Mr. CARLISLE. Does the gentleman from Maine claim that this rule has no application?

Mr. REED. It has no application to the pending proposition.

Mr. CARLISLE. In other words, we are to understand the remarks of the gentleman from Maine to be to the effect that he holds it is not possible to apply this rule to anything except to a bill, and that it does not apply to a motion of any kind or to any other object unless it begins "be it enacted," &c.

Mr. REED. I hold that it does not apply to a motion to insert a new rule.

Mr. CARLISLE. That is to say, the gentleman holds that the term "bill" as used in the rule is not a generic term and that the rule can apply to no motion or proposition that is not in the form of a bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the practice of this House has been always, ever since the adoption of our present rules, and the practice of all parliamentary bodies as far as I have ever had any knowledge of them is also to apply their general rules to any proposition pending before it, and upon which the House is called to vote after the previous question has been ordered. There have been propositions made here in the House to recommit resolutions; the gentleman from Texas made a similar motion.

Mr. MILLS. I made a motion to recommit the resolution creating the Tariff Commission.

The SPEAKER. That was a joint resolution.

Mr. MILLS. It was a resolution nevertheless.

The SPEAKER. But it was in the form of a bill, and required engrossment and third reading.

Mr. REED. I think the gentleman will find that it is entirely in accord with the statement I have made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to have any precedent that the gentleman from Kentucky can cite. The recollection of the Chair is that the question has been decided frequently and by himself at least once and in this session. But if there is any precedent the Chair would like his attention called to it.

Mr. CARLISLE. I am not aware of the case to which the Chair refers. I never have heard it contended before that this does not apply to resolutions as well as to bills.

The SPEAKER. The question is not a new one; it has been decided before.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, this rule to which attention has been called allows the previous question on what? The language of the rule is this:

The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion.

Now, this proposition is a single motion, and either before or after the previous question has been ordered on that single motion it is entirely competent for any one to move to recommit this single motion with or without instructions. The very object of the rule, the very object of using the expression "a single motion," or "a series of motions allowable under the rule," or "an amendment," is to make it applicable to all. The operation of that rule has been—what? We have been permitted to call the previous question on a single amendment, and having obtained it in that way it shows plainly that that rule meant there should be these distinct propositions upon which the previous question could be called, and when that single motion embraced an entire subject, as it does in this case, that it was competent to make and entertain the motion to recommit with instructions.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Will my friend from Pennsylvania allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. RANDALL. I would be glad to hear the suggestion of the gentleman.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The gentleman's question in regard to the previous question operating upon a single motion is undoubtedly pertinent and correct. But he will see, and his recollection will accord with the result of an examination of the rule, that this motion to commit with instructions or without instructions only follows upon the motion leading to the final passage of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. This is an entirety.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Pennsylvania must of course know the present Speaker has again and again ruled, and so I think has his predecessor, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that that motion can not be made except on the final passage.

Mr. RANDALL. Why, sir, this is on the final passage.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. To wit, the final passage of a bill, not the single motion my friend from Pennsylvania speaks of.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, following the line of the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine that Rule XVII by its language refers to bills or joint resolutions or resolutions of that character, and to show that the rules continually from beginning to end make distinctions between motions, resolutions, and bills, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to clause 3 of Rule XVI:

When any motion or proposition is made the question is, Will the House now consider it, &c.

Over on the next page, in clause 2 of Rule XVIII:

No bill, petition, memorial, or resolution, &c.

And scattered through the rules are many places where bills and resolutions are spoken of and other places where motions are spoken of.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] says that we have the right to move the previous question on a single motion or a collection of them. There is no doubt about that. The right to move the previous question is not called in question by anybody on this side. The right to move the previous question upon a motion is not denied. The right to move it upon a bill is not denied, because it is clearly set forth. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania would have us believe that because we can call the previous question upon a motion we could recommit the motion to a committee—a manifest absurdity not contemplated by the rule. And hence when he undertakes to make the word "motion" in this place cut the same figure as a "bill" by calling our attention to a right we have to move the previous question upon a motion, and makes that argument when we stand here discussing the question of the right to recommit, then he impliedly would make an argument to show that we have a right to recommit with instructions a motion to a committee. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is too old a parliamentarian——

Mr. RANDALL. Let me ask the gentleman a question there, whether a motion would not be in order to lay this proposition on the table?

Mr. HASKELL. I will not raise that question; if raised I will be glad to debate it.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask if it would not be in order?

Mr. HASKELL. I will be glad to debate that question when raised.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I would like to answer the question now. I say that is in order under another rule, clause 4 of Rule XVI.

Mr. RANDALL. And it is in order also under this rule. By clause 1 of Rule XVII a motion to lay upon the table is in order on the second and third reading.

Mr. REED. Of a bill. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania read the last words of the sentence? He began to quote the clause, but did not read the last words. The rule provides:

A motion to lay upon the table shall be in order on the second and third readings of a bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I say, this subject being before the House in its entirety, it is competent under that rule—and there never has been, I think, a contrary decision—for the Chair to entertain a motion to commit with or without instructions.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. And does the gentleman not see that the proposition to lay on the table is in order specifically under clause 4 of Rule XVI?

Mr. RANDALL. It is in order there too as well; but it is in order here on the second or third reading.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Not at all; because this applies to the second and third readings of a bill and the other does not.

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the proceedings of the House on the 19th day of January, 1882, being in the first session of the present Congress, when the House had under consideration certain proposed amendments to the rules, reported by the Committee on Rules. On page 338 of the Journal will be found these proceedings:

Mr. ROBESON demanded the previous question, which was ordered.

Here we have the previous question demanded and ordered by the House on the report made by the Committee on Rules.

The question being on agreeing to a motion submitted by Mr. WILLIS to the amendment submitted by Mr. PAGE;

Pending which,

Mr. JOYCE moved that the report of the Committee on Rules and all amendments pending thereto be recommitted to the Committee on Rules.

Pending which, after further debate,

Mr. SPRINGER moved to amend the motion of Mr. JOYCE by adding the following instructions, to wit:

"That the report of the Committee on Rules be recommitted with instructions to report to the House within one week an amendment to Rule X which shall provide for the appointment of the committees of the House by the House instead of by the Speaker, and that the minority of the House shall be represented on the committees as nearly in proportion to their numbers in the House as possible, and that the appointment of the minority members on each committee shall be under the control of the minority in the House, but not to affect the committees of the House as now constituted.

Mr. CALKINS made the point of order that the said amendment of Mr. SPRINGER was not in order, the House having by a yea-and-nay vote on yesterday ruled out of order a kindred proposition submitted by Mr. Orth.

That proposition had been ruled out of order the day before upon the ground that it was not germane to the proposition pending before the House.

The Speaker sustained the point of order, and the said amendment was not received.

The question then recurred on Mr. JOYCE's motion to recommit, and it was adopted.

Mr. CALKINS rose.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman will wait a moment. We have here a plain case in which the Speaker entertained and the House voted upon the proposition of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JOYCE] to recommit that report to the Committee on Rules. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] undertook to amend the motion to recommit by giving to the Committee on Rules certain instructions, and the Speaker very properly ruled that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois was out of order because the House on the day before had decided substantially the same proposition to be out of order. But the clear substantive fact that appears on the face of this Journal, that after the previous question had been demanded and ordered on a report made by the Committee on Rules to amend the rules, the gentleman from Vermont moved to recommit, the Speaker entertained the motion and put it to the House, and on a vote by yeas and nays the yeas were 159, the nays 90, not voting 49. So the proposition was sustained by the House, and the report of the Committee on Rules was recommitted upon the motion of the gentleman from Vermont. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And that was a ruling of the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. CALKINS. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to the fact that no point of order was made in that case against the motion to recommit, and consequently the question which now arises was not then presented.

Mr. CARLISLE. I said a while ago that such a point of order had never been made in this House so far as I knew.

Mr. CALKINS. But, Mr. Speaker, if the point of order was not made in that case so that it was not decided by the Speaker or by the House, does my friend from Kentucky say that that is a precedent bearing upon the present case, the point of order being now made?

Mr. CARLISLE. I do so understand, because I say in the first place that independently of this precedent the rules of this House were intended fairly to cover every proposition coming before the House upon which you may move the previous question, and were intended upon every such proposition to give the right to make the motion to recommit.

Mr. CALKINS. The gentleman will allow me to put a case. We have another rule providing that amendments changing existing law shall not be in order upon general appropriation bills unless such amendments retrench expenditures. Now, suppose an amendment had been offered and no person had made a point of order upon it, would the gentleman quote that case as a precedent against the enforcement of the rule with respect to an amendment on which the point of order was made?

Mr. CARLISLE. Not at all.

Mr. CALKINS. The gentleman might as well do so; that is the logic of his position.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas, although this whole debate is running on in violation of the rule.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the Chair will hear me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to call attention specially to the language of Rule XVII, under which this decision must be made. I think this rule ought to go into the RECORD upon this question:

There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of members present, if a quorum, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered.

There is nothing here about a bill or resolution. The language is "question or questions."

The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules—

Not a bill or resolution, but a motion or motions—or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill to its engrossment and third reading, and then, on renewal and second of said motion, to its passage or rejection. It shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee.

This all relates to a motion or motions, to a question or questions not to a bill or resolution. Now, the last clause of the rule, separated by a semicolon from the balance of the sentence, is this:

And a motion to lay upon the table shall be in order on the second and third reading of a bill.

The only place in which the word bill or the idea of a bill is presented in Rule XVII is with reference to the motion to lay on the table—not in relation to the motion to commit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, almost anywhere on earth but here I should feel like making an apology for reading this rule and calling attention to its unquestionable effect.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Speaker, I believe that under the general system of parliamentary law and under the rules which governed this House before the adoption of the present code no motion to commit with or without instructions was in order after the previous question had been ordered. If this motion to recommit be in order now, it must be so under some rule of the House. What is that rule? It is said to be Rule XVII. If the proposition that this motion is in order is founded upon that rule it can not apply to anything but bills, for this reason: when we undertake to construe a rule altering a general provision or rule of law we must construe the exception strictly. That is the first general principle. The second general principle is that if any authority for an exception be found in the rule, it must be found without doubt in the language of the rule construed according to the ordinary acceptation and meaning of language and according to the rules of grammatical construction. If these propositions are true they make the basis of my conclusion. Now let me read this provision:

It shall be in order, pending the motion for, or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage—

Observe the pronoun "its." I read the whole paragraph before I state it. I commence at the period before "its" and I read the whole paragraph on this subject: "After the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage." What substantive noun does that pronoun "its" refer to? There is none other in that passage except "the bill." "It shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee; and a motion to lay upon the table shall be in order on a second and third reading of a bill." Of a bill! That is all there is in it. Its passage? Why, the passage of the bill, and the bill is the only noun substantive there to which that provision can possibly refer. Is it anything else? Is it a motion? Is it a rule? Is it anything else except the passage of a bill? There is in all that clause nothing else to which that pronoun "its" relates.

Mr. HERBERT. If the gentleman will allow me, I will point him to something else.

Mr. ROBESON. I do not hear the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HERBERT. Let me point out to the gentleman from New Jersey the first clause of that Rule XVII.

Mr. ROBESON. I am not dealing with the first clause.

Mr. HERBERT. I know that you are not, and I want you to deal with it.

Mr. ROBESON. Then comes a new proposition, a new paragraph, which might have been a new clause, which has but one noun substantive and one pronoun. [Cries of "Rule!" "Rule!"]

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the construction of this rule by the other side is very narrow.

Mr. ROBESON. Of course it is.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. They stick in the letter possibly, but certainly they stick in the bark. I think the letter is against them.

Let us look at this rule to see what it embraces before I criticise its language. The first sentence covers the effect of the previous question when ordered. The second sentence covers the compass of its operation. The third sentence covers the time when other motions may be made before or after the previous question. The last clause is the motion to lay upon the table a bill. Of course there can be no application of the last clause of this rule to anything but a bill, because a resolution to change the rule can not get on the table. That motion to lay on the table is a proposition wholly distinct from the previous question added to the other. Let me read the rule in the light of this exposition as I understand it. And that I may do it as I understand it I will for the time leave out the second sentence. And then it would read as follows:

1. There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of members present, if a quorum, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered.

Now, if the words "question or questions" do not embrace an amendment of a rule, or the making of a new rule, pray tell me where the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] found his authority for calling the previous question on this rule? I do not know any authority but that. He has applied the previous question to a proposition to change the rules because that is the pending question.

Now, that being the effect of the rule, I come to the next sentence:

It shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage—

That is, the passage of the question, whatever it is—for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee.

Can it be true now that that second sentence in the rule does not relate to the "question or questions" in the first sentence? If we must stickle on words does not the pronoun "its" refer to question?

Now comes the compass of the rule in the second sentence:

The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill to its engrossment and third reading, and then, on renewal and second of said motion, to its passage or rejection.

Now make it read as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] wishes it read, that it shall apply to nothing but a bill, and let us see how absurd will be the language. The previous question may be asked and ordered on a single "motion to a bill." Who ever heard of a "motion to a bill?" Or a "series of motions to a bill?" And yet that is what it must mean unless the gentleman from Maine is grossly in error.

We had a like question with this the other day when the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] proposed to take up the whole section of very many pages of the House tariff bill.

Under that rule which provided for the consideration of the bill by paragraphs an effort was made to limit debate upon the whole; and they insisted that technically the word "section" could possibly, by one construction, cover the whole bill. And yet it is a fact known to the House and to the country that the gentleman from Kansas did not dare to let the Speaker decide that question; and your opinion of it, Mr. Speaker, remains to-day a secret, because your own side did not dare to ask you to decide upon such a technicality. They believed that you could not stand such miserable pleading as that.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield to me a moment?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. With pleasure.

Mr. HASKELL. I want to state for the information of the gentleman from Georgia that the motion I made the other day was a motion in order under the rules of the House, and if I thought——

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. That is what the gentleman said the other day; but we denied it, and he has never submitted it to the decision of the Chair. I repeat, sir, that he dare not submit it.

Mr. HASKELL. I want to say that if that motion would succeed in securing tariff legislation I would force it to-night.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Where is that bill? Why do you not bring up that motion, if it was a proper one, to the attention of the Chair and demand a ruling?

Mr. HASKELL. I repeat, if it would result in tariff legislation I would insist upon it to-night.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls both gentlemen to order. This debate has been allowed to run by consent, and the Chair thinks it is time now to check it. The Chair has indulged gentlemen in this discussion for a long time, and will now rule on the point of order.

Having promised to recognize the gentleman from Indiana, he will now do so, however, if the gentleman desires to be heard.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am entirely satisfied with the argument submitted by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] and do not desire to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear no further debate, then.

Mr. CONVERSE. I would like to have a clause in the Manual read before the Speaker rules.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will indicate what he refers to the Chair will cause it to be read.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire the Clerk to read a clause on page 330, covering this point.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will send it up the Chair will have it read.

Mr. CONVERSE. I will read it myself:

In the "revision of the rules" in the second session Forty-sixth Congress the rule was changed in several important respects. But one vote is now required to accomplish what formerly required two, i. e., one vote to second the demand for the previous question and another to order the main question—an unnecessary proceeding, as debate and amendment were precluded by a second. It is now in order to demand the previous question on a motion or series of motions allowable under the rules, and it may be called upon a section or sections of a pending bill or only an amendment or amendments pending. It is also in order to submit one motion, pending the motion for or after the previous question is ordered, to commit the pending proposition to a standing or select committee with or without instruction, but this motion is of course not debatable.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I would trespass upon the courtesy of the Chair for a moment——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order and will hear no further debate upon it.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I do not desire to debate the proposition; I only wish the Chair to allow Rule XXIV to be read before deciding.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that rule has no reference to the pending proposition. It includes two pages, and unless the gentleman from Maryland will refer specially to that part of the rule he desires to have read, the Chair thinks it will be a useless consumption of time.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I am sure the Chair will observe the application of the rule, if the House does not.

The SPEAKER. With reference to that part of the Digest which has just been read by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] the Chair desires to say that it follows the precise language of the rule, Rule XVII, until it comes to state that the motion to recommit may be made upon any proposition, and there it diverges.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. The Chair is so considerate I hope that he will permit me to have this rule read.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Maryland claims that Rule XXIV relates to this subject the Chair will stop the business of the House and have it read.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I think it does refer to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will then cause the rule to be read if the gentleman insists upon it.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. It contemplates a proceeding which is not with reference to a bill, but a simple resolution, showing that the motion to recommit is in order.

The SPEAKER. The rule covers two pages, and the Chair hopes the gentleman from Maryland will indicate that part of the rule which he thinks bears on the question. The Chair believes that the rule has no application whatever.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I do not desire to trespass upon the Chair or the House, but this debate has been going on on the assumption that a bill alone is referred to in this seventeenth rule. Now, the twenty-fourth rule provides that a resolution of inquiry, a simple resolution, shall go to a committee and come back in one week, and when it comes back it is in order to move to recommit it.

The SPEAKER. That has nothing to do with the operation of the previous question, which is now the pending proposition.

The Chair will state that thus far no precedent has been cited that sustains the right to recommit in the present instance. The Chair will state further with reference to the case cited by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] that it turns out on examination of that precedent that is not a precedent in support of the right to recommit as cited here for two reasons. First, that when that motion was made to recommit the previous question had not first been ordered.

Mr. CARLISLE. But, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. One moment, if the gentleman pleases. The motion to recommit was made on the 18th day of January, 1882, and according to the RECORD it appears that it was arranged between the gentleman from New Jersey on the one part and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JOYCE] that he should have that right after the time had arrived (January 19, 1882), when the previous question was ordered, as stated by the Chair at the time the motion was made. The Chair will quote the exact language used:

The SPEAKER. Under the arrangement made between the gentleman from Vermont and the gentleman from New Jersey there has been a motion made to recommit.

That was made upon the previous day. So that for that reason it is not a precedent. And for the further reason that the Chair would have entertained the motion to recommit now as it did then if no member had made the point of order. The language of Rule XVII was not called to the attention of the Chair, and no member made a point of order. For that reason the case cited is not a precedent.

Now, the difficulty seems to be in there not being time to look up the precedents. The Chair feels quite certain that the motion was made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to recommit a proposition that was presented here. The point was made and decided in this session or in this Congress—the Chair thinks in this session, but it may have been in the last. And there the Chair decided according to its then opinion of the fair reading of this rule.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Will the Chair permit me to suggest, as it is late, that he yield to a motion to adjourn and have the precedents to-morrow. It is now after 9, and this is a very important matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands its importance and does not desire to be hasty about it. If there be any general disposition on the part of the House to adjourn the Chair will not proceed. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. To test the sense of the House on that point I make the motion that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KASSON. I make the point of order that while the Chair is addressing the House a motion to adjourn is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asked permission of the Chair to make the suggestion. But the Chair does not feel inclined to yield unless such is the general desire of the House.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I am sorry the Chair retracts its permission. How can we ascertain whether the sentiment be general or not unless by a vote?

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen indicated what was the sense of the House by cries of "no," &c. The Chair does not say the gentleman from Georgia interrupted the Chair improperly.

The effect of the motion for the previous question is very clearly stated in the first paragraph of Rule XVII:

There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of members present, if a quorum, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered.

There can be no doubt but what the previous question can be asked and ordered upon a single motion, whether in writing or orally, or upon a series of motions, or upon an amendment or amendments; and it may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill to its engrossment and third reading.

The principal purpose of the previous question is to bring the House to a direct vote upon the pending question, and if other things intervene to delay such vote it must be by virtue of a plain provision of the rule.

And then—

The rule goes on to say—

on renewal and second of said motion—

After the previous question has been ordered on a bill, before engrossment and after it has been engrossed and read a third time, which is only usual with bills or joint resolutions, which under the Constitution of the United States have the effect of bills and are treated as bills for all purposes of legislation—the rule then provides that—

on renewal and second of said motion—

The previous question on the passage or rejection may be ordered. Now, the plain reading of this part of the rule is that it is dealing with the passage of a bill. Then the rule further provides:

It shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee.

It would be wholly unnecessary to use any such language in a rule if it were not for the fact that a bill has several stages through which it must pass before it can be brought to its passage. This refers, in the opinion of the Chair, to the passage of a bill and only a bill.

Then the motion to commit with or without instructions, in the opinion of the Chair, can only be made pending or after the previous question has been ordered on the passage of the bill, and it is only by virtue of the rule that that motion can be entertained.

The latter clause of this same paragraph seems to make this perfectly clear. It states that—

A motion to lay upon the table shall be in order on the second and third reading of a bill.

The Chair is of opinion that but for that clause, after the previous question was ordered a motion to lay upon the table would not be in order. It is only such motions as are expressly authorized to be made by this rule after the previous question is ordered that can be made at all, and a motion to recommit a single proposition, a single verbal motion, or a written motion can not be made, because in no stage of it can it be said, within the contemplation of the rule, to be on its passage. But on a bill which goes through its various stages to its final passage, the rule provides for a motion after the previous question has been ordered on its passage to recommit with or without instructions.

In the opinion of the Chair the point of order made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] is well taken, and it is therefore sustained.

Mr. CARLISLE. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. REED. I move to lay that appeal on the table.

Mr. CARLISLE. Upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 102, not voting 64; as follows:

So the appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid upon the table.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. BARR with Mr. FROST.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH with Mr. THOMPSON of Kentucky.

Mr. CROWLEY with Mr. MATSON.

Mr. BOWMAN with Mr. COBB.

Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. MCLANE of Maryland.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR with Mr. GEDDES.

Mr. LE FEVRE. I desire to inquire if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CRAPO] is paired?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that no such announcement has been filed with the Clerk.

Mr. LE FEVRE. I agreed to pair with that gentleman for to-morrow. As he is not here to-night, I will withdraw my vote and consider the pair as beginning to-night.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] will now be recognized to control the remainder of the time for debate in opposition to the resolution. The gentleman has thirteen minutes' time remaining.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I yield five minutes of that time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, after the rulings which have been made by the Chair on the points of order which have been submitted, I think it would be wise in a few sentences to clear away the débris in order that we may see what is the proposition which gentlemen are forcing, to use the language of my friend from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL], "on the attention of the American people."

We have here a bill from the Senate upon which there is a desire for a fair, ordinary vote. Gentlemen on the other side desire an unfair extraordinary vote on it. We desire a vote to non-concur. Gentlemen on the other side avoid that vote and say that they desire only a vote for non-concurrence.

There is a proposition submitted here which outrages every principle of parliamentary procedure. It is a sinister mode of conducting our proceedings. Why should I say so? On the authority of our rule, which says:

> The question which first arises on a resolution, amendment, or conference report is on concurrence. As the negative of concurrence amounts to the affirmative of non-concurrence, no question is afterward put on the latter motion.

It being the object of all votes of this character to bring the two Houses, if possible, into agreement.

It is a part of the very science of legislation—the refinement of legislation—that we should, if possible, concur with what has been done in the other House.

Gentlemen come here and say to us: You shall have a vote to non-concur; you shall not have a vote to concur. And therefore we are to have no debate on the propositions submitted to us from the Senate; therefore every principle of parliamentary law, all the traditions belonging to the popular branch of the Legislature, to the popular representation, are outraged by this lopsided proposition of gentlemen on the other side.

For one I am opposed to making general rules for specific cases; it is neither reasonable nor just nor parliamentary. You propose to make a case for a single bill here, and call it a rule. Why, sir, it is no rule. A rule is something uniform; a regulation; a rule of conduct; a law unto the House. This is not any rule, except a gag rule.

I am therefore opposed to giving up the "privileges of the commons" to gentlemen on the other side who do not any more represent the people of this country on this question. For myself, if I stand alone here, I will not vote on this matter simply to give you non-concurrence. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I will vote for the old rule, first to concur and then to non-concur; but never one vote of mine shall be given here on this mode of procedure. [Renewed applause on the Democratic side.] It is a fraud on parliamentary law; a fraud on all that is just and fair in our politics; it is revolutionary. [Continued applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now yield four minutes of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE].

Mr. HOUSE. "Whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad." The animus and the object of this extraordinary proceeding is well understood in this House, and it will be equally well understood by the country. The report made from the Committee on Rules is a crime against the American people, who will hold the party responsible that dares to commit it. It is an open, unblushing attempt to concoct in the secret chamber of a packed conference committee a tariff bill which the promoters of this movement know can not be passed upon the floor of this House under the rules which govern it. It is an attempt by an indefensible, arbitrary, revolutionary act, to wrest from the representatives of the people the right of legislation—to tie their hands and to deny them even the poor privilege of lifting their voices in protest against it.

When before, Mr. Speaker, in the legislative halls of a free people was such an outrageous effort ever made? One single bill, designated by name and number, the proposition being applicable to no other bill and no other occasion, has been selected here; and a majority of this House virtually say to us, "We will make a motion to non-concur in the Senate amendments. If that prevails, all right; we will have our conference committee. If a majority shall vote against the proposition to non-concur, then the vote shall not be counted; it shall go for naught."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask now that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], who is controlling the time on the other side, will go on and leave the minute or two, whatever it is, remaining to this side to be employed at a later stage of the debate.

Mr. REED. I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON], and will then yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the Speaker to hold in reserve whatever time I may have.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, "a crime against the American people!" "An outrage upon the American people!" What is this "crime" we are about to commit? What is this "outrage" by which the people are about to suffer? Taking off from $60,000,000 to $75,000,000 of taxation from their backs and restoring freedom to the business of the country. [Applause on the Republican side]. "A crime against the American people" to hear the voice of their President, that has been sounding to us for two years in favor of diminishing the burdens that afflict the business of the country, and giving satisfaction to the demands of the people. This is the "crime" that we are charged with attempting to perpetrate. God grant the Republican party may never attempt to perpetrate a worse crime than this!

Mr. Speaker, why do we want this rule? We want to reach the bill by which alone this relief can be furnished to our people. Some rule of this kind has been no sudden thought. For nearly three weeks it has been under consideration on both sides of this House; and, sir, if we were disposed to leave its propriety to rest upon the inconsistencies of its opponents we might safely do so. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] who first spoke told us that by this rule we are attempting to secure a vote of non-concurrence and send the bill to a conference committee before it has been considered by the House; that one hundred pages of the bill have not been considered by the House, and therefore he is opposed to the adoption of a rule which shall secure its consideration by a legitimate committee of this and the other House. The two gentlemen who last spoke complain because we do not give them an opportunity to vote at once to concur in the bill and make it a law before a committee of the House or the House itself has read these one hundred pages. One objects to any action because it enables us to consider what is in the bill; the others object to any action because we do not allow them to pass the bill and make it a law without consideration. That is the attitude of the opposition on this floor.

Now, is it necessary to have the bill considered? I have here a few words which I think will be regarded as authority by gentlemen on the other side of the House. What I am about to read has appeared in print within a day or two, and was received by me in a letter today. I will give the name of the writer presently:

To the editor of the Evening Post:

> SIR: Looking over the Senate bill passed and now before the House, I must say that the passage of the bill as it now reads would, in my opinion, be almost a commercial calamity. By that I mean to say that its absurdity of language and numerous contradictory provisos are of a nature that will throw the importing business into endless litigation. The effect would be that importation, especially of iron, steel, and its manufactures, will be hampered and duties will be paid under protests. The reason for all this confusion can only be found in the numerous interests that clamored for some advantage, and the frequent amendments that were made without a proper knowledge of the cost or quality of the article legislated on.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KASSON. This, with more of the same sort—— [Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. REED. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. KASSON. This, with more of the same sort, is written by the man known as the "Parsee Merchant," who has, in the view of the other side of the House, furnished more information to the opponents of tariff legislation than any other man, American or English. That is his declaration about this bill, which we on this side say should be revised before we are asked to vote ay or no on its passage. Let this bill be considered; let the reductions which are proper be made; let its clauses be harmonized; let the merchants of this country know what duties they have to pay. Instead of this mixture of provisos and innuendoes, let us have a clear, intelligible law; let us make a reduction of as many millions as can be taken off with safety to the interests of the country; and then happy shall we be to let gentlemen on the other side vote to concur or non-concur in the conference report.

Mr. REED. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] claim credit for relieving the people of this country of $75,000,000 annually in the shape of taxation by refusing to the Representatives of this House the right to vote a concurrence in that legislation of relief? Does he appeal to the author of anti-tariff information and quote him on the House and at the same time tell us that he dare not go into Committee of the Whole to consider and perfect the legislation in progress?

Mr. KASSON. In the last six days of the session.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, the founders of this Government were so jealous of that taxing power they declared by a provision of their fundamental law that nowhere on this broad continent should a revenue bill find its origin except in the American house of commons, among the representatives of the people. They declared it must originate and come from the representatives of sovereigns, and not from the representatives of sovereignties. They refused to allow the American house of lords to have that important power in their keeping, removed as they were from all popular expression of opinion. And yet we find this rule, or proposed rule, by which we are confronted virtually gives over to the other wing of the Capitol not only the power of origination of revenue bills, but the right under the manipulations to which it is subjected here to strip the representatives of the people of any right to consider, to debate, or to amend.

Now, sir, I do declare, and I believe that the sober judgment of this House will sustain the declaration, that nothing but partisan necessity, nothing but dire strait of political danger, could ever have suggested or driven the majority to a resort as revolutionary as this.

In the English Parliament the House of Lords is not permitted to amend a revenue bill. It must take it as it comes from the Commons, and dare not offer to change it. For one I will never agree to surrender here in an American Republic to a representative body that does not come directly from the people a power that is deemed in monarchical England too valuable and too sacred for the people to abandon. You may pass this rule, if rule it be, and I say now, and I speak but for myself, for I disclaim the authority to speak for any other, you will never do it by my assistance either by an affirmative or a negative vote on this proposition, for they mean the same thing. You have got your majority in your seats—you may not have a constitutional majority to pass it.

Other gentlemen may do as they deem best, but for one, in the face of the vote upon the passage of your rule, I wipe my hands of all responsibility and tell you that if this revolution is to be accomplished, if this outrage, repeating the expression that seems to have stirred up, if not to offend, my friend from Iowa [Mr. KASSON]—if this outrage is to be effected, for me your side shall be alone responsible; I will have none of it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I think it eminently suitable in closing this discussion, if I happen to do so, that there should be some plain statement of the actual situation of affairs. And I trust I may be able to show, in what I have to say, somewhat more consistency of idea than that presented by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], who with one breath blames us for not giving him a chance to vote for the Senate bill without consideration, and at the next breath proclaims it a constitutional outrage to take a vote upon the subject of the Senate bill at all. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

I admit that the proceedings here to-night are unusual in their nature and very forcible in their character. I admit that unless there was a great emergency I should not be in favor of the passage of this rule. And it therefore becomes us carefully to consider whether or not the state of legislation and of the country is such as to justify our action.

At the beginning of this session it was understood that there should be a revision of the tariff. We had submitted the question to a commission for information; and judging from the readings of the testimony taken by them made on the other side, they evidently furnished that side with about all the information that they had on the subject. [Laughter.]

Having, therefore, determined and announced to the country that we would undertake to accomplish a revision of the tariff gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber began, from the very first word and line of the schedules, a systematic course of determined obstruction. Will gentlemen tell me they were interested in glue and crude soda and chemicals to the extent that their talk would indicate? Every man in this House, whether on the floor or in the galleries, knew that that talk was for the purpose of defeating any consideration of the serious and important schedules of the tariff. And there was witnessed day by day a race between this House and the other as to who should finish its work first.

And hence we find ourselves face to face to-day with a bill which in my judgment was got up without due reference to the principles which should govern under our Constitution. Why is it that the question is not raised here to-day? Why is it that the gentleman from Kentucky contents himself with language upon the subject, instead of a resolution bringing that subject directly before the House and complaining of the violation of the Constitution which he alleges has taken place? Why is it that no one else brings it up? It is because the country so earnestly desires of us a revision of the tariff, if a proper revision can be made, that it would be impatient of any mere legal objections. And why is it that they so desire it in the last days of a session and in the face of a constitutional objection? I will tell you, Mr. Speaker. It is because the business men of this country dread to fall into the hands of the Democratic party which in a moment of mistake they have elected. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is because they know that the business interests of this country are in danger from the gentlemen on the other side. That is the true origin of the clamor that is pressing upon us to-day.

But on the other hand it is our duty like men to stand up against any clamor which may be unreasonable. While we desire a revision of the tariff we desire an honest and careful revision of it. We do not desire to silence the clamor, which may be merely temporary, at the expense of the destruction of the business interests, which destruction will be permanent. These are the reasons why we believe that this bill should go into a committee of conference, and why this bill ought not to be passed by the House without considering its schedules.

Whenever gentlemen complain against us and say that this rule is a violation of the ordinary principles of parliamentary law, I say to them it is true that the ordinary principles of parliamentary law look toward an agreement and not a disagreement between the two Houses. But in a bill like this, in a bill containing as many items and carrying as many business interests as this does, it is the universal custom, it has been always the custom, to have the voice of difference settled in the quiet of a conference committee [derisive laughter on the Democratic side], where the various interests can be laid before them, and then finally be laid before the two Houses for their deliberate judgment. I repeat, it has been the universal custom. I defy any man to point to anything else or show a contrary practice. And even gentlemen who smile out loud know what I say is the truth; and it is the truth that they raise their clamor upon.

Mr. BLACKBURN. May I ask the gentleman from Maine a single question.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; of course.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Maine how he knows that there is any point of difference between the two Houses on this question?

Mr. REED. How do I know it? Why, every man knows it; the instructor of the gentleman whose language has been read on the floor by the gentleman from Iowa has shown that it is plain there is a difference. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. To whom does the gentleman refer when he speaks of my "instructor?"

Mr. REED. Oh; I beg the gentleman's pardon; I referred to the other gentleman from Kentucky; one who is instructed on this subject. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate has expired. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CARLISLE. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 120, nays 20, not voting 151; as follows:

During the roll-call,

Mr. HITT said: I am paired with my colleague from Illinois, Mr. SPRINGER, on political questions, but with the condition that I should be permitted to vote to make a quorum. Therefore I now cast my vote and vote "ay."

Mr. NEAL. I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BLAND, but it was understood I should vote if necessary to make a quorum. I therefore vote "ay."

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. VALENTINE with Mr. CLARDY.

Mr. NEAL with Mr. BLAND.

Mr. MASON with Mr. RICHARDSON of South Carolina.

Mr. BROWNE with Mr. ATKINS.

Mr. CURTIN with Mr. BELFORD.

Mr. ROBESON. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I object.

The names of members voting were read.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the ayes are 120, the noes are 20.

Mr. BLACKBURN. On a matter so important as this I feel bound to make the point that a quorum has not voted.

Mr. ROBESON. A quorum not having voted on this roll-call I move that there be a call of the House. There is evidently a quorum here.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The record does not show it.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] that no quorum has voted. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] moves a call of the House.

The motion of Mr. ROBESON was agreed to, and a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following-named members failed to answer:

Atkins,	Dwight,	Mason,	Scranton,
Beltzhoover,	Frost,	Matson,	Shelley,
Black,	Geddes,	McLane, Robt. M.	Singleton, Jas. W.
Bland,	Herndon,	Money,	Skinner,
Bowman,	Hewitt, Abram S.	Mosgrove,	Smith, Dietrich C.
Buckner,	Hoblitzell,	Moulton,	Springer,
Burrows, Jos. H.	Houk,	Pacheco,	Taylor, Ezra B.
Cabell,	Jones, Geo. W.	Paul,	Thompson, W. G.
Camp,	Ketcham,	Phelps,	Updegraff,
Cobb,	Latham,	Phister,	Wait,
Cornell,	Mackey,	Richardson, J. S.	Wood, Benjamin
Crapo,	Marsh,	Robinson, Wm. E.	Wood, Walter A.
Davidson,	Martin,	Ryan,	Young.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. MOORE. My colleague from Tennessee, Mr. HOUK, was compelled to leave the House on account of sickness.

Mr. MCKINLEY. My colleague from Ohio, Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, is absent on account of sickness. He remained in the House as long as he possibly could.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MONEY, came to me and said he had to leave the House as he was feeling very ill, and asked me to secure him a pair.

Mr. ROBESON. I beg to inquire of the Chair, does the roll-call reveal a quorum?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. ROBESON. Then I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The roll-call shows 237 members present. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] moves to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HASELTINE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on a viva voce vote, the Speaker stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 78, noes 86.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. ROBESON, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. BLACKBURN.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 97, noes 96.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. HASKELL and Mr. CANDLER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being but 17 in the affirmative—not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 27, 1883.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. MOSES D. HOGE, D. D., of Richmond, Virginia.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. HOAR and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

NOTICE OF RESIGNATION OF THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication, which will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

VICE-PRESIDENT'S CHAMBER, February 26, 1883.

To the Senate:

In view of possible exigencies that might affect the public service, I deem it proper to give notice of my intention to resign the office with which the Senate honored me, at noon on Saturday the 3d of March proximo.

DAVID DAVIS.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, a copy of the annual report of the Government directors of the Union Pacific Railway Company under date of the 19th instant.

The copy of the report referred to accompanies the message to the House of Representatives.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 26, 1883.

REPORT OF DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring therein), That 9,000 copies of the report of the Director of the Mint on the annual production of gold and silver in the United States be printed; 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Director of the Mint.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Montana; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

House joint memorial concerning pleuro-pneumonia in cattle.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memoralists, the council and house of representatives, composing the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana, most respectfully represent:

That one of the chief industries of this Territory is the growing of neat-cattle for export and sale, and many of our citizens have large sums of money invested in that business. We hear with alarm that contagious pleuro-pneumonia is prevalent among cattle in the States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Maryland, and the District of Columbia, and that it is a disease exceedingly difficult to cure, if it is not wholly incurable; that the raising of neat-cattle for export and sale on the pasture lands of the Western States and Territories is yearly growing in importance, and that herds of cattle kept entirely for milking and dairy purposes are not uncommon with those who are engaged in these industries; a laudable spirit of improvement is manifest, and every year a large number of thoroughbred cattle are brought from the older States to the grazing ranges of the West; that the great transcontinental lines of railways and their network of branches are rapidly penetrating to all the valleys and grazing ranges of the West; that there is imminent danger of the importation of diseased cattle into these grazing ranges, while the possibility of spreading the direful contagion all over the United States and Territories by the indiscriminate use of cattle-cars that may have been used in the transportation of diseased cattle, and thereby become infected, is deemed a serious cause of alarm; that the system of breeding and rearing cattle on the great grazing ranges of the far West is such that if the contagion is once inoculated into the herds in these ranges it would be a matter of utter impossibility to take any precautionary measures to check the ravages of the disease, and it would of a necessity have to be allowed to run its devastating course until it had swept the country from the Rio Grande to the British line, and every hillside and valley, every spring and water-course, all the shady groves and natural places of resort for cattle, would be contaminated by the carcasses of animals that had fallen by the disease, where, from the very nature of the surroundings, circumstances, and conditions, they must lie unburied, to spread the germs of contagion until nature shall counteract their effect. The efforts thus far put forth by the States where it exists for its suppression have proven wholly ineffectual, and the prevalence and spread of the disease is damaging our export trade in live cattle to the amount of many millions of dollars annually. In our judgment the disease is so widespread, so virulent, and so damaging to the cattle-growing interests as to become a matter of national importance, well deserving your immediate action. We, your memorialists, therefore respectfully request the passage of some measure by your honorable body which will tend to effectually eradicate this fearful disease, and if no better or surer method is offered we would beg leave to suggest the purchase by the Government of all cattle affected by the disease, and their immediate destruction. Trusting that you will appreciate the vital importance of this matter to the business of cattle-growing, we, your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

ALEXANDER E. MAYHEW,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
GRANVILLE STUART,
President of the Council.

Mr. COKE. I present five several memorials, signed by a large number of citizens of Texas, protesting against any increase of tax upon iron ties and bands used in baling cotton. I move that the memorials lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COKE presented a petition of Patrons of Husbandry, Dodge Grange, No. 58, Walker County, Texas, praying that the House bill creating the office of Secretary of Agriculture may be taken up and passed; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JONAS. At the request of the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY], who is detained from his seat by sickness, I present a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Arizona, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorial to the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives, and honorable Secretary of the Interior, asking for a commissioner to investigate matters at Papago reservation.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives, in Congress assembled, and the honorable Secretary of the Interior:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Arizona, respectfully represents: That in the year 1873 the President of the United States issued an order setting aside a large tract of land situated in the county of Pima, in this Territory, to be used as a reservation for the Papago indians. That the setting aside of said lands encroached upon one of the most important settlements in our Territory, the lines of said reservation reaching to within five miles of the city of Tucson, and embracing fully one-third of the arable and irrigable land within said county; that prior to the setting apart of said lands and up to the present time the Indians have made no use of said lands but simply withheld it from public use and occupation.

That years before the President ordered these lands to be set apart a large number of families had settled thereon and were engaged in the occupation of farming and stock-raising; that these settlers continued to live upon and occupy their lands without molestation whatsoever till the 1st day of January, 1882. Upon that day a certain Roswell G. Wheeler, who at the time was United States Indian agent for the Pima and Maricopa Indians, accompanied by a force of fifty armed Papago Indians, visited the farms of the above-mentioned settlers and, without having given them any former notification, drove them from their homes, burned and razed their houses to the ground, and drove their herds to the hills, where they were slaughtered indiscriminately by his Indian allies; that the citizens who were thus driven from their homes were of the most peaceable and law-abiding of our Territory; that the act of said Indian agent, Roswell G. Wheeler, in destroying the property was uncalled for, unjustifiable, and grossly wanton; that the said settlers have been unable to obtain redress in the courts of the Territory, the judges claiming they have no jurisdiction in the premises.

Wherefore your petitioners pray that a commissioner or board of commissioners be appointed to investigate the matter set forth in this memorial with a view to the revoking of the President's order of 1873, remunerating said settlers for their loss of property, and restoring them their lands for use and occupation: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the secretary of the Territory be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit at once a copy of the foregoing memorial to the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, the honorable Secretary of the Interior, and to our Delegate in Congress, and that our Delegate in Congress be, and he is hereby, requested to use all honorable means to bring this matter to their earnest and favorable consideration.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a memorial of a committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York in favor of an appropriation by Congress to continue the work on the improvements in Charleston Harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I present a memorial in the form of a telegram, protesting against the passage of an act to prevent the employment of members of the typographical union at the Government Printing Office, signed by Samuel Gompers, chairman legislative committee of Organized Trade and Labor Union of the United States; one signed by Richard Lyon, president of the Buffalo Type Union, and several others, all of the same nature and all of which are requested to be entered as memorials. I send them to the Secretary's desk, and ask their reference to the appropriate committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The telegrams will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have a telegram in the nature of a petition, which I present. At a meeting of the Trades and Labor Assembly of Indianapolis, representing the organized labor of that city and vicinity, they passed a resolution and forwarded it to me to be presented to the Senate, which I do. I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read, if there be no objection.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Trades and Labor Assembly of Indianapolis, representing the organized labor of this city and vicinity, earnestly protest through Senators against any action forbidding employment of members of typographical union in Government Printing Office.

STEVE. A. BEDEL,
President Trades Assembly.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a paper signed by Mr. A. W. Thompson, president of the typographical union of Cleveland, and a similar one from Cincinnati, stating that a bill is pending here disqualifying union printers from holding situations in the Government Printing Office. I am not aware of any such bill or proposition being made here.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is no such bill and no such proposition, and no such intimation has been made in the Senate, or, to my knowledge, in the other branch of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. Still I present the memorial. The persons who send these dispatches must be under a misapprehension, for I do not know of any such proposition as they describe as having been made here.

Mr. ANTHONY. Nobody proposes to proscribe the members of the typographical union.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am very glad to have the assurance of the Senator from Rhode Island. I did not know that he intended to make such a statement, and it was not with the view of an intention of that kind on his part that I presented the resolutions. It is possible, however, that the trades union at Indianapolis have got such an impression at that distance.

Mr. ANTHONY. The impression is wholly unfounded from anything that I know of. All that has been proposed is that the Government Printer may be allowed to employ non-union compositors as well as union compositors.

Mr. LAPHAM. I desire to state that I received several telegrams yesterday to the same import, and I answered the parties that there were no such propositions pending.

Mr. HAWLEY. Perhaps as others are doing so I ought to acknowledge the receipt of two or three dispatches, but I took them as being directed to myself personally rather than to be intended for presentation to the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. I am in receipt of a telegram addressed to my colleague and myself from the printers' union to the same purport; and I hope the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island will be the answer which ought to be made to that telegram and will be noticed by the senders.

Mr. PENDLETON. I have a similar dispatch from the typographical union of Cincinnati pertaining to the same subject, and I ask that it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will lie on the table.

Mr. PENDLETON. I present also a memorial of the Soldiers and Sailors' Memorial Association of Cincinnati, protesting against the consideration by the Senate of the House bill affecting the present pre-emption, homestead, and timber-culture laws. "It is ordered that the action be telegraphed to you that it may be laid before the Senate." I move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JACKSON. I have a resolution from the typographical union of Memphis, Tennessee, addressed to myself and colleague, on the subject just referred to about the Printing Office. I move that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I have received a telegram from the Philadelphia Typographical Union, in which they protest against action of which they are apprehensive.

Mr. ANTHONY. What is the action.

Mr. BLAIR. Action hostile to the typographical union. I do not propose to lay the telegram upon the table. I merely call attention to the fact that I have received the telegram. I do not think it is in a form which makes it proper to be laid on the table of the Senate.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I present a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, to this effect:

The chamber of commerce heartily approving of the joint resolution proposed in Congress by Hon. WILLIAM R. MOORE, of Tennessee, making provision for rescinding the eleventh article of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and for the legal enforcement of the obligations of contracts entered into by any of the States of the Union, respectfully request the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Wisconsin to support and vote for said joint resolution, as the best way now open to bring the States in default on their public obligations back to credit and their former good name.

I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GROOME. I present to the Senate certain documentary evidence relating to the application for the relief of Eliza J. Yarnell, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions, before which a bill is pending for her relief.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I present the petition of quite a number of professors and officers of colleges, which I will read:

ILLINOIS WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY,
Bloomington, February 12, 1883.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The National Observatory by its efficiency in the past has proved that its existence and maintenance are demanded by the highest interests of the country, both general and scientific.

Its efficiency in the past has been the result of its superintendency being under the immediate control of men of marked scientific attainments.

Believing that the present management of the observatory is inefficient and detrimental to the highest interests of science, we petition as follows:

1. That Congress take immediate steps to place the control of the National Observatory solely in the hands of a skilled scientific corps who will maintain its reputation and subserve the highest ends of its existence.

2. That the building of the proposed new observatory be placed under the control of the Secretary of the Navy, aided by a commission of scientific men who know practically the needs of such an institution.

W. H. H. ADAMS,
President Illinois Wesleyan University.
H. H. DE MOTTE,
Vice-President and Professor Mathematics.
SUE M. D. FRY,
Professor Belles Lettres.
CHAS. M. MOSS,
Professor of Greek.
ALBERT J. NAST,
Professor of Latin and German.
LUCIEN M. UNDERWOOD,
Professor Geology and Botany.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I present resolutions adopted by the Chicago Stock Exchange approving of the joint resolution introduced in the House of Representatives by Hon. W. R. MOORE, of Tennessee, making provision for the repeal of article 11 of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States. I move that these resolutions be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND. The eleventh amendment prohibits suits against a State by citizens of another State in United States courts; and its repeal is a very important and grave question. Of course I do not suppose the committee will be able to consider the question at this session, but I should like to hear the resolutions read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows.

Resolutions adopted by the Chicago Stock Exchange and ordered presented to the Congress of the United States.

Whereas article 11 of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States has taken from the citizen all redress in the courts for injustice done him by a State, and for loss sustained by reason of a State passing a bill or law impairing the obligation of its contract with him: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That this exchange heartily approves of the joint resolution introduced in Congress by Hon. W. R. MOORE, of Tennessee, making provision for the repeal of article 11 of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and for the legal enforcement of contracts entered into by any of the States of the Union.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State, with a request that they do everything in their power to facilitate the early passage of the joint resolution proposed by Hon. WILLIAM R. MOORE, of Tennessee.

A copy from the records of the exchange.
Attest:
WM. C. NICHOLS, Secretary.

CHICAGO, February 21, 1883.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7314) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GEORGE M. ROBESON of New Jersey, Mr. J. H. KETCHAM of New York, and Mr. J. D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee managers at the conference on the part of the House.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BAYARD. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4999) for the relief of E. S. Montell, executrix of the estate of James E. Montell, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration. This bill has passed the Senate at a former Congress; it has also passed the House previously, and now has passed the House again. In two minutes it can become a law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Acting Secretary read the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am perfectly willing to pass this bill; but we have eight or ten House bills now on the Calendar reported at the last session, and others reported at the beginning of this session, reported favorably from the committees of the Senate.

They are entitled to equal precedence with this bill just reported. It is not fair, it is not right that a committee shall come in near the close of the session and insist that its bills shall be taken up when reported. We have time, if we will join in it, to take up and pass all the House bills and do equal and exact justice to others. Those of us who have heretofore made reports of House bills favorably from committees are placed in a condition to be censured all over the country, inasmuch as we neglect to attend to those cases upon the Calendar. I must ask that this bill take its place on the Calendar. I have a motion pending, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has a motion pending, to proceed to the consideration of the House cases reported favorably on the Calendar; if that is done, equal and exact justice will be done to all of us, and none of us will be placed in a condition to be censured and reprimanded for not calling up the House bills we have reported. I have House bills on the Calendar to-day, and I am getting letters from half the States in this Union urging me to have them taken up and passed upon. I have no excuse in the world, no pretense if I let every bill that comes here from a committee go through unless the others shall be taken up by unanimous consent and passed.

Mr. MORRILL. A single objection defeats action on the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It takes it over.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask leave to submit a report from the Committee on Finance of another House bill, the bill (H. R. 6308) for the relief of C. H. Miller. I do not ask to have the report printed, because it was not printed by the House. It is a mere informality in the transfer and assignment, a technical objection in the Department being raised so that relief cannot be granted under present law. The bill ought to be passed, but I do not ask for its present consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Just as soon as we get through the morning business I am willing to take up the House cases and pass them all. We can do it in thirty minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill reported by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Chair was the bill for the relief of Montell before the Senate, or was it merely read for information?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was read for information. That is always done.

Mr. BAYARD. Does a single objection prevent its consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course.

Mr. BAYARD. I regret it was made, simply because the bill would have passed but for the objection of the Senator from Missouri in less time than he took to object to it. Every one knows that it is after all a practical question. I think we ought to do all that can be done for both public and private interest here; but because all can not be done, I do not understand the policy that objects to anything being done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One objection takes the bill over.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back a message from the President of the United States, with the report of Mr. George Earl Church on Ecuador. I ask to have it printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. BECK. I should like to hear it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is impossible that it should be read; it is too long.

Mr. BECK. I should like to know what it is.

Mr. WINDOM. It is a report made by Mr. Church in compliance with the direction of the Secretary of State in 1881 upon the condition of Ecuador, covering its agricultural, its commercial, and all other interests, so far as I know.

Mr. BECK. I only wanted to know what it was.

Mr. WINDOM. It is simply giving information in reference to that country. The Committee on Foreign Relations examined it somewhat.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to offer a resolution of inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order at this time.

Mr. CAMDEN. Mr. President——

Mr. HAWLEY. Is the matter regarding Ecuador disposed of yet?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] has the floor.

Mr. HAWLEY. I refer to the Ecuador matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print was made; that was all.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will waive any objection. It is a large document and one of those things that swell the expenses of the Printing Office. I do not know that it is necessary. It is probably a very useful essay upon Ecuador, two years old.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It is full of information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut object to printing the paper?

Mr. HAWLEY. I make no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had asked if there were any objection.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5558) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Bayard, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BARROW, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5103) granting a pension to Margery Nightengale, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1443) granting a pension to Edgar B. Lamphier, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. TABOR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1860) granting a pension to Daniel M. Morley, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3743) granting a pension to Miss Amanda Stokes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Joint Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4926) for the relief of Charles Kortzenborn, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6189) donating cannon to the White Haven (Pennsylvania) Soldiers' Monument Association, reported it adversely, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5735) donating condemned cannon to the city of Lynn, Massachusetts, reported it adversely, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2460) to authorize the Secretary of War to turn over to J. A. Mower Post, No. 59, of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Stromsburgh, Nebraska, one condemned cannon and forty stands of condemned muskets, reported it adversely, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. These bills are reported adversely for the reasons heretofore given in the printed reports made by the same committee. I am also directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 140) granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Hastings, Nebraska, in the month of September, 1883, to report it adversely; and I move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. By direction of the same committee I am authorized to report back adversely the joint resolution (H. Res. 357) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan tents to the Ex-Soldiers and Sailors' Association at Columbus, Ohio, and to the Grand Army of the Republic at Denver, Colorado, recommending that it be indefinitely postponed for the reasons heretofore given in the reports presented from the same committee.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6923) granting a pension to Mrs. Helen M. Thayer, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAIR. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to report adversely the bill (H. R. 4992) for the relief of John R. Smith. I ask that it be placed on the Calendar, and I call the attention of both the Senators from Indiana to the case. Both of them have spoken to me in regard to it.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the case?

Mr. BLAIR. It is the case of John R. Smith, where it is claimed there has been a mistake in rating by the Pension Office and that he should have a corresponding increase for a certain period of time.

Mr. HARRISON. How is it reported?

Mr. BLAIR. It is reported adversely by the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that it go on the Calendar.

Mr. VOORHEES. What is the bill?

Mr. BLAIR. It is the case of John R. Smith, of which the Senator has spoken to me.

Mr. VOORHEES. I join in the request that it go on the Calendar so that we may have time to consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. BLAIR. I have drawn no formal report, but the action of the committee is adverse.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 814) making Saint Vincent, in the State of Minnesota, a port of entry, in lieu of Pembina, in the Territory of Dakota, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6501) granting a pension to Patrick Horan, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 306) for the relief of Abbie Sharp, reported it without recommendation.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2324) for the relief of Drusilla H. Swanger, reported it without recommendation.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Select Committee to Investigate and Report the Best Means of Preventing the Introduction and Spread of Epidemic Diseases, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 333) validating certain contracts executed by the Postmaster-General, reported it without amendment.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7314) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was Ordered, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia.

HAWAIIAN RECIPROCITY TREATY.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 122) providing for the termination of the reciprocity treaty of January 30, 1875, between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report theron, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the bill (S. 742) to repeal an act entitled "An act to carry into effect a convention between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, signed on the 30th day of January, 1875," approved on the 15th day of August, 1876, and the joint resolution (S. R. 20) as to giving notice to terminate the convention of June 3, 1875, with His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, asked that the committee be discharged from their further consideration and that they be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WINDOM. I tried to get the floor before the order of the Senate was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was no order made. The joint resolution was simply placed on the Calendar.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to move to refer both joint resolutions and the bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is a question which I think belongs to the Committee on Foreign Relations rather than to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks to refer the bill and joint resolutions to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORRILL. I trust that will not be done. This matter after full consideration was referred by the Senate to the Committee on Finance. It has been carefully considered by that committee and the report made. It will be open for the consideration of the Committee on Foreign Relations or any member of it. I trust therefore that it will not at this late hour be referred to any other committee.

Mr. WINDOM. It is a very remarkable order it seems to me for the Senate to take upon a proposition to abrogate a treaty without permitting the Committee on Foreign Relations to consider it. I think it never has been done before in the history of the Senate. We simply ask that the Committee on Foreign Relations may have an opportunity to consider it. The Senator from Vermont says that after full consideration it was referred to the Committee on Finance. I think many Senators voted to refer it because they expected that both committees would consider it. It does seem to me that it is in violation of all the rules and courtesies of the Senate to act upon a proposition abrogating a treaty without permitting the Committee on Foreign Relations to consider it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The Senator from Vermont stated when the reference was made to the Committee on Finance that he would offer no objection when he made the report to having it referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the Senator from California is correct, and I withdraw the objection. I also remember that I stated at the same time that the Committee on Foreign Relations would be understood to be under obligation to report back the measure either adversely or favorably so that we could have action upon it by the present Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He made that statement.

Mr. WINDOM. Has the subject passed from the consideration of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on referring the joint resolutions and the bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is agreed to. The Senator from Vermont agrees that that shall be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont agree to that?

Mr. MORRILL. I do not object to the reference; but I still insist, as I did on a former occasion, that the Committee on Foreign Relations are not to bury this proposition so that the Senate can not have some control of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill and the joint resolutions with the accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORRILL. They will be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be printed, of course.

SOLDIERS' HOME AT WASHINGTON.

Mr. SEWELL. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1821) prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, to report a recommendation that the Senate non-concur in the amendments. I move that the Senate non-concur and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. LOGAN, Mr. SEWELL, and Mr. HAMPTON were appointed.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT FOR 1883.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I rise to perform the melancholy duty of reporting a joint resolution, on which I suppose our committee will be voted down. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 331) for the printing of the Agricultural Report for the year 1883, have instructed me to report it with amendments. The resolution as it came from the House provides for the printing of 300,000 copies, at an expense of $220,000. The Committee on Printing have taken the liberty to recommend that the number be cut down one-third, which will reduce the expense to about $150,000. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution. The proposition of the committee might as well be voted down this morning as at any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read for information.

The joint resolution was read; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Printing with amendments, in line 3, to strike out "three," before "hundred," and insert "two;" in line 5, to strike out "two," before "hundred," and insert "one;" in line 6, to strike out "fourteen," before "thousand," and insert "forty;" in line 7, to strike out "fifty-six," before "thousand," and insert "forty;" and in line 8, to strike out "thirty," before "thousand," and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

That there be printed 200,000 copies of the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1883; 140,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, 40,000 for the use of members of the Senate, and 20,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand 300,000 is the usual number.

Mr. ANTHONY. That was the number last year.

Mr. COCKRELL. And has been for a number of years.

Mr. ANTHONY. The number has been constantly increasing until it has got up to 300,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand it has been 300,000 for four or five years.

Mr. ANTHONY. It was 300,000 last year. I do not remember what it was the year before.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was 300,000 the year before and the year before that.

Mr. ANTHONY. I dare say. The Senate has always voted for the largest number.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would not say a word about it except that you can buy all you want for about 5 cents a copy. You can buy a cart-load for about 5 or 10 cents a volume. It shows how much they are needed.

Mr. ANTHONY. A year or two ago there was a deficiency, owing to some mistake in the Printing Office, in the number of copies printed, and instead of reprinting the report the Public Printer bought the needed copies at second-hand bookstores at very much less than the cost of printing.

Mr. COCKRELL. How are they bought? They have to be first printed, and those Senators and Representatives who happen to be from States and districts not agricultural I suppose let them pass from their hands in some way or other, and they thereby get into the hands of the second-hand book-sellers. Those who represent agricultural States can not supply the demand that is made for them when we get 711 copies each under the 300,000 printed.

Mr. ANTHONY. There would not be enough if every Senator had a million copies. There is no limit to the demand for books that are given away.

Mr. COCKRELL. You can buy at the second-hand bookstores public documents of which Senators get only three or four copies, documents that are exceedingly valuable. You can go to a second-hand bookstore and generally get such a document before it is delivered here at the document-room.

Mr. BLAIR. I will say that I long represented a rural district, agricultural almost wholly, and I never saw a farmer yet who was not glad and thankful to get a copy of this report. If there are copies wasted it is because they are not properly sent to the agricultural population. I think the report improves from year to year, and I do not believe the farmers are likely to get any larger number than they ought to have. There may be frauds in the distribution; I know not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. VOORHEES. What is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It reduces the number of copies from 300,000 to 200,000.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I want to say a word on this subject. There has certainly been an abuse in connection with the matter of public documents. Who is responsible for it I do not pretend to say. I do not wish to reflect upon anybody, but there has been a great abuse in regard to furnishing Agricultural Reports. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] says that he represents an agricultural country and they are sought after. I know that is pre-eminently true. There is no book for which Congress spends money that is so much sought after or so welcome in the farming communities as this work on agriculture. Whether all of it is valuable or not—there is not a publication but what contains something of value, some new suggestion, some thought that practical and experienced agriculturists take up and improve their work upon.

I do not think that I have had my quota as a Senator in three years, nor scarcely any portion of what I am entitled to of that work. I doubt if I have a book of the kind at my command now, and I can hardly remember when I had. I do not know why it is, but I know it ought not to be this way. The reports are back, I do not know how long. I ask the chairman of the committee how far they are behind in the publication of the Agricultural Reports?

Mr. ANTHONY. The Commissioner of Agriculture has adopted a new system in regard to the reports by which they will be furnished to members of Congress a year earlier. This is the report of 1883, which generally has not been ordered until December of that year. But I am surprised at the Senator saying he does not get his quota. They are printed and they are sent here, and I am quite sure that the officers of the Senate must fulfill their duties in distributing them to Senators according to their quota.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask the Senator what is the last year for which they have been published and distributed to Senators?

Mr. ANTHONY. For 1881 and 1882. The Commissioner put 1881 and 1882 in one volume so as to bring it up to the level chronologically, including eighteen months in the last report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let me speak a moment to the amendment. I am opposed to cutting down this publication a single volume, and I call attention now to this proposition.

Mr. ANTHONY. Cutting down how?

Mr. VOORHEES. I understand the amendment is to reduce the number to be published.

Mr. ANTHONY. The last one that is already printed has been furnished. The Commissioner brought it up to the time of the publication, putting in eighteen months instead of one year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana is speaking about the number.

Mr. ANTHONY. I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to know what number of the reports it is proposed that we are to have.

Mr. ANTHONY. The committee propose to reduce the number from 300,000 to 200,000.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am opposed to that, and in the interest of the agriculturists of this country, who get less benefit from the money that is spent here than any other class, I shall stand by their right at least to have a full supply of agricultural information. I hope that this amendment will not be adopted. Economy is a nice thing; I like it; but when it becomes a question of saving a drop and wasting a bucketful at some other place it is not so attractive to me.

A class of persons come here in public life who seem to think that they will incur great favor at home by causing the clerks in the Departments to work an hour more in a day, and they call that economy. Others come here and propose in the interest of economy to take a few books away from the old farmer's fireside, and waste millions upon millions upon unfinished and impossible ironclads in private ship-yards. That is not my kind of economy. I would commence upon the large things and then the small things would take care of themselves. I stand here for a book a piece for all the farmers in this country if necessary. We spend money on every other interest most freely, but when it comes to an interest like this it seems that a spasm of economy seizes upon certain Senators and affects the action of Congress in a very small way.

I do not believe that the people appreciate this kind of saving. I do not believe the farmers of this country will applaud the action of Congress in limiting and curtailing the publication of information of value to them. I do not believe they will think better of this Congress in its closing hours when we economize at the expense of their information.

For that reason, Mr. President, I shall vote against this amendment, and I hope it will be voted down. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment. ["No! No!"] Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, let us have the yeas and nays. I want to see the economical Senators put their names on the record.

Mr. VOORHEES. Those who do not want the yeas and nays need not call for them; I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Printing, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the committee already read are really one amendment, the subsequent ones depending on reducing the number named in the first amendment from 300,000 to 200,000. The question will be taken on all together.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. I do not know how he would vote on this proposition, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. FAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY].

Mr. McDILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. McDILL. Understanding from his colleague [Mr. GEORGE] that the other Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] would vote "nay" if here, I vote "nay."

Mr. ROLLINS. I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES].

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 42; as follows:

YEAS—12.

Anthony,	Frye,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Wis.,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Edmunds,	Hawley,	Platt,	Van Wyck.

NAYS—42.

Barrow,	Garland,	Jonas,	Pendleton,
Bayard,	George,	Lapham,	Pugh,
Beck,	Groome,	Logan,	Ransom,
Blair,	Grover,	McDill,	Slater,
Brown,	Hampton,	McMillan,	Tabor,
Call,	Harris,	McPherson,	Vest,
Camden,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hill,	Miller of Cal.,	Walker,
Coke,	Ingalls,	Miller of N. Y.,	Windom.
Davis of Ill.,	Jackson,	Mitchell,
Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,	Morgan,

ABSENT—22.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Kellogg,	Saunders,
Allison,	Farley,	Lamar,	Sewell,
Butler,	Ferry,	Mahone,	Vance,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	Plumb,	Williams.
Conger,	Jones of Florida,	Rollins,
Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANTHONY. Now I wish my friend from Indiana would make the motion to carry out what he indicated as his desire to have a book apiece for every farmer. I think it would be likely to pass in the present temper of the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. VOORHEES. There are a great many good things in this world that I wish for that I can not expect Congress to carry out. I should be glad to have every farmer have a book of this kind for himself and one for his wife and children, but I am not going to ask Congress to furnish it.

Mr. ANTHONY. The remaining numerical amendments fall with the first one, but there is another amendment making an appropriation for this printing. We are in the habit of ordering printing to be done and not making appropriation for it, and then condemning the Printing Bureau for its extravagance. There is an amendment making an appropriation. It was put at $150,000. Let that be made $220,000. It was fixed at $150,000 for the reduced number.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is to add to the bill:

And the sum of $220,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to defray the cost of publication.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator whether that is the estimate of the cost? It appears to me larger than usual.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the cost of last year's publication. This resolution is passed in advance of the publication in order that the book may be out at the next assembling of Congress.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Was not the report for two years included in the last appropriation? This is for one year.

Mr. ANTHONY. It was eighteen months in the last report, but the number of pages was the same. It will take that amount of money undoubtedly.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. ANTHONY and Mr. MORGAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CAMDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

IMPROVEMENT OF CHARLESTON HARBOR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired, and unless some Senator objects to the introduction of further morning business the Chair will receive it.

Mr. BUTLER. I have a resolution of inquiry to offer which I have been trying to get in for an hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first order is "the introduction of bills and joint resolutions." If there are no bills or joint resolutions to be introduced, "concurrent and other resolutions" are in order.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish the Senate with any information, recently received, he may have in regard to the condition and progress of the work for the improvement of Charleston Harbor in addition to that transmitted with his letter of January 3, 1883, in response to the Senate resolution of December 13, 1882.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be directed to ascertain whether the land grant to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company under the act approved July 27, 1866, has not been forfeited, and what further proceedings are necessary to subject said lands to disposal as a part of the public domain of the United States; and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. Let that go over until to-morrow.

Mr. MORGAN. Then let it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and go over.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WINDOM. If the morning business is closed, I wish to move an executive session.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to ask for a vote on the resolution I offered yesterday in regard to the order of business.

Mr. WINDOM. I want to make my motion as soon as morning business is closed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to modify the order so that after the pending pension bill is disposed of we proceed to consider House bills favorably reported. That is the substance of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the Senate proceed to the consideration of pension bills reported favorably; second, to House bills reported favorably.

Mr. SHERMAN. I modify the first clause so as to proceed to the consideration of the pending pension bill, and then to House bills reported favorably.

Mr. FRYE. There were some pension bills reported this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A pension bill is the unfinished business.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am told there are some pension bills reported to-day.

Mr. COCKRELL. They will be reached as House bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. House bill 1410 is the unfinished business, and the Chair would simply suggest that perhaps the order had better be modified so as to read that after the disposition of the unfinished business the Senate proceed to the consideration of pension bills and House bills.

Mr. MORGAN. The present unfinished business will come up after the morning business is completed, under the Anthony rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill was left as unfinished business yesterday, as the Chair is told.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The pension bill was the unfinished business when we adjourned. It will come up at 1 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read as modified.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the Senate proceed to the consideration of pending pension bills; second, House bills reported favorably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not correct. "After the unfinished business is disposed of," the Senator from Ohio wants it.

Mr. BECK. Is that agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not yet.

Mr. BECK. I desire to make a request as soon as that is agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to have the Senator who offered the proposition explain it. Does he mean that this is to be a standing order, or only for to-day?

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe we can get through to-day, but whether to-day or to-morrow I have no doubt this will be the most rapid and beneficent way of disposing of our time, to consider the House bills that are favorably reported from committees. We can do it rapidly. I would be willing to confine it to those reported at this session, but there are some bills reported at the last session not yet disposed of. I would commence at the place we left off on the Calendar and take up the House bills favorably reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would not be right, because a single objection has carried over a good many House bills that ought to be acted on. If we are to pass any more Senate bills at all, it seems clear to my mind that we ought now to give them a preference. If we are going to have a division of work as to the bills of the two Houses, instead of taking them as they come, we ought to begin with the Senate bills, so as to send them over to the House as early as possible, because they will require action of the House. The House bills that are passed without amendment will require no further action in that body, and consequently we can pass them down to the last moment of time. Therefore it appears to me that this proposition as offered is to put a quietus upon the passage of any Senate bills, because by just as much as hour by hour we delay the passage of a Senate bill, by so much we delay the opportunity of the House of Representatives considering it at all. So I should think, if we are to try to go on with the Senate bills at all, that we should proceed to-day to consider Senate bills favorably reported that are on the Calendar.

Mr. MITCHELL. It was the intention of the Pension Committee to propose to the Senate to consider, first, Senate bills favorably reported, and second, House bills favorably reported, for the reason stated by the Senator from Vermont. My judgment is that that would be the best way of proceeding now, to go through with Senate bills reported from the committee where there are minority reports, where the cases are contested; there are a number of those cases on the Calendar, and we desire action upon them. There are no Senate pension bills unacted on where there are not minority reports, except those presented this morning, which are not yet on the Calendar.

I suggest, therefore, that the Senator from Ohio modify his resolution, so that the Senate after the disposition of the unfinished business proceed to the consideration of Senate bills reported favorably, and secondly to House bills.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish now during the few hours that are left, which will not be appropriated by the Appropriations Committee, to do the largest amount of business that will be effective. If we commence at the point reached when the Calendar was last under consideration we can go through with great rapidity the House bills that have been sent to us and have been on our Calendar and require our concurrence. In that way we can dispose of the greater number of bills, taking up only those that are reported favorably. We should waste no time about contested matters. I believe that is the best way. We formerly acted in that way, though I do not know whether it has been so in the last few years. If we have any time left after disposing of House bills we can take up Senate bills, and if there is any bill of special importance that in the opinion of a majority of the Senate ought to have precedence that can be taken up on the motion of any Senator at the proper time and considered. I think if there are no special cases of that kind the best way to dispose of our time is to devote ourselves to considering the House bills favorably reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are several special cases. There is one bill, the Utah bill that we have had under consideration and partly finished, that is of great public importance to anybody who cares anything about making an end of the polygamy of Utah. Therefore it appears to me that the better way is, as I said before, to go on for to-day with the Senate bills and then we can take up in time to dispose of them the House bills which will not need further action on the part of the House.

So I move to amend the order proposed by the Senator from Ohio by striking out the word "House"—if that is the word there—and insert "Senate," so as to go on now with the Senate bills favorably reported. That will test the judgment of the Senate as to which we had better begin with.

Mr. PLATT. May I inquire precisely what is the question before the Senate, and whether it refers to anything beyond the morning hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It refers to all day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It becomes a standing order of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. The hour will be consumed in talk.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know whether I can make the motion I propose to make, though I think it will be in order. First, I should like to inquire if the pension matter which was under consideration yesterday is not the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. Then I move to take up now House bill No. 6018.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a resolution of the Senator from Ohio before the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. Then I should like to state why I hope it will not pass. I ask to have it read first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pending pension bills after the unfinished business is disposed of; second, House bills reported favorably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is to strike out "House" and insert "Senate" before "bills" in the second clause.

Mr. PLATT. I hope that will not pass, for this reason: The House of Representatives passed a bill, which is far down on the Calendar, No. 6018, which relates to the recovery of damages for the infringement of patents, and I think I know that a majority of the Senate desire to act upon it. It has been reported from the Committee on Patents unfavorably, substituting in place of it Senate bill 1238, which was reported some time ago by the Senate Committee on Patents. I hope that this resolution will not pass, and if it does not I will move to take up this bill.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Connecticut whether there is not a better prospect of reaching this bill under the resolution as a House bill which has not been unfavorably reported, because it has been reported favorably with an amendment in the nature of a substitute? Is there not a greater likelihood of reaching the bill, in which I feel great interest, as a House bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly; I think there is no question of it.

Mr. HARRISON. Than there would be by attempting to make it a special order?

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that we can reach the bill and pass it, but I shall vote against taking it up now.

Mr. PLATT. I simply give my opinion about it, that if we wait to reach it on the Calendar as a House bill it will not pass in time to become a law at this session.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it will.

Mr. INGALLS. The only sensible thing to do is to keep on talking about what we shall do until the time is all gone, and then nothing can be done!

Mr. BECK. I rise to make a request; I do not know if the Senate will grant it. There are now two House bills on the table of the Senate, and which passed the House unanimously, which were examined by the Committee on Finance and there agreed to, relative to allowing articles to be brought in free of duty for the Louisville exposition and the Denver exposition. I hope they will be allowed to pass. They are exactly in language of similar acts for the centennial exposition, and I believe they are approved by all.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am in favor of those bills, but I believe the only just and fair way is to take up the House bills and act upon them in order. I think we shall reach those cases.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Ohio will allow me a word. I was not able to be in the Senate all day yesterday, and shall not be to-day and perhaps to-morrow, being engaged in the Appropriations Committee. If the Senator from Ohio will take charge of those bills and call them up I will not ask for their consideration now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will take charge of those two bills when they come up in their order, and see that at least they have a fair chance.

Mr. BECK. That is all I care about.

Mr. FRYE and others. Let us have a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to strike out "House" and insert "Senate," so that Senate bills shall be first considered after pension bills instead of House bills.

The amendment was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 13, noes 27.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the adoption of the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. The Chair would ask whether it is the intention to go back to the commencement of the Calendar, or to the point last reached in its consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The intention must be according to the written order of the Senate. We must take that for our guide.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to avoid all misapprehension, I propose to commence at the point reached when the Calendar was last under consideration under the Anthony rule.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope that will not be done, because there are some bills which were passed over without prejudice owing to the absence of Senators interested in them and for other causes. We certainly ought not to exclude such bills. They are entitled to preference, if anything.

Mr. SHERMAN. They have had their call; and I think it would be better to commence at the point reached when the Calendar was last under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio modifies his resolution.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to have clearly stated the existing order of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of the Senator from Ohio will be read as modified.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pending pension bills after the unfinished business it disposed of; second, House bills reported favorably, commencing at the point reached when the Calendar was last under consideration.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the question is taken I should like to have the existing order stated.

Mr. VOORHEES. The existing order is House bill No. 1410.

Mr. BLAIR. But there was an order yesterday in regard to what cases should be taken up. Are not the pension cases now in order?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. BLAIR. They are enough to keep us at work a day or two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as modified by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I call for the yeas and nays. It is a very important order, which cuts off all action on Senate bills.

Mr. SLATER. I desire to ask a question in relation to the resolution now proposed, whether the wording of it prevents the consideration of cases on the Calendar prior to the point that we last reached?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It commences at the point where the Senate last left off when the Calendar was under consideration.

Mr. SLATER. Suppose prior cases were passed over without prejudice?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That point was raised by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] a few moments ago. The Chair can not tell what is meant by it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand the present order excludes all bills passed over without prejudice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is clear.

Mr. SLATER. That would be manifestly unjust. There are a number of cases passed over simply without prejudice because of some momentary objection. Those cases ought not to be excluded.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator refer to House bills that have been passed over?

Mr. SLATER. House bills or Senate bills.

Mr. INGALLS. There are not three House bills passed over in that way.

Mr. VOORHEES. We shall be wasting our time on matters that will come to nothing if we go on considering Senate bills, for the House will pay no attention to them. We had better take the Calendar up at the point indicated by the Senator from Ohio and pass on the House bills. I hope the order will be made.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCDILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR]; but I understand that if present he would vote "yea" on this question, and I vote "yea."

Mr. SLATER (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 37, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—37.

Barrow,	Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,	Saulsbury,
Bayard,	Garland,	Jonas,	Sawyer,
Brown,	George,	McDill,	Sewell,
Butler,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Call,	Grover,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Camden,	Hampton,	Mitchell,	Walker,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harris,	Morgan,	Windom.
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Pendleton,
Coke,	Hill,	Pugh,
Conger,	Ingalls,	Rollins,

NAYS—16.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Mahone,	Plumb,
Anthony,	Frye,	Miller of Cal.,	Ransom,
Blair,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck,
Davis of Ill.,	Lapham,	Platt,	Vest.

ABSENT—23.

Allison,	Ferry,	Jones of Nevada,	Saunders,
Beck,	Groome,	Kellogg,	Slater,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	Lamar,	Tabor,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Logan,	Vance,
Fair,	Jackson,	McPherson,	Williams.
Farley,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,

So the order was agreed to.

STATUE TO GENERAL W. H. LYTLE.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the action of the Senate last Saturday on the bill (H. R. 6408) granting eight condemned cannon to be used in the erection of a statue to the memory of General William H. Lytle, of Ohio. The report was made by the Military Committee, and the bill was indefinitely postponed. I have consulted with the gentleman who made the report, and it is entirely agreeable to him that that order should be reconsidered and the bill placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reconsideration? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be regarded as reconsidered and the bill placed on the Calendar.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE ATTORNEYS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to call up for consideration and passage the resolution I offered on the 14th of February, asking for certain information.

The resolution was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish to the Senate copies of vouchers and items audited by the First Auditor of the Treasury on account of expenses incurred by the Department of Justice since January 1, 1882, with the names of special or assistant attorneys, and by what authority in law he audited the bills and accounts of said special or assistant attorneys.

MAJOR WILLIAM LUDLOW.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent to pass a joint resolution giving Major Ludlow leave of absence because Philadelphia wants him on the 1st of March, and it is an exception to the rule, I think. I do not know of anybody who objects to the merits of the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the merits, but I do not make any objection to taking it up. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is the objector now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we ought to go through and see if we can not make some progress under the order just made.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope this will be allowed to go through.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection if others have none. It is not for me to regulate the order of business; but the Senate have adopted an order and I hope they will stick to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If any Senator asks unanimous consent, of course the Chair does not interpose.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is a great public service to which I think there is no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is to accommodate one private gentleman.

Mr. HAWLEY. No, sir; it is to accommodate one million of people.

The Acting Secretary read the joint resolution (H. Res. 355) to authorize Major William Ludlow, United States Army, to accept a civil position, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

It permits Major William Ludlow, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, to accept a civil position in the service of the city of Philadelphia, without a forfeiture of his military commission. This permission is to terminate on the 1st day of April, 1885, and Ludlow is not to receive from the United States any pay or allowance whatsoever during the period of his absence from the military service.

Mr. HAWLEY. The resolution is unanimously reported by the Military Committee. The Secretary of War approves it. The city of Philadelphia by its councils, a majority of both parties, and by a memorial of leading citizens, say they want Major Ludlow, and they want him to commence on the 1st of March for the management of the new waterworks, involving millions of dollars. They have looked around and found him about the only man they could get.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the resolution before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir; there was no objection, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the letter of the Secretary of War read.

Mr. HAWLEY. Here it is. It is a short letter, and I send it to the desk to be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, February 19, 1883.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th instant in reference to Major Ludlow, Corps of Engineers, asking whether the granting by Congress of permission to Major Ludlow to accept a civil appointment as chief engineer of the water department of the city of Philadelphia, with a leave of absence for two years, without pay, would, in my judgment, impair the service or militate against the discipline of the Army.

I have the honor to state that Major Ludlow has been nearly nineteen years in service, and I am advised that he has devoted himself during that time assiduously to his duties, having only had a little more than five months' leave of absence, while under the regulations he would have been entitled to nearly fourteen months more, with full pay. It is understood that it is Major Ludlow's purpose to resign from the Army on or before the expiration of the proposed leave if he should find his new occupation congenial. If an officer of his rank and services desired to enter civil life and should make application for a leave of absence of twelve months, accompanied by his resignation, to take effect on the expiration of such leave, it would be granted. Four months of that leave would be on full pay and the remainder on half pay. I am advised by the Chief of Engineers that the proposed leave to Major Ludlow can probably in no way prejudice the interests of any other officer in the way of promotion or otherwise, and inasmuch as Major Ludlow wishes to waive all pay during the leave, I see no objection to his application being granted.

I inclose to you a statement of the military service of Major Ludlow.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to put in my earnest but unavailing opposition to this measure; not because Major Ludlow is not a very fine officer—that is one of the reasons why it ought not to pass I think—but because it does disturb the order of the Army and it is unequal and unfair to other officers. Casualties naturally occur which may entitle Major Ludlow to promotion while he is rendering no service; or else it will stop all promotion during this period of two years. The general law of the United States prohibits officers of the Army from taking office under any other prince, power, potentate, state, or sovereignty whatever, or being employed by them. Now we come to personal and special legislation for one gentleman and for one city because that city has peculiar confidence in his capacity as an engineer to build a water-works. Major Ludlow is unwilling to resign his place in the Army for the purpose of taking this civil appointment, but wishes to hold the opportunity to return to the Army at or before the expiration of the two years. Therefore, it is special and personal legislation, against the general intent, effect, policy, purpose, and fairness of the statutes of the United States.

In the next place, if this be a civil appointment, as the resolution says it is, that he is to take, it is directly in the face of the constitution of Pennsylvania, which like the constitution of Vermont and the constitution of nearly every State, if not every State, absolutely prohibits any person from holding any office or appointment under the authority of the State while he holds one under the United States. My friend from Connecticut says that he has discovered or is informed that this is not a civil appointment, but it is only a private employment that the city of Philadelphia under its municipal charter is authorized to make, making this gentleman a municipal officer and that the Philadelphia lawyers hold that such a municipal officer does not come within the prohibition of the constitution of Pennsylvania.

That is all I have to say. I think it is a wrong principle; it is special and personal legislation against the statutes of the United States and it is bad in every way of principle and policy that I can think of. My duty is done.

Mr. HAWLEY. Only one word. The legal point is decided. I have shown it to the Senator and can show it to others. It has been decided in favor of his right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not as this resolution states it.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SLATER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 48, nays 6; as follows.

YEAS—48.

So the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading.

It was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. Before that question is put, as the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations is on his feet, I should like to ask him if his committee have reported the resolution in regard to international arbitration.

Mr. WINDOM. It has not been reported yet.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the committee will be able to report that resolution before the Senate adjourns. It attracts the interest and attention of a large number of our philanthropists.

Mr. WINDOM. We hope to have another meeting, and may possibly get time to consider that subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After four hours and twenty-seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 361) granting a pension to Wellington V. Heusted;
A bill (H. R. 507) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria Worthington;
A bill (H. R. 984) for the relief of Ralph P. Ford;
A bill (H. R. 1188) granting a pension to Thomas Allcock;
A bill (H. R. 1291) granting a pension to D. D. Edwards;
A bill (H. R. 1341) granting a pension to James B. White.
A bill (H. R. 1581) granting a pension to Mary A. Conken;
A bill (H. R. 2095) granting a pension to Esther M. Carey;
A bill (H. R. 2877) for the relief of William M. Meredith;
A bill (H. R. 2912) granting relief to the heirs of Kunigunda A. Miller;
A bill (H. R. 3106) restoring the name of Mary J. Stover to the pension-roll;
A bill (H. R. 4387) granting a pension to Anthony B. Graves;
A bill (H. R. 4562) for the relief of Julia A. Stimers:
A bill (H. R. 5118) granting a pension to Elizabeth Weinstein;
A bill (H. R. 5384) restoring the name of James M. Akin to the pension-roll;
A bill (H. R. 5808) to rerate the pension of Frank S. Sowers;
A bill (H. R. 5906) granting a pension to Harriet N. Abbott;
A bill (H. R. 6400) granting a pension to Mrs. Orpah Meacham;
A bill (H. R. 6425) to increase the pension of Robert Henne;
A bill (H. R. 6524) granting a pension to George C. Rust;
A bill (H. R. 6833) granting a pension to Kate Quilligan;
A bill (H. R. 6943) granting a pension to the widow of the late Major-General G. K. Warren;
A bill (H. R. 7321) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department; and
A bill (H. R. 7486) to prevent the importation of adulterated and spurious teas.

RATES OF PENSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill No. 1410.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1410) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], in line 7, to strike out the words "or shall have suffered disability equal thereto."

Mr. BLAIR. I suppose perhaps as the reports stand in the Senate the first question may be upon the indefinite postponement of the bill. But I rise in the absence of the chairman of the committee, assuming charge of the bill only during his temporary absence. I do not know but that he may be in the room now.

Several Senators desire that the consideration of the bill shall go over until to-morrow morning, and that the Senate shall now or very soon adjourn. I do not think that that action should be taken unless it can be the unanimous understanding that the bill be taken up immediately after the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow, and that when the Senate adjourn it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock in the morning. We have been here for many hours shut up in this close room, this box, in this fetid atmosphere, and if it is thought generally that it would be better to adjourn, I think as a friend of the bill I would make no objection; but we ought to commence upon it immediately after the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow, and to meet at 10 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it would be utter nonsense to adjourn to meet at any hour before 11 o'clock. We can not get a quorum before 11 o'clock and several committees must meet in the morning. The committees can not meet so early as 9 o'clock. I think it would be much better to spend an hour longer here now than to come here so early in the morning as 10.

Mr. VEST. What is the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BLAIR. I have made no motion; I have simply made a suggestion, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, taking charge of the bill temporarily. I expect him in the room every moment. Many Senators express a desire to adjourn at this time, and I was not objecting to that if there can be a unanimous understanding that we shall take the bill up immediately after the conclusion of morning business to-morrow, and that when we do adjourn it be to meet at 10 o'clock.

Mr. MORGAN. We can not get that understanding.

Mr. VEST. I suggest that we had better go on with this bill for a little while, anyhow. I understand that some Senators wish to address the Senate upon it. We can listen to one or two speeches this evening.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] striking out the words "or shall have suffered disability equal thereto," in line 7. That is the only motion that has been made.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not the standing order of the Senate to meet at 10 o'clock, unless otherwise ordered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. HOAR. So that it requires no unanimous consent to meet at 10 o'clock.

Mr. BLAIR. It would require an understanding with reference to taking up the bill immediately after the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator is quite certain that will be done.

Mr. BLAIR. I hardly think that will be done if there is not a unanimous agreement for the purpose.

Mr. ROLLINS. I wish to suggest that if there is any real purpose to act on the bill, it seems to me that it would be proper to continue the consideration of it at this time.

Mr. PLATT. This bill was reported to the Senate, as I understand, adversely by a majority of the committee. How does the Senate get charge of the bill to consider it unless a vote is first taken on the indefinite postponement of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If anybody moves to postpone the bill indefinitely, that takes precedence.

Mr. HARRIS. No motion has been made to indefinitely postpone. The majority report recommended that the bill be indefinitely postponed, but that is not a motion.

Mr. PLATT. I do desire that vote, but I did not know but that it was necessary to vote on that question.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator will not insist on that motion just at present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was not agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 20, noes 22.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, to be composed on the part of the House of five members.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1342) authorizing the trustees of the Isherwood estate to amend a certain plan of subdivision of said estate recorded in the land records of the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 2316) for the relief of Daniel Breed;

Joint resolution (S. R. 123) providing for the termination of articles numbered 18 to 25, inclusive, and article numbered 30 of the treaty between the United States of America and Her Britannic Majesty, concluded at Washington May 8, 1871; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 355) to authorize Major William Ludlow, United States Army, to accept a civil position.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments on the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the message of the House of Representatives returning the bill.

The Acting Secretary read the message, as follows.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 27, 1883.

Resolved, That the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, to be composed on the part of this House of five members.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked for on the part of the House.

Mr. MORGAN. The first question is, Will the Senate take up the bill for consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate at the present time consider this motion?

Mr. MORGAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not a conference report. The Chair begs pardon. The matter is before the Senate now, and the question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. HARRIS. Before that question is put I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont, as the action of the House is somewhat unusual in the fact that it appoints five conferees on this bill, if that action is to be acquiesced in; that is, if we grant the conference is it his purpose that we appoint the usual number of conferees on the part of the Senate?

Mr. MORRILL. No; it is my purpose to ask the Senate to appoint the same number of conferees on the part of the Senate that the House have already appointed on their part. We have no joint rule on this subject, and there may be appointed whatever number each House may see fit.

Mr. HARRIS. So I understand.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to ask the Senator how it is intended to select the conferees on the part of the Senate?

Mr. MORRILL. If I could have any voice about it I would have the Chair appoint them, and I would advise the Chair to select three from the Republican side and two from the Democratic side.

Mr. INGALLS. Irrespective of their views about the particular features of the bill?

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think we can select them exactly with particular reference to their views.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that the Senate insist on its amendments to the revenue bill and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to inquire whether the bill in the shape that it is now before the Senate is a privileged question; whether it presents a question of privilege, and whether the Senate is now bound to suspend the regular order and take this bill up?

The PRSIDENT pro tempore. It is done usually, and the Chair would say it is a privileged question. It is done always.

Mr. MORGAN. I know that a report of a conference committee is always in order, but this is not a conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is submitting to the Senate a bill from the House. The Chair always submits to the Senate bills from the House and always where a committee of conference is asked for it is either granted or refused at once.

Mr. HARRIS. This seems to me to be simply a message from the House as all other messages from the House, to be dealt with by the Senate as we deal with every other message from the other branch of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. But it has always been regarded as a privileged question.

Mr. HARRIS. There is no privilege about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no privilege, but it is always considered.

Mr. MORGAN. I can not help what is always done outside of the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A majority of the Senate can determine.

Mr. MORGAN. The rules ought to prevail here, and no mere custom ought to set them aside; no courtesy or anything of that sort. If this bill is now entitled to the right of way before the Senate, under the rules of the Senate, of course I have no right to object; but I insist that it is not a privileged question and it will not become such until it comes back from the hands of the conference committee. It is then a privileged question and can demand the attention of the Senate at any time. I therefore call for the regular order.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that the Senator from Alabama is too late with his suggestion. The rule of course requires bills from the House and amendments from the House to be laid before the Senate the first thing in the morning after the morning business, but the custom of the Senate is otherwise. The Chair did that, and the Senate received it and heard the announcement. Then the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] rose and made a motion which was put from the Chair, and not only was it put, but one Senator certainly who has addressed the Senate inquired of the Senator from Vermont of his intention as to the proper number of conferees. That was given. Now, it seems to me, it is altogether too late, when the Senate has progressed in the debate, to say that the original laying of this matter before the Senate was out of time.

Mr. MORGAN. The Chair, as I understand it, has the right at any time when some Senator is not on the floor to lay the action of the House before the Senate, but the question as to whether the Senate must proceed to the consideration of it is a question to be submitted to the body and to be determined by a vote. It is not a question of privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course it has to be determined by a vote whether this motion of the Senator from Vermont shall be adopted.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask to have the report read again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message of the House will be read.

The Acting Secretary again read the message.

Mr. BUTLER. Are the names of the conferees mentioned?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are not. The Secretary has read the entire message.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like then to inquire, not being very familiar with these matters, if it is not customary that the names of the House conferees should be mentioned when a committee of conference is asked for by the other House?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair believes it is. It is not necessary, but it is nearly always done. The Chair supposes it is not done in this case because the House has asked for an unusual number.

Mr. VOORHEES. Is there any reason why they should not name those they have appointed as well as the number? They ask for an unusual number, and that is an additional reason why they should name whom they appoint.

Mr. INGALLS. It is impossible to hear, owing to the confusion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina was asking whether it was not usual to name the conferees. The Chair supposes the reason is that the House wanted to get the consent of the Senate to a committee of conference of five members on the part of each House.

Mr. MORRILL. Is not that the motion now pending?

Mr. BUTLER. I was simply inquiring whether it is not customary to name the conferees on the part of the House on a conference committee before asking the Senate to agree to the conference. I see it is omitted in this particular instance.

Mr. MORRILL. That is not invariably the usage. They may be named at any time after the conference is agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Perhaps the Senator from Vermont will be able to answer, is it not usually done? Has it not been the invariable custom?

Mr. MORRILL. It is not the invariable custom, but it is frequently done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that it is usually done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MORGAN. I called for the regular order. I understand that the Chair——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair decides that this matter must be disposed of; that it is too late to call for the regular order after the Chair has laid before the Senate the bill. The Senate can do as they please about the motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that the Senate insist on its amendments to the revenue bill and consent to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

Mr. MORGAN. I object to the consideration of that resolution today.

Mr. INGALLS. Before voting on the question I should like to hear read the names of the conferees who have been selected on the part of the Senate. [Laughter.] I understand they have been sent to the Chair already. I ask that they may be read by the Secretary. [Laughter.] It will control my action in this matter very much.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

Mr. INGALLS. One moment. Let us hear who has been selected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to a question of order. It is impossible to hear this discussion at all, there is so much confusion in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please be seated, and those who are here by the courtesy of the Senate will sit down.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the reading of the names of the conferees who are to be selected.

Mr. HAWLEY. I call the Senator from Kansas to order. It seems to me, in my ignorance, that that is a sort of discourteous reflection on the Chair that ought not to be allowed.

Mr. INGALLS. Before this thing is voted on, I propose to know into what hands this bill is to be confided.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is impossible.

Mr. INGALLS. But as I understand that the names of the conferees have been selected and written down and sent to the desk of the Presiding Officer, I want to know who they are, and I shall not take any lessons in courtesy from the Senator from Connecticut. I know what my rights are, and I have a right to ask, inasmuch as a designation has been made, that we may know who it is.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Connecticut may offer some valuable lessons to the Senator from Kansas. Whether he chooses to avail himself of them is another question. I have no doubt about the tendency of his inquiry.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the Senate has not yet even agreed to a conference, and still less has it yet authorized the Chair to appoint the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir.

Mr. HOAR. Now, if any Senator, as every Senator on the floor might properly do, had made a suggestion to the Chair as to the persons to be appointed in case the Senate should take those two steps, it would be a private communication between two Senators which no other Senator would have any right to ask for; or if he has a right to ask, the Senate has no right to inquire into.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts is right about that. The Chair would answer the Senator from Kansas in this wise: that ever since he has been in the chair, where there has been occasion for a committee of conference on a revenue bill, members of the Finance Committee have been selected.

Mr. INGALLS. There was no intentional discourtesy about my observation. I had no desire of offering any affront either to the Presiding Officer or the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Presiding Officer did not consider it so.

Mr. INGALLS. But it is a matter of very great importance to know into whose hands this bill is to go as conferees on the part of the Senate; and inasmuch as the designation had confessedly been made and the list was in the hands of the Presiding Officer, which was admitted by everybody and was soon to be announced to us, that that is a private and confidential communication between two Senators is a laughable travesty.

Now, Mr. President, it appears to me that the Senator from Vermont could have no reasonable objection to advising the Senate who the conferees are who are to be selected, and I again ask that it may be announced.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, if any Senator has not confidence enough in the Chair to intrust him with the appointment of this conference committee, of course that Senator will vote against the motion; but there is no motion before the Senate that the Senator from Vermont shall appoint this committee. Whenever that motion is made I dare say the Senator from Kansas will vote against it; the Senator from Kansas will vote against the Chair being authorized to make this appointment if he has not confidence in the Chair.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, the Chair is a Senator from Illinois, and every other Senator is a Senator from some other State except his own colleague; and there is no information coming from the House of Representatives on this subject or any other to the Senate of the United States to which the Chair is more entitled than the rest of us. This is all wrong. The Senator from Kansas is right. The Chair knows I am utterly incapable of the slightest feeling or tinge of discourtesy to him; but if the Chair has knowledge of and in its possession the names of those who have been appointed by the House as conferees on this great question, it is the duty of the Chair to so announce.

Several SENATORS. It is the Senate committee that is referred to.

Mr. VOORHEES. Still more so then as between members of this body and the Chair. The Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Illinois occupying the chair can take no close corporate possession of a question of this kind. I ask that the Senate may be advised as much as the Chair is; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A paper was handed to the Chair; but——

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Chair be kind enough to advise us——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not got it now.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Chair be good enough to advise us whether the conferees on the part of the House were announced?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are not named in the message.

Mr. VOORHEES. This is very unusual, and I have a few words to say on that. I do not remember a single instance where a conference has been asked by the House where the request has not been accompanied by the names of the conferees on the part of the House. I do not remember a single instance; I doubt if Senators about me do. It is well known that very unusual, not to say revolutionary, proceedings have taken place in the House. A request is sent here for a conference, withholding the names of the conferees on the part of the House. I understand the House sends here a request for a conference. I understand the House non-concurs in the amendments made by the Senate and asks for a conference, and in asking for a conference has asked us to agree to that blindly without knowing whom it appoints as conferees. Am I right about that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message does not mention any' names.

Mr. VOORHEES. They do not mention their conferees?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They ask for a conference of five members, three being the usual number.

Mr. VOORHEES. I insist that the bill ought to be sent back with a request for the House to name the conferees they appoint; or else, if we agree to their request for a conference, we should withhold the names of our conferees until they name theirs. Should we appoint our committee of conference before they appoint theirs? It is our right to see the names of the men they select, and select ours in accordance therewith.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this is a very simple matter. There is no rule fixing the number of conferees to be appointed by either branch. The custom of the two Houses is to have a committee of three from each, two persons in favor of the bill or other matter in dispute and one of the minority in each branch. But here is a bill which involves very large and various public interests, and the House have proposed under the circumstances (and as it seems to me very properly) an unusual number. They have also, as the number is unusual, very properly withheld their appointment of their conferees till they see whether the Senate assents to that unusual number. If they had appointed five, and the Senate had said, "We prefer to have the usual number, the three, and no more," the House would have been left and the Senate would have been left in a very awkward condition. Therefore it was out of abundant courtesy to the Senate that the House refrained from appointing its conferees until it learned whether the Senate agreed with it in the opinion that there should be this extra number.

Mr. LAPHAM. Will the Senator pardon me for a suggestion? If they had sent here five names as their conferees they could change all of them to-morrow?

Mr. HOAR. Of course they could; they can always do that.

Mr. LAPHAM. Therefore there is nothing in the point.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me, with great deference to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], that the matter which he has criticised is a mark of especial courtesy on the part of the House to the Senate. I do not understand that the Presiding Officer of this body can have possibly, or that anybody else can have, any knowledge as to who the House conferees are to be, because they are not yet announced, very likely not yet determined upon by the presiding officer of that body.

It is always customary that the committee who have reported a bill signify, make suggestions, to the Presiding Officer of the persons whom they deem suitable for conferees, and the Presiding Officer of this body accepts or rejects such propositions at his discretion. I remember a case very well where the present Presiding Officer of the body did not take originally as its conferees the persons suggested by the committee who had the matter in charge, but took other persons. I have the right to suggest to the President of the Senate at this moment, either in writing or orally, the names of the persons who I think should be appointed on this conference, and so has every other Senator; and it is a private communication of mine to the Chair which I should not think the Chair had a right to make known to any other Senator if he thought I would not consent to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the message from the House of Representatives read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, to be composed on the part of this House of five members.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is perfectly simple and straight. The House of Representatives has informed the Senate that it disagrees to our amendments and asks a conference. It has informed us, which it was not obliged to do, that it proposes to have five gentlemen of that House compose its committee. We have a perfect right to agree to that conference and inform the House that we have appointed twenty members or two members or three members or five, because the two Houses meet in conference as equals and each House has a right to choose its own delegates and its own number of delegates. But the House of Representatives, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, departing from the ordinary practice in this matter, has informed us that it proposes to be represented by five of its members. We have no right to know who they are until they are selected, and it is none of our affair whether they are good men or bad men; they are supposed to represent the House of Representatives and nobody else. And they have no right to know who or how or why we choose ours until we inform them of what we have agreed upon.

Now, Mr. President, the Chair has no power of appointing these conferees unless the Senate agree that he may, and the common and the customary phrase in putting the question is, after the question is put on agreeing to the conference, "How shall this committee be appointed on the part of the Senate?" If no motion as to numbers is made, of course the Chair would take the usual course, and if everybody said, as we always do, "by the Chair," by unanimous consent he would make the appointment; for every committee, whether of conference or other, must be appointed by the Senate except by general consent. We have a right to suggest to the Chair "make it five," and we can make it ten or any other number. So the question is perfectly simple and perfectly free of difficulty.

The first and only question now is, will the Senate insist upon its amendments, or will it recede, which is a motion perfectly in order; and having said that we will insist and agree to the conference, then the question is, how is the committee to be appointed and of how many shall it consist? That is entirely a subsequent question; and after we have agreed to the conference and insisted upon our amendments, the Chair will then submit to the Senate, "How shall this committee be appointed and of how many shall it consist?" Ordinarily that question would not be put to the Senate, because it is a matter of course to have three; but in this case the Chair would ask, "Of how many shall this committee consist, and how shall it be appointed?" A motion may then instantly be made that it consist of ten, if you please, and that it shall not be appointed by the Chair. That part of the motion is unnecessary, because then the Senate would have to ballot for the committee; but the common course would be, and it will be now, of course, that it shall be appointed by the Chair after we have fixed the number; but that is an entirely subsequent question. The simple question now is, will the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference?

Mr. MORGAN. I submit that the question is not before the Senate whether the Senate will now insist upon its amendments and agree to a conference. To-day we established by a vote of the Senate, taken by yeas and nays, what the order of business should be, and the first business in order is that to which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] called the attention of the Senate, the unfinished pension bill. That also came over from yesterday as the unfinished business, and when a suggestion was made by him before this report came from the House that he would ask unanimous consent that that should go over I objected, and that kept it the business before the Senate. Thereupon the message arrived from the House of Representatives stating that they had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to this revenue bill and agreed to appoint a committee of conference, and invited us to a similar course of action. The Chair stated the question to the Senate to be upon concurrence in the request of the House for a conference. I raised the question of consideration immediately; the RECORD will show it. The Senate has not taken any vote; the regular order stands in the way of this order. I raised the question that this was not a privileged matter. The rules of the Senate bear me out in it. There is nothing that is privileged in connection with this subject at all except the report of a conference committee. This business coming here comes as any matter of business from the House, as any bill that the House might pass, or any other business whatsoever. It has no right of way until the Senate of the United States has voted to give it the right of way, and to do that it must postpone the existing order.

I therefore insist that my call for the regular order is a call that is in order, and that the question to be put to the Senate is the regular order; and upon a motion to postpone it, that of course the Senate can determine.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that after the message had been read I made the motion that the Senate should insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for, and then the Senator from Alabama rose and interposed an objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Of course I did. I could not object to the motion before it was made. I insisted, as I now insist, that the regular order of business must be moved out of the way by a vote of the Senate before the Senator from Vermont has a right to call the attention of the Senate to the message from the House. That is my point of order.

Mr. INGALLS. There have been so many precedents in this matter that I think it can no longer be regarded as unsettled that when a message of this character comes from the House the proper course is to act upon it immediately. I do not remember that there has ever been any exception to this rule.

It appears to me, obviously, therefore, that under the precedents, whether it is the written law of the Senate or not, this message has the right of way and ought to be acted upon at once.

I should like very much indeed if the Senate could agree to that portion of the motion of the Senator from Vermont stating that the Senate insists upon its amendments and agrees to the conference asked for by the House, leaving the question of the appointment of the conferees to be provided for after the selection has been made by the House, which ordinarily should first have been done. It seems to me if the Senator can assure us that the motion to be taken now would be limited to that there would be no trouble; but I understood that the purpose was to follow that immediately by the customary motion that the conferees on the part of the Senate be designated by the President pro tempore. Having reason to believe that in that event great interests might be periled, and that the entire aspect of the bill might be changed, it occurred to me that it would be wise, inasmuch as we did not know what the action of the House had been, that we should first be advised what the action of the Senate would be upon the personnel of the committee of conference. I should like, as I say, very much if the action of the Senate could be confined to the single question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is certainly the first question.

Mr. INGALLS. I agree to that.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no doubt that the questions will have to be taken separately. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that the only advantage in having them taken now is to enable the conference committee to meet at once in order to proceed with the business, and that their report may be made in time so that the Senate can either accept or reject it. It is for the purpose of having ample time to consider this subject that I desire early action upon the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In reply to the Senator from Alabama the Chair will state that it is the universal practice that all business has been interrupted when a message from the House of this kind came; and when the Chair has received it, it has been customary to dispose of it at once. Inasmuch as no objection was made when the Chair laid before the Senate the message of the House, and the Senator from Vermont made his motion, the Chair is of the opinion, from all the precedents, that it ought to be considered now. The question, then, is upon the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], that the Senate insist upon its amendments to the revenue bill which has been returned from the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And agree to the conference asked for.

Mr. MORGAN. I will not appeal from the decision of the Chair upon this subject, for the reason that I suppose the Senate on the next occasion, when a majority desire it, will reverse this ruling immediately, and that all the rules of the Senate are to be made subservient entirely to the accommodation and convenience of the powers that be, the majority, without reference to the rights of the minority.

I shall therefore address myself for a few moments only to the question of agreeing to a conference upon this bill.

This revenue bill has been a very peculiar measure from the beginning. It is the first bill on the subject of the tariff that ever originated in the Senate of the United States. There has been a constitutional as well as a traditional policy in this country that bills for the raising of revenue should originate in the House of Representatives.

We borrowed that from our English ancestry, who for a great many years past have declined to permit the House of Lords to originate bills of revenue. Thus power has been confined to the immediate and direct representatives of the people. Our fathers in the adoption of that principle found it necessary, as they supposed, for the protection of the people who had the taxes to pay, that it should be incorporated in positive terms in the Constitution of the United States.

This bill when it went to the House of Representatives was a very voluminous one, that occupied the attention of the Senate of the United States, bestowed with extreme industry, from the 9th day of January until within a few days past. Yesterday the Senate by its resolution recalled the bill from the House, finding that it had sent a copy to the House of the action of the Senate which was incorrect. That error was here corrected; and now this afternoon we find the bill back before the Senate of the United States. I have no right, I believe, to refer to anything that has been done in the House of Representatives except that which is laid before us; but I will say that this is the most miraculous performance in the way of legislation that any country has ever yet witnessed. How could the House so speedily consider a bill that disposes of taxation over thousands and thousands of articles, that interests the people of every section of the whole country—immediately and directly interests them; a bill that has given rise to more of deep concern, and searching debate, and thought, and, it is said, of agitation among the people of the United States than any other bill that ever appeared in this legislative Hall or elsewhere on the subject of taxation?

It has been more thoroughly investigated in the Senate and discussed more in detail than any tax law that was ever debated in a parliament in the world. It went to the House of Representatives, and the House instantly rejected every word and every amendment that the Senate has put upon it. Are we to infer that this act of peremptory rejection has been one of due and reflective consideration by those men who stand next to the people, and who under the Constitution are the immediate guardians of their rights in respect of taxation? Are we to shut our eyes to what everybody in the country knows, that this bill has never received one moment of consideration in the House, that it has never been read in that body?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not in order to refer to what has or has not been done in the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the question whether we are to shut our eyes to what everybody knows? I do not state what has taken place there; but everybody knows that the bill could not have been read in the House of Representatives since we sent it back there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can make a hypothetical case.

Mr. MORGAN. I am making a hypothetical case upon every proposition to which I allude. I have stated nothing here except as to the fact of the Senator from Vermont having his eyes shut if he has not seen what everybody knows. His eyes are always open. I doubt if he does not sleep with them wide open. But whatever the Senator from Vermont may have seen or may not have seen, this country has seen something about the bill which I think I have a right to refer to; that is, that the representatives of the people of the United States, charged by the Constitution with the duty of raising taxation by law, could not have read this bill, could not have considered it.

There are Senators here now who claim to be Democrats who, forgetting their responsibilities to the Constitution and the laws of the people, are willing to send the bill into the hands of those self-constituted manufacturers of the laws, of whom it was predicted early in this controversy that they at last would be the men who would enact a tariff for the people of the United States—five, it appears, to be chosen in the House and five chosen in the Senate. We do not know yet who they are to be.

The House of Representatives, contrary to the usual practice, violating every precedent, so far as I have witnessed the proceedings, that has ever yet obtained in the United States or in the other House, has sent a blank message to us, naming none of the conferees; and the people of the United States, represented on this floor by Senators sent from the respective States, are now in the deepest doubt and under great apprehension as to who are to become the legislators to make this bill. The House takes the bill and before it has had time to read it sends it back. Whether I may speak of the actual fact or not I predict that history will show, when the records of the action of the House go before the world, that not one line or syllable of this bill has ever been read in that body.

Mr. President, under ordinary circumstances this matter could not occur. The majority of the Senate of the United States in the action which it is about to take now bows a suppliant knee to the lashings of the party whip. It is doing that which no Senator here, when the party pressure is removed, would find himself at liberty to do, consulting his own manhood, the independence of his own thoughts and feelings, and the great responsibilities which bear upon him. Acting thus he would say to the House, "If I confer with you it must be after you have understood that which we are to confer about. I can not go into conference with you when your House has instructed you about nothing, when there has not been a word of debate expressive of the opinions of any man in the House of Representatives; not a word of debate, or the reading of the bill, by the assistance of which we can compare our thoughts and wishes together and find the best means of bringing the Houses together through consultation upon this matter."

Sir, this is not the Houses coming together; it is only the meeting of a committee fixed up by each body in the interests, and on the suggestion, and at the request of certain individuals in each body to devise and send to us for ratification a law which they shall dictate to us upon which intelligent and legislative action has never yet been taken and has been rendered impossible. The country will stand aghast when they are informed that, after all, the taxing power of this land is not in the House of Representatives or in the Senate through the power of amendment to constitutional action of the House, but that the real taxing power of this land is in the hands of a select committee picked out by party leaders, and that, too, after a conference had been first agreed to. When imposing this tyranical measure upon the people of the United States they might at least have had the grace to have named the tyrants through whose agency it is to be perpetrated.

These usurpers of power might have done the people of the United States at least the honor of having informed them, when they came to the Senate to ask for our assistance, who it was that had been selected by the House to conduct the manufacture of a law to suit themselves. But, sir, they have not done it. They have resolved that those names shall not be known to us until we have first resolved that we will confer with them upon this bill. They have resolved to keep matters in their own hands and in the dark until they have first obtained from us the authority under which this star-chamber commission, created to make a tariff, is to be formed. Never before has so flagrant an attempt been made to make a law in the name of Congress and by its authority, of which one of the Houses is necessarily ignorant—totally ignorant.

It is well for this country, well for its honor, and for its peace, and for the confidence of the people of the United States and the Government in Washington city, that the history of our legislation has never before recorded an act so tyrannical and so entirely out of the reach of the restraints of order, duty, and right. It is well for this country that the people have been heretofore left in ignorance of the fact that they can be taxed, not by the intelligent voice of their representatives sent here, but through the operation of a gag rule which takes a bill and rushes it into a conference committee, there to receive its first reading, without ever giving it a reading or a moment of consideration on the part of the House of Representatives.

These are not idle or unmeaning remarks, nor are they trifling questions. These are not matters that the people can turn their backs upon and flatter themselves that they still possess constitutional liberty. These are not subjects that can be put under foot, in the presence of an intelligent, thoughtful, and powerful people. Sir, they will spurn us, and they will spurn the House of Representatives, when they find out that we have abdicated the duties of legislators and have remitted the whole of the power that we possess upon this great question into the hands of a select committee of the two Houses, shut up in the secrecy of the committee-room, there to be legislated upon by only ten men.

More than a month ago warnings were given and often repeated before the Senate, and through the Senate to the people, as to this desperate purpose. The people were told then that there was no intention or expectation of the majority party to accomplish the passage of a tariff law in accordance with parliamentary usage and the Constitution. They were told that this measure would be taken into a conference committee and it would be there coopered and doctored up to suit the men who have had the control of the subject on the Finance Committee and the Ways and Means Committee all the time, and have resolved that their will should become law. They have been told that there was to be no liberty of action or of speech on this bill. While Senators were quarreling with us on this floor for consuming time in laying before the country the facts in reference to the tariff, the struggling minority were mapping out in advance, as with the tongue of prophecy, exactly what would occur. We then knew, as the country now knows, that after all we would come to the point where the Senate and the House would abdicate their powers under the Constitution to legislate upon the subject of taxation, and would relegate the whole matter into the hands of a select committee of conference, to be there disposed of as it might please them.

The country will no longer be deceived upon this question. Your committee of conference will meet; you will vote your power into their hands, for you are afraid to allow this session of Congress to adjourn without some pretense of legislation on the subject. You are afraid to go before the country with the bill that was voted here by a strong majority in which both political parties participated. You are afraid to stand on the solemn judgment, given as under oath, in favor of a bill which you yourselves brought into this body, amended and adjusted in all of its bearings, so that you were at last willing to give it the sanction of your votes, and you send it to a conference committee that they may reverse your votes and so save you from responsibility.

The Senate of the United States will ingloriously retire from the ground that it has taken, will allow this subject to be drawn into the secret conferences of this committee and permit it to be there treated to suit the purposes of those who have been determined from the outset to control the entire subject for the benefit of the special interests which they represent on this floor. And when your conference committee's report comes back, you will be prepared to adopt it, and I fear it will be found that some Democrats here will be prepared to adopt it also. There are men on this floor who would recall everything they have voted, every speech they have made, every announcement they have put before the world, showing the least consideration for the people in order to get a chance to put into the statute-books a law which will cripple the prosperity of the whole country for the sake of building up certain special industries.

This vast mass of laboring and groaning men who bear the heavy burdens of life, the real body of the people of this country, the great agricultural and producing industries of this country, are here to-night to be plucked. They are here to be victimized. The onslaught is now to be made upon them. Whatever change is made in this tariff will be a change to the disadvantage of the agriculturists and the other toilers who feed and clothe the human family.

They supply the taxes, they supply the power of the Government with the ballot and the bayonet, and what they are able to supply is to be made a fund into which these gentlemen will dip their hands and draw to their hearts' content for the purpose of lavishing it upon their pets, their patrons, and their favorites. That is to be the result of this strange action this evening by the majority; and yet the Senate hurries forward to do this, violates its own rules, breaks down the very organization of the body, sets at defiance all parliamentary law, sets aside a pension bill pending here, which is the regular order now, for the benefit of the wounded soldiers of the war, throws it aside without consideration, and rushes headlong to seize upon the power that they think they have got to ride down the people of this country with illegitimate, partial, and unconstitutional taxation.

Sir, I got my consent, after a painful effort, to vote for the bill we sent to the House in order that something might be done which would give rest and relief to the people of this country, something that looked in the right direction. Perhaps there was scarcely a man on this floor to whom that bill was more objectionable than it was to myself; but I yielded to it or would have done so but for a pair with the honorable Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM], the support of the power of the State which I have the honor to represent in company with my distinguished colleague, against whose judgment I reluctantly voted. And yet, sir, when I gave that vote, I felt perfectly sure that the House of Representatives never intended to consider that bill; and they have not, but I supposed they would read it.

This will be the first bill that ever found its way upon the statute-books of the United States which was never read in one of the two Houses. That fact will stand monumental in history through the coming cycles of time; and no man need think that he can ever force it down. The greatest tariff bill in the breadth of its provisions that was ever enacted in the country, spreading itself over every industry and every human being in the United States, if it becomes a law, will find its way upon the statute-book without ever having been read in one of the Houses.

That is the attitude in which men place themselves when they rush headlong to do such things at the bidding of party and on the demand of great monopolies. God grant that the day may come when men who are brave enough to face death upon the battlefield will be bold enough to refuse to obey the demands of their party or of their supporters when they are made in this desperate way; when Senators will be bold enough to say to any party who may undertake to hold them in its leash, "You can not lead us to violate all the principles of legislation and the Constitution of the United States and to depart from the traditions of every free government by putting that upon the statute-book which has never received a moment's consideration in one of the Houses and is sent to the other as a measure upon which it has acted."

Until that time shall arrive the Senate of the United States will not meet the expectations of the people of a great republic.

Having said this, sir, I leave this subject in the hands of the Senate to do with it as you will; but remember that the people of the United States are not all asleep; they are not all indifferent to their rights, and they will hold this Senate to a reckoning for what they are now doing, which will have its marked effect upon this body for a half century of time to come.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is the question before the Senate, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that the Senate insist on its amendments to the revenue bill and agree to the conference asked by the House.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is that question divisible? Can I ask for a division of the question so that the first question shall be upon insisting on the Senate amendments?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question then is, first, Will the Senate insist on its amendments to the revenue bill which has been returned from the House of Representatives?

The motion to insist was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next question is, Will the Senate agree to the conference asked by the House?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Before that vote is taken I wish to say a word. It is customary of course to appoint a committee of conference, but I desire to say that I apprehend the gentlemen who shall compose the committee in this case will have a very responsible duty devolving upon them. It has been intimated by the Senator from Alabama that this bill has not been considered by the other body of Congress. There has been an announcement made that they have disagreed to the amendments of the Senate and have asked for a conference committee. If the intimation of the Senator from Alabama is true that the questions involved in our amendments have not been considered in the other House, it may be that the only point which the conference committee will consider will be the right of the Senate to have attached the amendments to the original bill that the House sent to us.

Now, it seems to me that the honor of the Senate, if that is the question presented, is somewhat involved. While I have no doubt that the gentlemen who shall compose the committee will endeavor to vindicate the rights of the Senate in the action it has taken, yet I say in advance that I should be very sorry if there were any recession by the conference committee from the position which the Senate has assumed that it had the right to attach these amendments, and if they should come back with a report agreeing simply to the House bill that was sent to us at the last session.

I make these remarks because I know I shall not be a member of the committee, and have no disposition to be; but I think the gentlemen composing it will have devolved upon them a very responsible duty to perform. I do not hesitate to say in addition that if such action should be taken as in any way to impeach the right of the Senate to make the amendments, involving, as I think it would, the character and honor of this body, I would oppose any report which might be made by such a committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives consisting of five members?

The question being put, was determined in the affirmative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How shall this committee be appointed?

Mr. EDMUNDS and others. By the Chair.

Mr. COCKRELL. It has been intimated here that the chairman of the Finance Committee as a matter of course furnishes the names to the Chair. That is always understood in such a case; but I ask if the programme and proposition is for the committee to abandon this tariff bill and bring in an internal-revenue bill alone? If we can not get some information on that point I object to the Chair appointing the committee. If we can get any information about whether we propose to stand by the work of the Senate, then I am willing for the Chair to appoint so far as I am concerned; but if we can not do so, if it is a mockery and this whole tariff legislation is to be abandoned and we are to have a bill brought in here repealing all the internal-revenue taxes, I want to know it.

Mr. DAWES. It would not be a very free or full conference if the Senator from Missouri should have an indication from the Senate under what instructions the committee should act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there objection, I should like to ask, to the Chair appointing the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There seems to be objection to the Chair appointing the committee.

Mr. DAWES. We must trust the conferees on the part of this body to confer with the conferees on the part of the House and report to this body what in their opinion ought to be done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there objection, Mr. President, to the Chair appointing the committee?

Mr. INGALLS. I have discovered who they are to be, and I have no objection, Mr. President. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us understand that. I wish the Chair would put the question, "Is there objection?"

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Kansas announcing that he has no objection, I suppose the Senate will consider that the thing is done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Chair ask if there be objection?

Mr. VEST. On this side of the Chamber we have not the information of the Senator from Kansas, and we should like to have it publicly announced who the conferees are to be——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not know.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Kansas seems to know, and I wish he would give us that information.

Mr. INGALLS. Having received it in strict confidence, I do not propose to impart it.

Mr. VEST. There can hardly be any confidence in regard to a public matter of this sort.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair usually appoints from the committee having charge of a bill; for instance, on a bill of this kind from the Committee on Finance, and the names are almost always submitted to him.

Mr. VEST. There is a very great choice in the personnel of the Committee on Finance, able as that committee is. I should like to know what members of that committee have been selected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to know if there is objection to the Chair appointing this committee. Will the Chair ask if there be any?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will not interrupt Senators.

Mr. VEST. If the fact exists as stated by the Senator from Kansas, that this appointment has already been made, we are entitled to know it. It has been publicly stated here by a Senator upon the opposite side of the Chamber that this appointment has been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been made by the Chair. It may have been agreed to by the committee.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Kansas has stated here, that having ascertained who the conferees were he would withdraw his objection.

Mr. INGALLS. Who they were to be; not who they were.

Mr. VEST. We are certainly entitled to know before we vote on this question.

Mr. FRYE. Let us vote.

Mr. VEST. I am as anxious to go home as the Senator from Maine, but I desire to have that information.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from Missouri will draw near me I shall be glad to tell him.

Mr. VEST. I want no confidence of that sort, much as I respect the Senator from Kansas. This is a public matter, entirely a public matter, and this subject has been brought up by a member of the dominant party.

Now, Mr. President, I do not propose to say anything in regard to the action of the House of Representatives; but, putting a hypothetical case, suppose this state of the case to exist: that after two months here of elaborate discussion of this tariff question a bill has been perfected and sent to the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and the House of Representatives refuse to read the bill or to know what the Senate has done, so that not only does the House refuse to read the bill but the House further declares by resolution that the Senate has exceeded its constitutional power and has passed a bill which it had no right to consider or to originate at all. Suppose, further, that the House of Representatives after making this declaration sends us a request for a committee of conference in regard to a bill that violated the Constitution of the United States; having stated in one breath that no such bill exists because it was unconstitutional it then asks the Senate of the United States for a committee of conference in regard to a bill that is null and void.

A member of the dominant party in this Senate has declared that the appointment has already been made. He first rose in his place and declared that he was not prepared to vote upon the question of a conference until he knew what the Chair knew, as he said, who the members of this conference committee were to be, and now he says that he is prepared to vote, knowing who they are to be, and the rest of us in the minority are required to vote without that information. Then after, in the imaginary case which I have put, the Senate has been slapped in the face by the House of Representatives and told that its members have violated their oaths, trampled upon the Constitution of the country, still they are willing, without telling us what conferees they have appointed, to confer with us in regard to this unconstitutional measure. After the country has known that, I shall be satisfied with the result, whatever it may be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I repeat my inquiry, is there objection to the Chair appointing this committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the committee of conference being appointed by the Chair?

Mr. VEST. I object, Mr. President, not to the Chair appointing, but to the Chair appointing until we have the information which the Senator from Kansas has publicly announced that he has.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is an objection. I move that the Chair appoint the committee.

Mr. LOGAN. In order to ease the mind of the Senator from Missouri I will say, as the Senator from Kansas asked him to draw near, that I was sitting here and I whispered to the Senator from Kansas who the appointees would be, without any knowledge whatever on my part, but merely in a jest, and I guess that is the information the Senator from Kansas has.

Mr. INGALLS. It has been corroborated from an entirely authoritative source. [Laughter.]

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, under no circumstances would I object to the present occupant of the chair appointing any committee that the Senate authorized to be appointed; but the Chair and the Senate need not be mistaken about the facts surrounding this matter, as it now appears to be an affair of jugglery. The country will take notice of it. I am a member of the Finance Committee, and it seems that other persons knew a great deal more about the selection of the conference committee than I do. I know nothing whatever. I would not serve as a member of the conference committee if I were appointed, and I am quite sure that I am not one of those who will be designated. Why there should be any mystery, why there should be any secrecy, why this talk should arise at all, is beyond my comprehension, and it is not for the best interests or the reputation of those who are engaged in it. I repeat that I am a member of the Committee on Finance, and have been ever since I have been in the Senate, and I sit here in silence and hear gentlemen not connected with the committee at all announce their readiness to accept the appointment of the Chair because they know what it will be. I do not care who it is; I care nothing about it personally.

I repeat that the personnel of the conference on the part of the Senate is a matter of entire indifference to me. I know that it will be composed of able, conscientious, faithful men. There can be no selection from the Committee on Finance that would not fill the description which I have just given. I take it of course the chairman [Mr. MORRILL] will be one of the committee, and it is right that he should be. I know that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], with his great ability and his wise experience and knowledge in affairs, will be one of them. Without being informed at all who is going to be upon the committee, I can not tell who is going to be, for I am not on the inside, as some other Senators, the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Kansas, seem to be. I think the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who largely represents the manufacturing industries——

Mr. LOGAN. I will say that I am not on any "inside."

Mr. VOORHEES. I understood that the Senator from Illinois whispered something to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. LOGAN. I will state to the Senator that what I was doing he has just been doing, guessing. I just whispered to the Senator from Kansas the names of five men in a joke. I do not know anything about who will be on the committee.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Illinois was guessing privately and I am guessing publicly.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

Mr. VOORHEES. I guess that the three Senators whom I have named will compose the conference on the other side, and I think that is right; I think those are the men who should be on it. Then when we come to this side of the Chamber, length of service, experience, and ability would indicate the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] as one of the conference committee; and then the zeal, the industry, the attention which was given to the whole subject from beginning to end would point out the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] as the other. Everybody will see directly how nearly I have guessed this list and how trifling and worthless it was to try to conceal the whole thing. That is the committee that ought to be appointed, and I should be willing to risk something that that is the committee that will be appointed.

Mr. LOGAN. Inasmuch as the Senator has referred to me and he is guessing at that committee, I ask him is he not guessing at the committee from this standpoint, that if he was the Chair himself those are the men he would appoint?

Mr. VOORHEES. I have no more doubt of it than the Senator had when he whispered the names.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator does not understand me. I only say that inasmuch as he has named five men, he has named five men whom he thinks ought to be appointed. Is not that the fact?

Mr. VOORHEES. I am guessing that they will be appointed, and expressing my entire approbation of their appointment.

Mr. LOGAN. If they should be, there would be no objection.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not quarrel with the Senator from Illinois; he was guessing who would be appointed, and so was the Senator from Kansas, without the slightest information. I thought I would indicate my guess because of my knowledge of the fitness of things, so that there should be no mystery and no nonsense about this matter at all.

I may have misunderstood the question as it first came before the Senate, but the only matter that concerned me was this, that the House of Representatives disagreeing to our work asked for a committee of conference, they initiating the question of a committee, and they should in asking for a committee of conference have indicated and appointed their own, and then we should have treated with them. I call the attention of Senators on the other side to the fitness of this kind of a proceeding. When one body of Congress asks for a conference committee it should first appoint and indicate its own, then ask us to agree to their request and to appoint our members to fill up that committee. This comes here wrong end foremost. They ask for a committee of conference, and ask us to appoint our committee first. That is not in accordance with the usage of the two Houses, as I well know, and it is not fair to us. It puts us in the attitude of naming our committee first.

We are not asking for a committee of conference; we are not asking anything of the House. We have done our work. They disagree to it and ask for a committee, and instead of appointing their committee and asking us to fill it, they ask us to appoint first and let them fill it. That is the point that concerns me. What ought to be done, Mr. President—and I presume it will not be done perhaps for that very reason—is this: The Senate ought to insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference without naming the members of that committee, and send the question back to the House with an agreement to their request to appoint a committee of conference and let them then name their committee, and when it comes back here let us name ours. That is the regular order for this kind of business. I have no fear or concern about the personnel of the committee of conference of this body—not the slightest in the world.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] made a motion which was in order, and it has not yet been stated from the chair. I desire before my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] proceeds that the motion shall be stated, so as to be pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate——

Mr. HOAR. I refer to the motion made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] that the Chair be authorized to appoint the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the Chair appoint the committee? The Chair stated it plainly, but Senators have risen to speak.

Mr. HARRIS. This whole debate strikes me as very singular, Mr. President. The questions addressed to the Chair according to the invariable usage of the Senate should have been addressed to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] in charge of the bill. I presume that no Senator on this floor expects him to make terms with the Presiding Officer of this body; nor do I know any reason why the Presiding Officer should be asked to indicate the appointment of the committee that he will make, because the invariable practice of the Senate is that the Chair appoints the conferees indicated by the Senator in charge of the bill.

I take for granted that the guess of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], certainly so far as this side is concerned, is a very shrewd and correct guess, and I am inclined to think his guess is a good one as to the other side. Certainly the appointments indicated by the Senator from Indiana ought to be indicated by the chairman of the Committee on Finance so far as this side of the Chamber is concerned, and I take for granted will be indicated by the Senator in charge of the bill if the Chair is authorized to appoint. But why these questions should be propounded to the Chair, I can not quite understand.

I hope that the order may be made that the Chair may appoint the committee of conference, and I suppose when the order is made the rule which has invariably controlled the appointment will be recognized by the Chair, and the appointment will be as suggested by the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the conference committee be appointed by the Chair?

Mr. EDMUNDS. To the number of five. I propose that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To the number of five, being similar to the one appointed by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] (the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] having declined serving on the committee), the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. VOORHEES. I call attention to the prophecy I uttered a few minutes ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was a very good guess.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I am compelled to decline this appointment, if the Chair will allow me. ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. HARRIS. I beg the Senator from Kentucky to allow me one minute.

Mr. BECK. Let me state why first. I have not been able to be in this Chamber since yesterday morning until a few moments ago, and have heard none of this debate, and I hardly know what has been done. I am on the Committee on Appropriations and was selected at the beginning of the session to take charge with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] of the sundry civil bill. We worked on that sub-committee of three till 11 o'clock last night, we began this morning early, and expect to be at work until midnight to-night. The whole committee will meet to-morrow morning and we expect to report the bill to-morrow and take it up on Thursday. It is one of the most difficult bills even for a sundry civil bill that I have had anything to do with and as the term of the Senate expires on next Saturday night or Sunday at noon, it will be utterly impossible for any new member of the committee on this side of the Chamber to learn the facts and details of that sundry civil bill and if that bill is lost of course an extra session will be had. I do not claim any particular ability more than anybody else, but I have had forty-eight hours of work on that bill and learned in that time things that no one else can now learn, and I must be on the floor when that bill is up. So the Senator from Iowa thinks, so I think myself. The Senate can appoint from two or three other members of the Finance Committee some one to take my place on this conference.

Mr. VOORHEES. Now let me say a word to the Senator from Kentucky. There is nobody on the Finance Committee who can take his place on the tariff question.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon.

Mr. VOORHEES. I beg pardon. But there is a Senator here who can take the Senator's place on the sub-committee of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BECK. There are many who could have done so; any other Senator on the Appropriations Committee could have done so just as well as if we had known that this entanglement would have arisen, but now I have done forty-eight hours' work on the sundry civil bill that no other Senator can possibly learn. I ought not to be required to leave it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am going to make a motion directly. I know the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] has had long and large experience as a member of the Committee on Appropriations and he can take the place of the Senator from Kentucky on the sundry civil bill, and I know that nobody on this side of the Chamber can take his place on this committee of conference. I say that, being a member of the Finance Committee myself, and if it is in order, I would move that the Senator from Kentucky be not excused from service.

Mr. BECK. It does not require any motion. If the Senate will not excuse me on my own statement, I shall serve.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Indiana will allow me, I desire to say that important as is the sundry civil appropriation bill, and important as I know to be the services of the Senator from Kentucky in the management of that bill, there is no question, there are no ten questions combined pending before this body of equal importance to the one in respect to which he has just been appointed as a conferee. He can only be excused by vote of the Senate from serving upon that committee, having been appointed as one of the conferees, and I very earnestly hope that a majority of the Senate will never consent to excuse him from service upon that committee, however much it may require him to neglect his duties in respect to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let us supply his place there.

Mr. HARRIS. His place is already supplied there, because the Committee on Appropriations is full; he chances to be on the sub-committee having in charge the sundry civil bill, but there are other members on the committee who can represent him to some extent at least, if not fully. I know that there are some advantages in the attention he has already given to it, but we can get along with the sundry civil appropriation bill with such aid as the Senator from Kentucky is able to give us while he is yet performing whatever duties he may have to perform as one of the conferees of the Senate, and I for one will never consent to his going off that committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that I should be very unwilling to have the Senator from Kentucky excused from service on this conference committee. He knows the bill by heart, and if he is on the committee we can get through with the conference report at a much earlier day than we can by taking any one who is not as familiar as the Senator from Kentucky confessedly is. I agree with the Senator from Tennessee that it is vastly more important than the sundry civil bill, even if there should be some things in it that he does not agree to.

Mr. BECK. I have stated the whole case, and as to the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Indiana I suppose they can take my place in the conference; but they seem to have objections to serving. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] is not here. In this condition of affairs I shall serve wherever I am placed, but I ought not to be required to do so. ["All right."]

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Kentucky withdraws his request.

Mr. BECK. I withdraw it.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. ROLLINS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GROOME submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. MCMILLAN, it was Ordered, That the claimant have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers filed with Senate bill No. 1326, first session Forty-seventh Congress.

RATES OF PENSION.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the bill

(H. R. 1410) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is necessary about getting on with the business in the time that is left that we should have a short executive session. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CALL. I offer an amendment to the pending bill to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and on motion of Mr. EDMUNDS (at 6 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 27, 1883.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ALEXANDER FRANCESCO.

Mr. WHEELER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 1278) for the correction of the military record of Alexander Francisco, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN FRASER.

Mr. BREWER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time Senate bill No. 862 for the relief of John Fraser, and to substitute it for House bill No. 5680 of the same tenor.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I think we had better have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the bill is not before the House.

LEAVENWORTH, PAWNEE AND WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to House resolution of the 2d instant, a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office concerning the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the president of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, transmitting the annual report of the treasurer of that company for the fiscal year ending December 31, 1882; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana concerning pleuro-pneumonia in cattle; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. MCCLURE asked and obtained consent to have printed in the RECORD some remarks prepared by him upon the subject of the tariff. [See Appendix.]

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] and is the further vote upon the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. Upon that resolution the previous question has already been ordered, and the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. DUNN. I would inquire of the Chair what is the question we are now to vote on?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again state it. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. DUNN. Is it in order to move to lay that resolution on the table?

The SPEAKER. The House is dividing; the yeas and nays have been ordered on the proposition.

Mr. DUNN. I make the motion to lay the whole subject on the table, if that is in order.

Mr. HASKELL. I raise the point of order on that motion.

Mr. REED. I make the point of order that it is not competent to do that now.

Mr. DUNN. Why not?

Mr. REED. We are in the midst of a roll-call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that after the yeas and nays have been ordered that motion would not be in order.

Mr. DUNN. But the roll-call on the yeas and nays has never begun.

Mr. REED. Yes, it has begun.

The SPEAKER. There was a vote taken by yeas and nays yesterday.

Mr. DUNN. Does the Chair rule the motion out of order?

The SPEAKER. At this time; the Chair will not go any further at present.

Mr. DUNN. Then this vote will settle the whole thing, and there will be no stage at which the motion to lay on the table can be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman obtained the floor to make an inquiry as to what was before the House, and the Chair stated it. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution reported by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 129, nays 22, not voting 140; as follows:

Mr. HOUK with Mr. BARBOUR.
Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. DUNN.
The result of the vote was announced as above stated.
Mr. REED moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.
The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 7314) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HALE, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia.
The message also announced that the Senate had non-concurred in the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 1821) prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. LOGAN, Mr. SEWELL, and Mr. HAMPTON.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—ORIGINATION OF REVENUE BILLS.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I rise to a question of privilege.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia states that he rises to a question of privilege, and offers the resolution which the Clerk will read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the substitute of the Senate (H. R. 5538) entitled "An act to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and for other purposes," under the form of an amendment to the bill of the House (H. R. 5538) entitled "An act to reduce internal-revenue taxation," containing a general revision and repeal of laws imposing both import duties and internal taxes, is in conflict with the true intent and purposes of that clause of the Constitution which requires "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives;" and that therefore said bill so amended do lie upon the table.
And be it further resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and is hereby, directed to notify the Senate of the passage of the foregoing resolution.

Mr. CALKINS. I make a point of order on that resolution. My point of order is that the resolution can not be offered or considered until the bill to which it refers is first called up in the House for action.
Mr. KASSON. That is right; the bill is not before the House.
Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The House is officially informed that the bill is here by the resolution which has just been passed and by two messages of the Senate on that subject. Last evening when the gentleman from Kentucky inquired of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] how the House knew what was in this bill he replied tauntingly that everybody knew what was in it, and he said truthfully. Now, it is perfectly plain, that is, it has been announced in the debates, that the object of this rule is to pass if possible a tariff bill the name of which is given, the number of which is given. On the other side it was said that it violated the Constitution of the United States but that no one on that side raised the question, and the suggestion was made that as yet nobody had raised it on this side of the House.
The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow the Chair to make a suggestion? Without any desire to cut the gentleman off, the Chair would like to hear from the other side on the point of order. The gentleman from Georgia, if he desires to be heard, will be heard afterward.
Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I will be heard, if the Chair desires me to be heard, afterward.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] makes the point of order that the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Georgia is prematurely submitted. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman on that proposition.
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My friend from Indiana will allow me to suggest that the vote just taken by the House is evidence of the fact that the bill is before us.
Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to enter into any elaborate discussion of the point of order, but simply to state that in all the precedents in all the cases which I have examined (and I have been giving some attention to this matter for the last two weeks) not a case is to be found in which a resolution of this kind has ever been offered until the bill itself in some way came before the House for action. The bill can not be said to be before the House as an amendment to the rules, for that simply forms a means or method by which the bill can be reached.
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the bill was not before the House, how could we recognize its existence in adoping a change of the rules? We have adopted a rule recognizing the existence of the bill and the fact that it is before the House.
Mr. CALKINS. The fact that a bill of this kind is upon the Speaker's table forms no basis for the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia, because the bill may lie upon the Speaker's table until this House adjourns sine die.
The fact a rule has been passed, which is extraordinary of itself perhaps, in order that the bill may be reached, forms no reason why a resolution may not be introduced at this point raising the constitutional question, for the House may never act under the rule. In all the cases I have examined there is not a single one where the point has been heard until the bill has been up and the House acted on it. It was so on the bill reducing the revenue taxes introduced by Mr. Hooper of Massachusetts. It was so in the Thirty-seventh Congress on a bill on which the same question was raised after the bill had passed through several stages and had gone into the Committee of the Whole. So, in all the cases from the First Congress where the point was first raised up to the present time, the point has been made when the bill was in order, and the Speaker can not rule on a question of that kind until the bill is before the House for action.
I had all the precedents collected here, but some gentleman has carried them off, and I am not able to read them at this time.
Mr. KASSON. I would like to add one word to what has been said on the point of order that it is premature when the bill is not before the Speaker and before the House, for this reason that we do not officially know that the Senate have acted on an amendment in contravention of the alleged constitutional rule. It is not read to the House. It must be read to satisfy the Speaker, who decides this point of order, that it is a question of privilege. He can not assume, under the statement of any one person who has read it, that they have violated that rule. It must be brought into court, as it were, in order to determine whether this resolution applies to it or not. While the thing remains in the dark, out of sight, the attention of the Speaker can not be called to it.
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the bill is now on the Speaker's table, and has been ordered to be printed?
Mr. KASSON. It being on the Speaker's table does not bring it before the House without further proceedings. If it had that effect all this proceeding yesterday and to-day would be needless. We none of us know any fact except a Senate bill of a certain number shows amendments to the original House bill. What those amendments are none of us officially know. Any proposition to make a point of order on a bill which has not been read must in the nature of things be premature.
Mr. CARLISLE. If none of us know what those amendments are, or what the bill is——
Mr. KASSON. Officially.
Mr. CARLISLE. Then how could this House vote intelligently on the proposition just now adopted on a call of the yeas and nays which refers to the bill by its number and by its title.
Mr. KASSON. The gentleman thought we could vote intelligently to make it a law.
Mr. CARLISLE. I say now we know what it is.
Mr. KASSON. But this is the point of order. When a bill is reported from the Committee on Appropriations, no gentleman makes a specific point of order, but he reserves any point of order brought up when the bill comes up for consideration. Here is a revenue bill on the Speaker's table which is said to be subject to the constitutional point of order. How do we know it? The bill has never been read to the House. It is on the Speaker's table, requiring further proceeding to reach it.
Mr. CARLISLE. But the House has just officially by a vote recognized the fact there is a bill there on the Speaker's table.
Mr. KASSON. With a certain title.
Mr. CARLISLE. With a certain amendment to it, and that a certain motion is in order in regard to that bill. The proposition I make is simply this: it is too late for gentlemen to say this House does not know officially what is contained in that bill, because the House has just acted officially on the bill.
Mr. KASSON. Not on the bill.
Mr. CARLISLE. But with reference to that bill.
Mr. KASSON. Yes, that is right.
Mr. CARLISLE. With reference to that bill.
Mr. KASSON. We know, in other words, a bill is there with certain amendments. That the record shows; further the record shows nothing.
Mr. ROBESON. Let me inquire whether we did not send a bill to the Senate, and whether it has not a certain number; whether we do not know officially——
Mr. KASSON. A certain title.
Mr. ROBESON. And whether we can not act on it by that number without going into its contents?
Mr. KASSON. And by a certain title.
Mr. ROBESON. This is a question requiring a knowledge of its contents.
Mr. KASSON. I have already stated that point, and that is the point in the case, that this resolution can only be offered after the House has had official knowledge of the contents of the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Before the gentleman from Iowa takes his seat will he allow me a question? I desire to raise a parliamentary inquiry, which I hope he will answer. Now, as I understand it, the gentleman from Iowa insists that this point made by the gentleman from Georgia is presented prematurely; that it can not be made and could not properly be entertained until the House shall have received official knowledge of the contents of this bill. I wish to ask the learned gentleman from Iowa if, after the House shall have entered upon the consideration of the bill, he would not then hold that the point raised by the gentleman from Georgia came too late?

Mr. KASSON. I will answer the gentleman that a very substantial point will lie against the proposition when it comes up before the House at that time. But the objection that I have made is that the gentleman's proposition can not now be entertained until we have official notice of the contents of the bill to which it refers.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is very clear, then, from the answer of the gentleman from Iowa, that the purpose is to hold the point raised by the gentleman from Georgia premature at this time, and then to insist when the consideration of the bill is demanded that it comes too late; and thus in both ways to rule it out.

Mr. KASSON. No, I would say upon the same ground that it is too late now if that were the point involved, in view of the action of the House that the point was not a good one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order.

Mr. KASSON. But for the present the matter is not officially before the House; we have no official knowledge of the contents of the bill; and therefore that any point of order made against its contents must in the nature of things be premature.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to dispose of this question.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Does the Chair desire to hear further on the proposition?

The SPEAKER. Not unless the gentleman from Georgia desires to be heard.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I submit to the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia is offered by him for the purpose of raising the question of constitutional privilege, a question involving the constitutional prerogatives of the House in the formation of revenue bills. And in practice this has been always held to be a matter of high privilege. The only question raised now by the point of order of the gentleman from Indiana is as to the matter of time of raising the question, and it is suggested that the bill is not before the House for consideration, and hence that it is too soon to make the point of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia. In argument it is said that the House does not know officially what the bill contains for the purpose of determining this question.

The Chair does not take that view of the matter at all. The bill has been returned to the House by the official direction of the Senate. It goes, under the rules of the House, it is true, to the Speaker's table, but the House has taken notice of it there, has ordered it to be printed, and it is before the House for its action. It is sufficient to say that if the matter was under consideration once in the House under the rules, in the opinion of the Chair it would then be too late to raise this question of constitutional privilege against it; so that the House must look to the bill to determine that question before it proceeds to consider it at all. Under the practice points of order must be made on bills, amendments, &c., before consideration commences, or they are waived, and to make such points of order members must take notice of the contents of such bill, &c.

If the bill in dispute were brought up before the House and its consideration entered upon, under the practice of the House it would be then too late to raise the question of constitutionality against it.

The Chair thinks this is a matter for the House to determine, and for the purpose of learning, if the House has not been advised upon the contents of the bill against which the constitutional question is raised, the bill can be read, or so much of it as may be necessary, for the purpose of determining whether it is a bill on which the question of constitutional privilege can properly be raised. It is not for the Chair to decide whether the prerogatives of the House have been invaded or not; it is for the House; and therefore the Chair now thinks that the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia is in order for consideration, and so rules.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. One word further. It is said the precedents are against the consideration of such a resolution before the measure is brought before the House for consideration. The Chair has hastily looked to one or two instances with reference to similar resolutions, and finds that one of a similar character was offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. DAWES, in April, 1872, which involved a revenue bill, as this does, and the resolution was offered and entertained and considered by the House before the bill was taken up for consideration.

Mr. CARLISLE. And a similar point was made in the second session, Forty-fifth Congress, on the post-route bill.

The SPEAKER. Several cases of a similar character to the one before the House have arisen in the history of the Congress of the United States, but only enough of them have been examined to show that the practice has not been uniform. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to argue this question upon broad principles. I rely now upon no technicalities. Quirk and Gammon and Snap, neither all nor one of them, have any place in this discussion, thank God.

This House by a bill raised the Tariff Commission. The report of that commission was made. The House, independently of that, passed a bill entitled "An act to reduce internal-revenue taxation." That bill embraced three sections, occupying two pages and three or four more lines of this bill of one hundred and ten printed pages, which I hold in my hand, returned from the Senate.

It was sent to the Senate, and the Senate struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted the part in italics. The only remaining syllables of the original act in the amendment of the Senate are these:

An act to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

That is all of our product that now lives. The Senate struck out the whole matter of internal-revenue taxation as we had enacted it, added to the title the words "and for other purposes," and then itself passed five sections on the subject of internal-revenue taxation; and then, beginning at page 7, enacted one hundred and three pages of general tariff revision and tariff administration.

This bill was reported here several days ago. On yesterday it was recalled by the Senate because by a misplaced comma the duty on iron had been raised to an enormous figure, and because another section greatly increased the duty on card-clothing, which increase had been expressly voted out by the Senate but had been voted in by its Clerk. What other errors there are in it I do not know. We have not even yet had time to read and criticise the bill.

Now we are met on the other side of the House this morning, after a week's fight how to get up that bill and yet not let the representatives of the people vote upon it, with the declaration that they do not know what is in it; that they do not know that it is a tariff bill at all. I do not know any more violent rebuke that could have been given to the gentlemen making the point than the fact that the Speaker decided against them. That is a very rare treatment of that side of the House.

Mr. REED. We very seldom make absurd points of order.

Mr. HUMPHREY. We hear them frequently enough from that side.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. If gentlemen desire to interrupt me I will be glad they will do it according to rule. They know how to make rules and how to change rules. Let them at least observe those in existence.

Mr. REED rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Georgia was kind enough to interrupt me last night in the same manner that I have interrupted him. And I will now repeat the reason why we are seldom rebuked on our side is because we seldom make foolish points of order.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The world may believe quite as much of that as the gentleman from Maine himself does. I do not suppose it believes it a bit more than he does.

Mr. REED. I do not want it to.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what will be the result of this motion. I have made it from a sense of duty. I understand that when one becomes satisfied that the Constitution of the United States forbids a particular thing he has no right to waive the point of constitutionality. I do not understand how the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], who has the honor to preside over the Judiciary Committee of this House, can use such language as he did last night in his speech when he said:

We find ourselves face to face to-day with a bill which, in my judgment, was got up without due reference to the principles which govern under our Constitution.

He then said practically that the fears of tottering industries, the clamor of manufacturers, the outcry of bankers and monopolists have compelled that side to waive insisting on the Constitution, and that as yet no man on this side had raised his voice in favor of that instrument.

The reason he gives was because popular clamor for the tariff measure had put their consciences to sleep. The reason I give for our side is that upon consultation we agreed that your side would not have the hardihood or the effrontery to pass this law and lightly disregard the principles of the Constitution which compel you to insist upon the prerogatives of this House. We waited to see whether our confidence in your virtue was misplaced.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Did I understand the gentleman to say or did he intend the House to understand that the offering of this resolution and the raising of the point now raised by him was the result of a conference on this side of the House?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I mean to say that I told certain friends that I felt it to be my duty to raise the question, and they said to me, "Wait and see whether the other side will do wrong or not." That is all I mean, and I waited in obedience to their wish.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply desire, with the permission of the gentleman from Georgia, to disclaim any participation in or knowledge of any conference of which this resolution was the product.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I have said not a word about conferring with the gentleman from Kentucky about anything; therefore he need not make a disclaimer any more than need every other gentleman on our side.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply felt I had a right to enter a disclaimer if the gentleman from Georgia assumed to speak for what he termed our side.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I announced that I did not.

The Speaker, in delivering his opinion upon the point of order this morning, alluded to the fact that in 1872 Mr. DAWES, of Massachusetts, presented a like resolution under a like state of facts. I will remark that my resolution is in the exact words of that one, mutatis mutandis. I have put it in these words in order to enforce my argument by the speeches and the votes on that occasion. That was on the 2d day of April, 1872; and the resolution is printed in the Globe, volume 89, at page 2105.

Mr. DAWES first made a general argument upon the antiquity and sacredness of this right in the representatives of the people. He was followed by other gentlemen, among them Mr. Maynard, of Tennessee. I wish to show how exactly parallel the cases are by reading from Mr. Maynard's speech what the original bill was that was transmitted to the Senate.

It was "An act to repeal existing duties on tea and coffee." It provided "that from and after the passage of this act all tea and coffee imported from foreign countries into the United States shall be, and the same are hereby, admitted free of duty." It came back to the House with its title changed to "An act to reduce existing taxes." The provision for removing the duties on tea and coffee was amended to take effect on the 1st of July then next. Then there was an additional provision as to tea and coffee which should be in store or bonded warehouses on that day. Then followed sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, "entirely different, different in their subject-matter, and different in the scope and intention of the legislation which they contemplated."

The question arose, Where is the limit of the power of amendment by the Senate? In England the Lords could not change a tariff bill at all. Our Constitution gives to the House the right to originate revenue bills to the exclusion of all interference by the Senate, except that the Senate "may propose and make amendments as on other bills." That is the limit and the sole limit in the case. The question therefore arises how may they "amend other bills?"

Mr. WILSON. What action was taken on the resolution offered by Mr. DAWES?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The resolution offered by Mr. DAWES was passed by a vote of 153 to 9.

The whole idea was, as Mr. Maynard remarked, the right of the Senate to amend revenue bills is a right to make an amendment "germane to the bill sent." It must be on the subject-matter which the House determined shall be voted upon.

Mr. HOAR, of Massachusetts, a man still in public life, I believe, used this language in that debate:

> First, by undertaking to make of a revenue bill sent there by this body a substantially new measure, it claims to originate for all practical purposes a money bill in defiance of the express provision of the Constitution.

Later on he added:

> And for that reason, for their sake, I call upon the House to guard at the threshold any attempt to extend them or to invade the prerogatives of this House, which are in substance the prerogatives of the American people.

What was the reason he asserted? It was that unless the Senate ceased to take to itself unconstitutional power, and to give the strength to a few small States to bury the voice of the great American people uttered by its representatives, the States would destroy the Senate. For that reason he begged the House to give them warning by that resolution.

Mr. HALE, another man also still in public life, I believe, called attention to the fact that it would prevent the passage of any bill at that time; that it was very important to pass the bill at that time. The same pressure was brought to bear then that has been brought to bear now, and yet the House paid no attention thereto.

I will not stop to quote from another debate which occurred in 1871 upon a resolution by Mr. Hooper, of Massachusetts, in which Mr. Garfield and other distinguished men, dead and alive, expressed their same disapprobation of such conduct by the Senate.

But I will call attention to one other thing that occurred within the parliamentary history of this body. In 1858, upon the regular post-office appropriation bill, the Senate placed twenty amendments; among them section 13, which increased the price of postage in some cases to 5 cents and in others to 10 cents. And because of that increase of postage the House raised the question of privilege, and they had a conference with the Senate on that subject.

I call attention to that because it is extremely strong in the light of the legislation of this country. Up to that time, so far as I am informed, the post-office law was never held to be a revenue measure at all. The whole post-office system of the United States was organized originally under a Senate bill. True, at common law the post-office was one of the means for the king's revenue. But we did not so consider it when the Department was organized.

Yet as late as 1858, so strongly did the House stickle for its privileges, that it disregarded all these facts, disregarded all these precedents, and refused even to look at the Senate amendments, even to regard the other nineteen, but simply said they would have naught to do with a bill on which the Senate had placed the thirteenth amendment, which infringed the privileges of the House.

Conference reports were made after 11 o'clock on the 3d of March, 1859. The matter of disagreement was the question of privilege, and they undertook to arrange the matter by unanimous consent. The House conferees agreed to put in another bill in the words of the original bill and pass it under a suspension of the rules and send it to the Senate, and the Senate conferees agreed to accept that bill, each party insisting that it had not violated any constitutional duty or any parliamentary law. But that was not agreed to.

The House allowed the appropriation bill for the Post-Office Department to fail absolutely because the Senate would not admit that what it thought had been done from the beginning of the Government in regard to the post-office was an infringement of the prerogatives of the House. The Senate itself, it is true, took no vote upon the conference report, but Mr. Toombs, of Georgia, spoke until the hour of 12, and thereby defeated its consideration.

In these speeches to which I alluded in my remarks Garfield, Maynard, HOAR, everybody so far as I remember, said that whatever was off the subject presented in a revenue bill was outside the privileges of the Senate; that inasmuch as the House had sent to the Senate a bill to make tea and coffee free, there was no authority on the part of the Senate to go outside of that and treat of anything but those two articles.

Now, has this House passed upon this question of germaneness? When, on the 6th of this month, gentlemen on the other side were complaining, as gentlemen are wont to complain, that this side of the House were obstructing tariff legislation, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] arose and said to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. KELLEY] that we would agree to take the Senate schedule on iron, and thereby save the days that must otherwise be passed in considering that important schedule. And the reply of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] was, "That proposition involves the surrender by this committee of one of the highest prerogatives of the popular branch of the legislative power of the Government." Yet when the Senate, under the guise of an amendment, sent us an absolutely different bill from any which we had suggested to them—a bill which swept over ground that we had never reviewed at all, that same chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has worked and voted day by day apparently to find out how to surrender the highest prerogatives of the House of Representatives to originate and debate questions raising revenue.

When the vote was taken on the 2d day of April, 1872, on the resolution of Mr. DAWES, there was, I am glad to observe, no division by party lines. One hundred and fifty-three members voted in favor of the resolution; not under a call of the previous question, not without debate, but after a long and satisfactory discussion pro and con. Only nine men voted in the negative. It may argue myself ignorant to say that I know not one of the nine. I believe I never heard of one of them. But this list of one hundred and fifty-three contains the names of men who have made their mark in the field and in the forum of this country. Some of them are still in the councils of the nation. I notice the names of CONGER and DAWES and FRYE and HALE and HOAR and others. What change has come over their dreams I know not. Why it is that men who in 1872 thought the Constitution violated by such action could repeat it in 1882, I know not. They "are wise and honorable and will no doubt with reasons answer" those who ask them. I cite the matter now to show that when they held in trust as we now hold in trust the privileges of the Representatives, they declared that they would not even take from the table for consideration a bill which, far less than this, violated the prerogatives of this House.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirty minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I reserve the residue of my time.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I send a resolution to the Clerk's desk as a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved, That this House, insisting always upon its privilege under the Constitution to originate all bills for raising revenue, and waiving no right thereunder in respect to House bill 5538 with Senate amendments thereto, hereby declares a disagreement with the Senate amendments to the same, and asks for a committee of conference thereon, to be composed of five members on the part of the House.

Mr. CARLISLE. I make a point of order on that resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is this offered by the gentleman from Iowa as a substitute?

Mr. KASSON. As a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point——

Mr. CARLISLE. That the bill is not now up for consideration for the purpose of agreeing or disagreeing to the Senate amendment. There is but one subject before the House.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. If we get it up we shall have no trouble about what to do with the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa will be heard on the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KASSON. I will address myself first to that point, which will involve necessarily both the resolutions. The resolution now before the House, submitted by the gentleman from Georgia, embraces two things: a declaration of unconstitutionality in the action of the Senate, and the laying upon the table of the entire bill originated in the House and amended by the Senate. If that proposition does not touch the very heart and essence of the final disposition of the bill, I know no motion that can do it. If the gentleman from Georgia has the right by a resolution submitted as a question of privilege to dispose absolutely of the bill and take it away from the jurisdiction of the House and the Senate, I have certainly the right to propose a resolution that keeps it within the consideration of both Houses and refers the whole question to a committee of conference. If the original resolution is in order, the substitute is certainly in order and with redoubled force. Is it possible that as a question of privilege a motion is in order to lay a bill on the table forever, taking it away from our consideration and jurisdiction, and at the same time a motion to keep that bill for consideration before the two Houses is not in order?

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman will allow me to ask him a question. If his proposed substitute is in order—that is to say if the bill is now before the House for consideration—I want to know why I may not rise in my place and move to amend the resolution so as to concur in the Senate amendment; and I give notice now that I shall make such a motion if this substitute is entertained.

Mr. KASSON. Let me ask the gentleman, does he support the motion made by the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. CARLISLE. That is not involved in this question.

Mr. KASSON. It is most decidedly involved as to the validity of the point the gentleman now makes.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman proposes to treat this bill as being up now for agreement or disagreement. If up for one purpose it is up for the other; and I give the gentleman notice now that if this proposition be entertained I shall move to agree instead of disagreeing.

Mr. KASSON. There is no objection to the notice of the gentleman; but I ask, if the bill is not in our possession on this question of privilege, how can we lay it on the table? That is an ultimate and final disposition of the bill.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. KASSON. Does the gentleman from Maryland rise to a point of order?

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I do. The pending question being a question of privilege as to whether this House can consider that bill, I submit that until this question has been decided it is the height of absurdity for either the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa or the one menaced by the gentleman from Kentucky to be entertained. The question pending, Mr. Speaker, is the question of privilege whether or not the bill can be considered at all. And until that has been disposed of it involves us in an absurd position, independently of any question as to the merits.

Mr. TUCKER. The considering what has been determined not to consider.

Mr. KASSON. To show the absurdity of the position of their resolution when he rises on a point of order to interrupt me——

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I call the gentleman to order, deeming that the proper mode of raising the point of order.

Mr. KASSON. But one question of order is pending.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. The point I make is that the gentleman from Iowa is not at liberty to discuss at present, even for consideration, any question going to the merits.

Mr. KASSON. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Maryland is out of order in taking me off my feet on a point of order, and so we may go on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa will be heard on the point of order.

Mr. KASSON. I say if this resolution is in order, and the Speaker ruled it in order, it disposes of the bill in one way; then my resolution is in order, which disposes of the bill in another way. And nobody can dispute it. If the bill is before the House for disposition to lay it on the table, it is before the House for disposition to send all the questions to a committee. I hope the gentleman from Maryland appreciates there is a point of order involved in that.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I will ask that the gentleman from Iowa shall confine himself to the point of order. Now, will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. KASSON. Yes.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I ask that the gentleman from Iowa, under the ruling of the Chair, shall confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. KASSON. But the Chair knows I am confining myself to the point of order, and I am sorry my friend from Maryland does not perceive it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me a moment?

Mr. KASSON. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to make the further point of order on the gentleman's resolution: first, that a motion that the bill do lay on the table cannot be amended as he suggested or as a substitute; and, secondly, that there can be no conference appointed on a bill until that bill has been called up and considered and upon the demand of any member, if it be a revenue bill, be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CALKINS. I wish to say——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CALKINS. My friend from Iowa yields to me for a moment.

Now, the Chair will observe the fallacy of the further point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], that the motion to lay on the table can not be amended when his question of privilege was entertained by the Speaker when the bill itself was not before the House. Therefore it is not under the rule a motion to lay the bill on the table, because you can not lay the bill on the table unless it is before the House for consideration. There is the fallacy of the gentleman's position. This is not a motion to lay on the table, although the language of his resolution is that the bill do lie on the table because it is an invasion of the prerogative of the House, as alleged. It is not within the rule the gentleman recites at all.

Mr. KASSON. I have only to add, Mr. Speaker, that if we are to get indirectly at the killing of the bill under one resolution, I claim the right to get at the saving of the life of the bill under another resolution.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I understand the proposition is pending.

Mr. KASSON. If it is pending I wish to speak to the merits of the resolution.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. That I object to until the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. KASSON. I will retain the floor in order to answer the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to dispose of the point of order. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] offered as a question of high constitutional privilege a resolution which brings up the question of the right of the House to originate revenue bills, and also involves the right of the Senate to amend a particular bill which passed the House. The Chair has held the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] in order for the purpose solely of taking the sense of the House on the question of the constitutional right of the House to originate such a bill as was brought here to the House from the Senate in the form of an amendment. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] offers a resolution as a substitute for that, proposing to waive whatever rights the House possesses under the Constitution in reference to this particular bill, and offering a proposition to declare at once a disagreement with the Senate amendments to the bill and ask for a conference committee, to be composed of five members on the part of the House. Independent of the pendency of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia, the substitute certainly could not be in order, and the question is, can it be made in order by reason of the fact that this constitutional question is made? The Chair thinks not. Even under the rule just adopted by the House having a special application to this House bill 5538, this resolution offered as a substitute would not be in order. It does not propose to take the House bill with Senate amendments from the Speaker's table for the purpose of a disagreement, as provided under the special rule. The Chair does not think anything can be done in the way of amendment to this resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia that raises questions other than such as grow out of the constitutional question or are incidental to it. The Chair does not say the subject might not be referred on disagreement; that is, the subject of the constitutional question might not be referred to a conference committee.

The Chair does not mean to say that now. But it is certainly not in order at this time by way of a substitute to the pending resolution until we have disagreed with the amendments of the Senate and the committee of conference has been asked for. It is said that the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia proposes to lay upon the table the bill sent from the Senate in the form of an amended House bill; and it is said in that connection that the bill is already upon the table. That is not quite a correct statement. The bill is not on the House table in the parliamentary sense of the word at all. It is upon the Speaker's table as distinguished from the table of the House. The precedents seem to allow, where the House is of the opinion that its constitutional prerogatives have been invaded, a resolution of this kind, which proposes to lay the bill—for the reason that its constitutional prerogatives have been invaded thereby—upon the table of the House as distinct or distinguished from the Speaker's table.

The Chair will hold, therefore, that the resolution offered by the gentleman from Iowa as a substitute for the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Georgia is not now in order.

Mr. KASSON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard upon the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Georgia.

I find in the resolution which he has submitted for the consideration of this House a proposition to lay upon the table the entire bill which has been returned from the Senate with certain amendments added thereto; and I have no question that, under the ruling of the Speaker just made upon the substitute which I presented, that part of the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia which proposes to lay the bill upon the table is not in order.

Then I turn to the question of the declaration of a violation of the privileges of the House, which the resolution also embodies, and while gentlemen at first sight, looking at the rules of the House, might assume that the Senate have violated the Constitution because they have not acted upon the rule of the House, a second thought will raise great doubt in the mind of everybody as to the correctness of that proposition or opinion.

Coming to the Constitution itself, the clause contains but three lines. Section 7 of article 1 of the Constitution declares:

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills.

"As on other bills," where they may offer a substitute for the entire bills, and are continually doing it—as amendments to the substance and form of bills, as they are continually doing upon other bills of the House sent to them for action.

But here it is said that as we proposed a revenue bill, a bill touching the internal revenues of this Government alone, therefore the Senate could not under the Constitution amend the bill by reducing taxes collected at the frontiers of the country instead of in the interior.

I ask gentlemen to look to the very heart and core of this question. I ask them to consider it in the light of reason and common sense. If this is a revenue bill, no matter whether it be internal or exterior; if it is a revenue bill, no matter if it embraces twenty items or twenty-one items; if it is a revenue bill, no matter whether it relates to internal revenue or external revenue or to both, then there attaches under the Constitution the power of the Senate to amend that bill on subjects germane to the constitutional subject-matter of the bill. What is the constitutional subject-matter of the bill? It is revenue. Not revenue derived from Schedule A, or revenue derived from Schedule B or any other special schedule. It is not revenue derived from the customs at the city of Cincinnati or the internal-revenue tax collected in the State of New York. It is revenue coming from the people of the United States. That is what makes it a revenue bill. Mr. Speaker, when we have originated such a revenue bill and sent it to the Senate for their concurrence the Senate may under their constitutional power add one amendment or two amendments or twenty amendments. They may add amendments as in the case of other bills under the Constitution.

When a subject of the importance and magnitude involved in the consideration of the bill to which I refer is presented, there should be no mere question of House pride. What we want is to get at the very essence of the Constitution and observe it; and that essence is that they can not touch revenue questions in the Senate, having no power to originate revenue bills until we send them a bill as the foundation for their action. But when we have raised the question of revenue, when we have given them jurisdiction of it by our action under the Constitution, I ask any gentleman to say to me what class of revenue is excluded under the Constitution from their power of amendments? Now, in this view I know that there are gentlemen on both sides of this House who concur with me. While, therefore, they have gone far in this case, they were not bound by the rules of this House which make a tariff amendment not germane to a bill relating to internal revenue. They have no such rule in the Senate, or if they had such a rule they had the right to waive it. But they could not go beyond the principle of the Constitution; and the question here to be determined is whether by their action they have added something to this bill, which under their rules they had a perfect right to add, though by such addition they have violated the rules of this House, and its privileges and prerogatives under the Constitution.

And who would have claimed it, sir, if they had put a simple reduction on one article, a large article of revenue, and thus sent the bill back to the House with but one item? This question would not probably have been raised. And yet the same right to add a thousand exists as the right to add one. The point is simply—is it a revenue bill? If it be a revenue bill we send it to them; and under this clause of the Constitution their right to amend exists, literally as the words are, "as on other bills."

Mr. BELFORD. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. KASSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BELFORD. Suppose we pass a bill reducing the tax on the article of tobacco, has the Senate the power to go beyond the scope of the subject that we send to them? Can they, under the pretense of amending a tax-bill on the subject of tobacco, submit to this House a bill contemplating a complete and comprehensive and all-embracing revision of the tariff? Is not that an assumption of our power and a revolution?

Mr. KASSON. I answer the gentleman from Colorado with the Constitution itself. Have we sent them a tariff bill? He answers, yes. Have the Senate amended it? Yes. How far have they amended it? That is not a constitutional question. How far, is for the consideration of the Senate and then for the consideration of the House afterward. The Senate has the right of amendment; that no man can deny; and if the Constitution does not contain the limitation upon that right, how can we fix the limitation without the authority of the Constitution?

Now, that is all I think I need to say, for it is the gist of the constitutional argument.

One word more by way of an excuse for the action which has been taken under the Constitution. By the bill creating the Tariff Commission, to which the House assented by nearly two-thirds, the report of the commission went to both Houses at the same time. At the time it went to the Senate it had this revenue bill before it by order of the House. We sent the tariff subject to them through the Tariff Commission bill. The session was a short one and they proceeded to act upon it under the constitutional power, as doubtless they would not have done if the action of the Tariff Commission had not been referred to them by law. The whole tariff question was referred to the Senate by law.

So far for extenuation of the scope of the amendments made by the Senate. Now, here we are in the last five days of the session. We can not afford to lay this bill on the table and thus kill what every industry of the country is demanding of us to-day. We have no time even to waste on this discussion. I beg pardon for speaking so long as I have spoken; but I have desired to call the patriotic attention of both sides of the House to the fact that we must not run wild on the theory that the rules of the House of Representatives make the constitution that governs both bodies.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to offer a substitute for the pending motion, and to say a word thereon.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] offers as a substitute the resolution which he has sent to the desk, and which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas House bill 5538 entitled "An act to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and for other purposes," under the form of an amendment in the Senate to title 33 of the Revised Statutes, which provides for duties on imports, has been so modified and changed by the introduction of new provisions, containing among other things a general revision of the statutes referred to so as both to increase and reduce duties on imports, and in many instances to repeal and in others to amend the laws imposing import duties; and

Whereas in the opinion of this House it is believed that such changes and alterations are in conflict with the true intent and purpose of the Constitution, which requires that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives: Therefore,

Resolved, That if this bill shall be referred to a committee of conference, it shall be the duty of the conferees on the part of the House on said committee to consider fully the constitutional objections to said bill as amended by the Senate herein referred to, and to bring the same, together with the opinion of the House in regard thereto, before said committee of conference, and if necessary, in their opinion, after having conferred with the Senate conferees, said conferees on said committee may make report to the House in regard to the objections to said bill herein referred to.

Mr. CARLISLE. I make the point of order on that resolution.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the Speaker what rights this bill had prior to the adoption of the new rule a few moments since by this House; if we had any right except to go to the Speaker's table after the morning hour and take up the bills thereon for consideration? The new rule makes the privilege. The new rule has provided just what kind of a motion may be made for the purpose of taking this bill from the Speaker's table and referring it to a committee of conference, and that may be done upon a motion to suspend the rules by a majority vote. That is a specific, special rule, made for that purpose; and as I understand it, was made because there was no other way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from California to rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PAGE. That is what I did. I wanted to know under what rule we could proceed to take this bill from the Speaker's table, except under the new rule just made.

The SPEAKER. It could be taken from the Speaker's table as any other bill if the House decided to go there.

Mr. PAGE. Is it in order to make a motion to go now to the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. Not pending this question.

Mr. PAGE. Did not that new rule provide specifically what sort of a motion should be made?

The SPEAKER. But this is a question entirely independent of that.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to know what is now the status of the question before the House. I am unable to determine; I admit I can not comprehend it.

The SPEAKER. The question presented is the one by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] in the form of a resolution declaring the sense of the House on the question of its constitutional right to originate revenue bills.

Mr. PAGE. And that is left to the House to determine?

The SPEAKER. That is for the House to determine, not the Chair.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the House will determine it.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7321) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department.

ORIGINATING REVENUE BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] offers a substitute for the pending resolution submitted by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND]. Against that substitute the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] makes a point of order, and the gentleman will be heard.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Before the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] proceeds I desire to make a further point of order, and the gentleman can then be heard upon both.

Under the joint rule of the House conferences are provided for, and under no other rule that I am apprised of, except the rule which prescribes that where there are disagreements upon amendments to a bill or a joint resolution there may be committees of conference.

Now, to appoint a committee of conference in anticipation that possibly there may be a disagreement is entirely outside of the practice of the House. The resolution of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL], as I understand it, repeats almost the words of my resolution, and then declares that instead of the bill remaining upon the Speaker's table where it is now practically, if the House shall vote that its privileges have been violated, and if certain things happen, there may be a conference which can deal with the bill.

Now, I submit that there can be no conference except upon the disagreement about the question of constitutional privilege, because that is the only question about which the two Houses may disagree, until the bill is taken from the Speaker's table. I desire to make that additional point that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] may speak upon it.

Mr. CARLISLE. According to my hasty reading of the proposed substitute, it would confer upon the conference committee the power not only to take into consideration and report upon the constitutional question raised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], but the additional power to take up and consider the objections to the Senate amendment or bill itself. In other words, it proposes that if a conference shall result from this disagreement between the two Houses as to the question of their powers under the Constitution the deliberations of that conference shall not be confined to the constitutional question, but may extend to the provisions of the bill. The last clause of the substitute is the one to which I refer:

> And the said conferees in said committee may make report to the House in regard to the objections to said bill herein referred to.

Now, if the gentleman from Kansas will say that he means by that only simply to confer upon the committee of conference, if one shall result from this disagreement, a thing which may or may not occur, the power to consider the constitutional question, the mere question of privilege existing between the two Houses, then my point of order would not be well taken.

But if the gentleman means now to pass a resolution with reference to the substance of the bill, to refer that to the committee of conference, I submit that it can not be done unless the bill is now before the House for consideration. And if it is now before the House for consideration, or can be brought before the House for consideration by entertaining this proposition, then the first point that would be made of course under our rules would be that it must go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. If that point should not be sustained, then the next motion having preference under the rules of the House as they now stand would be to concur in the Senate amendment.

If the gentleman will so change the language of his resolution as to confine the deliberations and power of this conference to the question of privilege that may arise, I have nothing to say on the point of order. Otherwise there exists to it the same objection as to the one proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON].

Mr. HASKELL. I urge the adoption of the substitute just as it is. It speaks for itself. This House by its order has just declared a new rule by which a great bill of moment to the people of the United States is to be referred to a conference made up of a committee of each House of Congress, to the end that we may have and accomplish some legislation in the interest of the people. One bill, the one considered by the House, is dead, killed by delay and obstruction.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. HASKELL. I am coming to the point of order. There is today upon the Speaker's table another bill, coming from the Senate of the United States. Upon that bill arises the question of order. Upon that bill hangs the hope and the faith of the people of the United States that before we adjourn we shall have tariff legislation.

The House has now declared in favor of a conference committee, and this resolution of mine simply directs that that conference committee shall take cognizance of the constitutional point raised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND]. The point of order is made that a conference committee must confine itself to the constitutional question and that it can in no wise discuss the subject-matter of the bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman misunderstands me.

Mr. HASKELL. That was the point of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], that the conference upon the constitutional question is one thing, and that a conference upon the constitutional question and the subject-matter of the bill could not be joined.

Now, I want to show to the House in a few brief sentences how utterly untenable that position is. A conference committee is appointed on the constitutional question of difference between the two Houses. They meet the conferees on the part of the Senate, and to illustrate we will say that the Senate conferees agree to withdraw every objectionable amendment.

Now, do gentlemen on the other side of the House tell me that that conference committee on the question of constitutional right have not the power to report to this House the fact that the Senate withdraws its objectionable amendments and vacates its position with reference to this bill? Why, of course that conference committee must have that power.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to hear the gentleman from Kansas as to the meaning which he himself gives to the latter part of the proposed substitute.

Mr. HASKELL. Taking the other view of the matter I give this meaning: that it is in effect a resolution of instruction to a conference committee—a resolution to lay before that conference committee, which will have been appointed upon the bill under the new rule, this question of constitutionality; so that when the House appoints its conference on the bill that committee may report back to the House its findings on the bill and also its finding on the constitutional question raised. It is as competent for this House to direct one conference committee to examine both questions by order of the House as it is competent for this House to appoint two conference committees; and we proceed under the direct order of the House that there shall be a conference committee of five upon the subject-matter of the bill. The resolution then simply declares that when that conference committee shall be raised there shall be confided to it for its jurisdiction and its report the matter of constitutional difference between the two Houses.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I call the gentleman from Kansas to order.

Mr. HASKELL. If the gentleman will allow me, it therefore——

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I rise to call the gentleman to order.

Mr. HASKELL. I heard the gentleman say something, but I have not heard any declaration from the Chair.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I call the gentleman to order, and make the same point with regard to him that I did with reference to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON]. I submit that the Chair can not entertain or hear debate upon a question of conference between the two Houses when the pending question is a question of the privileges of this House.

What has a conference to do with that? I submit to the Chair that no member of the House is at liberty to move for a conference when the question at issue is a question of the privileges of the House itself.

Mr. HASKELL. Well, now, Mr. Speaker, I have here upon my desk precedent after precedent where the constitutional question has been raised by resolution and conference committees have been appointed on that constitutional question, have gone out and come back and reported.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HASKELL. I want to conclude what I have to say and then I will yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HASKELL. In the Thirty-fifth Congress this same question of constitutional difference between the two Houses arose, and I have here the record of a resolution which was passed by the House in reference thereto. Let me read it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Will the gentleman be kind enough to give the date?

Mr. HASKELL. March 3, 1859:

> Mr. Letcher, from the committee of conference on the disagreement between the two Houses, in the resolutions adopted by them respectively, in relation to the action of the House on the Senate amendments to the bill, House resolution No. 872, making appropriations for defraying the expenses of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1860, reported that having met, after full and free conference, they have agreed—> that while neither House is understood to waive any constitutional right which they may respectively consider to belong to them, it be recommended to the House to pass the accompanying bill, and that the Senate concur in the same when it shall be sent to them.

Agreed to what?—

Now, there was a conference committee charged by one simple resolution of the House, and likewise charged by a similar resolution of the Senate, to go out and take cognizance of all the disagreements between the two Houses on the constitutional question as well as the question of the bill. They came back and reported to this House the opinion they had formed concerning the constitutional right of the two Houses.

They did more; having been appointed in general terms to take into consideration all questions of difference, they perfected a new bill—a new Post-Office appropriation bill, arranged and dictated its terms, and brought it back into the House of Representatives.

Mr. CARLISLE. They recommended that the House pass a new bill. The House did pass a new bill and the Senate refused to concur.

Mr. HASKELL. They brought back a bill which they had themselves considered, and in their report they respectfully requested the House to pass the bill. The House proceeded to pass it. That was the question.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Kansas be kind enough to send to the Chair the book to which he has referred?

Mr. REAGAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that this debate should be prolonged.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. As I made the point of order, I would be glad to be heard a moment upon it.

Mr. REED. I would like to be heard for a short time.

Mr. HASKELL. I will yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not yield when he has taken the floor to discuss a point of order.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kansas whether his proposition involves, first, the constitutional question, and, secondly, the merits of the bill which comes from the Senate?

Mr. HASKELL. It does not. I want to state to the House exactly what the proposition I have sent up does involve.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Kansas has concluded. Other gentlemen have some rights.

Mr. HASKELL. Let me state to the Chair what the provision of the resolution is. [Cries of "Order!"] The resolution touches the constitutional question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] is recognized.

Mr. HASKELL. May I not answer the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY], my colleague on the committee? [Cries of "Order!"] May I not answer a gentleman who desires information as to the effect of my resolution?

Mr. MCKINLEY rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas has yielded the floor; he can not make another speech.

Mr. MCKINLEY. But I presume we are all seeking the truth of this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. HASKELL. I do not want the House deceived as to the proposition I have submitted.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I call the gentleman from Kansas to order.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a question of personal privilege, then, on the floor of this House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, that is desperate!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. HASKELL. My question of personal privilege is that I am denied my rights under the parliamentary law of the House upon this floor.

Mr. KENNA rose.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman finished his statement?

Mr. HASKELL. I have.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, in the first place, that the gentleman is sadly in error, because he only had the floor to debate a question on a point of order, which is subject to limitation at any time, under the uniform practice, by the Speaker.

A MEMBER. That is right.

The SPEAKER. And the Speaker, recognizing the gentleman as having finished, recognized another gentleman, and the gentleman from Kansas is not entitled to an hour in debating a point of order unless the Chair chooses to allow it. Now, the Chair says for that reason the rights of the gentleman have not in any way been infringed. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HASKELL. Then I rise to a parliamentary question.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I desire to know, Mr. Speaker, whether I can have the floor taken from me in this way?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman rises to a parliamentary question, and he will state it.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a parliamentary question, and gentlemen on the other side will not take me off the floor by scowls or by any other process; let that be understood now.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It seems the Speaker can not take him off the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman rises to a parliamentary inquiry; that is his right.

Mr. KENNA. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has no right to take the entleman from Georgia off the floor for that purpose.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to ask a parliamentary question or to submit a question to the Chair. Will the Chair recognize me——

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I submit whether by any question he can take me off the floor.

The SPEAKER. Let the question be stated.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I do not care what it is. I deny his right to be asking questions while I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had not commenced his speech.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I desire the Speaker shall decide, that is all, whether he can interrupt me by any question without my consent——

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides to hear the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Very well.

The SPEAKER. Not to take the gentleman from the floor.

Mr. HASKELL. I make the parliamentary inquiry whether it is not in order for me to ask the Speaker of the House to submit to the House a request on my part for unanimous consent to reply to my colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY]?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. That is out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair simply asserts his own right in reference to the conduct of this debate, and the gentleman from Georgia is recognized and will proceed.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the precedent the gentleman has cited from the Thirty-fifth Congress gives him no aid when the facts of the case are stated. As I said, the Senate placed an amendment on a House bill which the House thought violated the privileges of that body, and it proceeded so to resolve and to notify the Senate. (See Globe, 38 vol., 1666.) After the Senate had been so notified, it resolved that it had not violated the privileges of the House, and on that question there was a conference committee appointed. (Ib., 1674.) After that the House appointed a like committee. (Ib., 1677.)

The gentlemen ask for a conference in advance of a disagreement, in advance of a declaration by this House that its privileges have been violated. There is no parliamentary practice which allows a conference to be appointed in anticipation of disagreement. True, a rule has been passed here that when certain action is taken toward taking up that bill there may be a conference, and that is by virtue of that new rule only—when the bill is called up under that rule only.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, a precedent can not be found where when the question of its highest privilege was presented to the House the House deliberated how to get rid of asserting its privilege. I submit that never before did the representatives of any portion of the American people seek to avoid the claim of all that is valuable to their constituency.

The object of that resolution is to declare in advance that there will be a conference, and instructs the committee of conference in advance what they may do. I do not believe the Senate of the United States will differ with this House. I believe that the Senate of the United States will say that they, urged by clamor, have done an unseemly thing, and will recede from their position. They will consent to withdraw their bill, and when they shall have withdrawn it and sent another bill here, if they see proper to send any, then will come the time for conference about a bill.

But suppose they take the other view, and say, with all due deference to the House, they have not violated our privileges, and ask a conference on that question. Can we anticipate what the House will wish to do in regard to that controversy, or how to instruct that conference committee?

We might choose to pass a further resolution of the House, as in 1641 the Commons of England did, that the House will have naught to do with the bill until its privileges were recognized.

The gentleman's resolution, therefore, in anticipation is entirely out of order. I do not care what he means by it. The question is: what do the written words mean? What would the conferees understand the words to mean? They could but understand them to mean that it would give them instructions upon a difference which has never arisen and which may never arise and on the merits of the question.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I think if the attention of the House is called back to the actual facts presented in this case as they really exist, that there can be no point of order, and that the gentleman from Kentucky will not be disposed to make any point of order upon the proposition.

This is a proposition that rests upon an "if." It is "if" this bill is sent to the committee of conference, as it can be by the rule just adopted, then in that event a certain constitutional question which is raised can be presented to that same committee of conference, and by our conferees presented to the conferees of the Senate; and if our conferees see fit they can make a report thereon to the House. That is all there is of it.

Now, this resolution—this substitute which is offered—contains nothing whatever except reference to the constitutional question. It has no reference whatever to the difference in the tariff bill, the amendments thereto, to be discussed and agreed upon or rejected as the case may be——

Mr. CARLISLE. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. REED. That bill as a legislative measure from the nature of the case goes to a conference commitee by another and separate motion made under the rule which has been already passed by the House. It is entirely competent for the House after raising the constitutional question to take any action which it sees fit to take in regard thereto. It may insist irrevocably upon its constitutional objection, and put the bill upon the table, such as has been done hitherto, and just as is proposed by the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Georgia; or it may send the whole matter to a conference committee to be discussed and considered by agents of both Houses. After that the question is simply, what will the House do? It is competent for the House to do anything which it considers suitable and proper under the circumstances. It has full power over the measure, and can act upon it as in its judgment it may deem advisable. But I do not desire, nor is it necessary now, to go into the merits. When that question comes up I desire again to be heard; but for the present it seems to me that the question before the House needs no further elucidation.

Mr. CARLISLE. Let me ask the gentleman from Maine a question.

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CARLISLE. Inasmuch as he has been commenting on the effect of this resolution——

Mr. REED. Precisely.

Mr. CARLISLE. Do I understand the gentleman from Maine to say that this proposed substitute does not bring the bill before the House at all?

Mr. REED. I mean to say that distinctly; that it does nothing of the kind.

Mr. CARLISLE. And that the vote on the adoption of that substitute would not be a vote disagreeing to the amendments to the bill which have been submitted by the Senate?

Mr. REED. Precisely.

Mr. CARLISLE. Then I understand the gentleman to say further that the effect of the adoption of this resolution would be simply to send the matter to the committee of conference——

Mr. REED. If one is ordered.

Mr. CARLISLE. If one should be appointed?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. CARLISLE. And that on the constitutional question or question of privilege the House has expressed no opinion?

Mr. REED. The House has expressed an opinion.

Mr. CARLISLE. But does the substitute which has been presented express an opinion?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CARLISLE. There is, as I gathered from the reading, a preamble reciting certain points, but the House resolves in adopting that resolution nothing with reference to these constitutional prerogatives which are involved in the preamble. I think if the Clerk will read the resolution again this will be seen.

The SPEAKER. In the second clause of the preamble the House undertakes to express an opinion, but if the gentleman desires it the proposition may be again read.

Mr. CARLISLE. I should like to have it read again.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas House bill 5538, entitled "An act to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and for other purposes," under the form of an amendment in the Senate to title 33 of the Revised Statutes, which provides for duties on imports, has been so modified and changed by the introduction of new provisions, containing among other things a general revision of the statutes referred to, so as both to increase and reduce duties on imports, and in many instances to repeal and in others to amend the laws imposing impost duties; and

Whereas in the opinion of this House it is believed all such changes and alterations are in conflict with the true intent and purpose of the Constitution which requires that all bills for raising revenues shall originate in the House of Representatives: Therefore,

Resolved, That if this bill shall be referred to a committee of conference it shall be the duty of the conferees on the part of the House on said committee to consider fully the constitutional objections to said bill as amended by the Senate and herein referred to, and to bring the same together with the opinion of the House in regard thereto before said committee of conference; and if necessary in their opinion, after having conferred with the Senate conferees, said conferees in said committee may make report to the House in regard to the objections to said bill herein referred to.

Mr. CARLISLE. Referred to herein.

Mr. REED. Objections herein referred to, not bill herein referred to.

Mr. CARLISLE. Now, it was formerly a well-established parliamentary law that a committee of conference could not be instructed at all. But a practice has grown up in this House of instructing a committee of conference; sometimes, in a very indirect way, of passing a resolution declaring the opinion of the House as to the matter in conference. But it is well established, even in this House that no committee of conference can be instructed until after there has been a disagreement. That the Speaker will find frequently stated in our Digest; not in our rules, but in the Digest.

Now, here is an attempt to instruct a committee of conference which has not even yet been ordered, upon a supposition that one may be ordered at some time hereafter by the House upon the bill, as to what that committee may do or may not do. If the latter part of the resolution should be stricken out or the language of it should be made so plain that there can be no misunderstanding as to the actual purpose of this House, I concede, as I said before, that the point of order made by me would not be good.

There may be another objection to it different from what I have suggested which I shall not urge now, because it would come more properly from some member of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. REAGAN rose.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to give notice——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to decide this question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not want to argue this question of order, but want to submit a question of order if it should become necessary in the event of the point now pending being overruled.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] on the point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. Under the rule of the House adopted this morning provision is made for the reference of this bill to a conference committee. But that was to be preceded by a vote which declares the disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Now, it seems to me if the resolution of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] can be adopted by the House now, we have simply again amended the rules of the House; that we are not proceeding under the original proposition, but are going on to amend the rules simply by the vote of the House.

It seems to be conceded by gentlemen that we may refer a question as to the constitutional privileges of the House to a conference committee. I venture this statement, and I do it for the purpose of calling the attention of gentlemen who make this concession, that I do not believe in the whole legislative history of this country the naked question of the privileges of the House as submitted by the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia has ever been submitted to a conference with the Senate. Why, sir, are we to ask the very body we charge with a violation of the privileges of the House whether it has violated our privileges or not? Is that a question for the Senate? Is it a question we should submit to a conference whether or not we have privileges which the Senate has violated?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I want to know whether I rightly understand this resolution or not. If I am wrong I hope the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] will correct me. I understand this committee of conference, if it shall be appointed under the resolution of the gentleman from Kansas, will have no power or authority to report touching anything except the question of the infringement of the constitutional prerogative of the House to originate money bills; that they will not be authorized to report back to this House any recommendation touching the revision of the tariff.

Mr. REED. I will try to make it plain to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH]. All that this resolution relates to is the constitutional question. It sends the constitutional question to the committee of conference to be hereinafter appointed. Now, that committee of conference will get its power over the bill, not from this resolution, but from the rule which has already been passed, and by action under the rule, and in no other way.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But that conference committee then may, when in its judgment it deems it wise, proceed to make such changes and modifications on the bill——

Mr. REED. Not under this resolution.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But the action must be concurrent. When you appoint the conference committee they receive their power by virtue of the proposition or further rule which we adopted this morning.

Mr. BLACKBURN rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is willing to rule without further argument.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I should like to be heard a few moments, unless the debate on this question is to be confined altogether to the other side of the House.

The SPEAKER. It has not been.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It has been for some time past, except that the Chair heard the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to call attention to the peculiar answer made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] to the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH]. We are told that this committee of conference, if it shall be raised, will have power under the proposed resolution of the gentleman from Kansas to inquire into and report upon the constitutional prerogatives of this House; and under that thing called a rule which was passed here to-day they will have power to report upon a revision of this tariff bill; so that putting the two together, the effect of the rule so called and the effect of the proposed resolution now submitted, the committee of conference will have power to do more than I want to see done.

Mr. ROBESON. If the gentleman from Kentucky will permit me one moment I think I may make the subject plain.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would yield to the gentleman if he wanted to ask me a question. But I wanted to make something plain myself.

Mr. ROBESON. I want to make this point plain. I am sure the gentleman from Kentucky will permit me. It is this: That this bill contains two separate fields of enactment. One is the internal-revenue question, which was sent from this House to the Senate and originated here. There is no constitutional objection to that. We have under our rule provided for a conference on that. We provide under this resolution, if it should pass, for a declaration of this House that the tariff amendment to the internal-revenue bill is an invasion of the privileges of this House, and direct that committee of conference to present that question to the Senate and to report their action to the House. And so, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BLACKBURN. It seems to me that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON], while actuated, I have no doubt, by the kindliest motives to aid me, has done nothing in that direction. I come back now, with his permission, in my own time to say just what I was trying to say when he made his speech in my time.

It is that it is claimed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], and had as well be admitted here and understood, that this committee of conference, if you raise it, will be authorized to do two things: That under the rule passed this morning it will have authority to revise the tariff features of the pending bill, and under the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] it will have the authority to inquire into, report, or act upon, for it is made discretionary, the question of the constitutional privileges of this House.

The question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] therefore remains unanswered, and I answer it for him now, and tell him yes; that if the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Kansas be agreed to, you will send out of this House a committee of conference charged with the double power and the double duty of inquiring into and reporting upon both the question of constitutional prerogative and the question of revision of the tariff features of this bill. And, more, it is an abnegation of power, after the fashion of the electoral commission or the Tariff Commission, to which some of us have always been opposed.

I want to call the attention of the Speaker to this point; it is a direct, flat, and palpable violation of your own rules, doctored as you have doctored them. That being the case, under the rules, if there be any rules left to this House, it proposes to change the rules and it must lie over for one day, and we will insist upon that point of order. You have made the rules to suit you. Now we simply ask that you observe them. If you want to change them, you must at least conform to the requirements that are still left in force and permit that proposed change to lie over for one day.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] is answered, and no man will traverse the statement. If the resolution offered by the gentleman from Kansas is agreed to, then you send out of this House a conference committee clothed with special powers both upon questions of constitutional prerogative and upon the question of the revision of the tariff as submitted by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question before he yields the floor. What possible advantage would it be to the House to inquire into the constitutional question after the House has acted on the Senate bill and rejected the amendments?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No earthly use, because no result would follow.

Mr. BRAGG. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRAGG. Under the rules and practice of this House, and of every other deliberative body, do we ever send any matters to conference that are not in dispute between the two Houses?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will endeavor to answer that question.

Mr. BRAGG. I think the answer to that must be no. We have here made a declaration of privilege which is not yet denied by the Senate. Why shall we send it to a conference?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman said he rose to make a parliamentary inquiry, and then he answered it himself. The Chair is prepared to decide this question.

Mr. BRAGG. My first statement was my premise, and upon that I based the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman answered his own question.

Mr. BRAGG. That was my premise, and upon that I asked a question which I desire the Speaker to answer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer it as far as he can.

Mr. BRAGG. Whether if it stands in that position, with our rights so far undisputed, is it in order to refer that undisputed question of privilege to a committee of conference composed in part of members of another branch of the Legislature, which has not yet denied the assertion we make.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say in answer, so far as it is necessary to answer the question made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG], and it is necessary to do it only so far as affects this question, that it is quite competent on presenting a matter which is clearly in opposition to the action of the Senate, and in the first instance, to declare a disagreement and to ask for a conference.

The Chair is perfectly well satisfied that the proposed substitute would not be in order if it undertook to do anything more in the first instance than to provide for a disagreement with the Senate on the constitutional right of the House or of the two Houses, and then to refer that disagreement and other subjects connected with the bill to a committee of conference.

Committees of conference are not appointed, as has been suggested, by virtue of joint rules of the two Houses, because, as the Chair understands, there have been no joint rules of the two Houses recognized by either House for a number of years. Committees of conference have grown up in practice; either House may ask a conference on any matter of disagreement. The Chair does not think that upon a matter about which there is no disagreement, and none proposed by the action of the House with the Senate, a conference could properly be asked for. Nor does the Chair think that under the guise of providing for a conference other rules of the House may be overridden. If this resolution is subject to the construction that it sends the bill to the conference committee, in case the Senate should agree to it, then it would have to be held that under the right to provide for a committee of conference we could override our rules in reference to the manner of proceeding to business on the Speaker's table, and we could override Rule XX, which requires that a Senate amendment to a revenue or appropriation bill shall be first considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, without declaring a disagreement in the Senate amendment, send it directly to a committee of conference. If this proposed substitute would do that, the Chair would hold it to be not in order.

But before coming to consider what the plain meaning of the language is, the Chair desires to call attention to the precedent, as it is claimed, which arose in March, 1859. On an examination of that case, which involved the constitutional right of the Senate to originate a post-office appropriation bill, it will be found that a resolution very similar, certainly in effect, to the proposed substitute was adopted in the House by a very large vote, and a conference was agreed to by the Senate. The conferees on the part of the two Houses met and considered only, as the Globe of that time will show, the question of constitutional difference between the two Houses, and reported upon that. Without undertaking to settle the question one way or the other, the conference committee made a report declaring in effect that neither House receded from its position on the subject, and then, as it was the day before the expiration of the Congress, recommended in the latter clause of the report that each House should waive any constitutional right which they respectively considered to belong to them and that the House should pass the bill which was brought to the House.

The history of those proceedings shows, however, that after this bill was brought to the House it was not treated at all as a bill brought there by the conference committee. Mr. Letcher, of Virginia, a member of the conference committee on the part of the House, after the report was received and before it was acted upon, obtained unanimous consent to introduce the precise bill which was recommended by the committee of conference. It was introduced by unanimous consent, read a first and second time as an original bill, and subsequently that bill passed as a House bill upon a suspension of the rules. It was not treated as any matter offered to the House properly by the committee of conference. The committee of conference certainly transcended to some extent its duties by recommending the House to take up a bill, that subject not having been referred to the committee; but it was a mode of getting out of the difficulty and saving an appropriation bill in the expiring hours of the Congress. Thus in this particular case we find a precedent only for a resolution of the House referring the constitutional question to a committee of conference, the House having first declared its opinion that the Senate had not the right to originate the particular bill.

Now, a fair reading of this proposed substitute leads the Chair to hold that it provides only for referring to a conference committee the constitutional objections to the bill, such as grow out of the alleged violations of the Constitution by the Senate of the United States in passing an impost bill as a part of or an amendment to an internal-revenue bill of the House. The second clause of the preamble clearly provides for a disagreement with the Senate upon this constitutional question. The Chair, giving this substitute the construction it has indicated, holds that the substitute is in order, and therefore overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. REED. I move that the appeal be laid on the table.

The motion of Mr. REED was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I move the previous question upon the resolution and substitute.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I would like to know how the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] takes me off the floor to make a motion.

Mr. REED. The gentleman abandoned the floor himself.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I reserved, by consent of the House, half an hour of my time.

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman having the floor has the right to make a motion that the rules allow; but the gentleman from Georgia reserved at the conclusion of his speech thirty minutes of his hour.

Mr. REED. I have no objection to the gentleman having his thirty minutes pending the call for the previous question.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I object to any arrangement of the kind.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia. He can yield his time or use it, as he chooses.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I ask the Chair whether or not the previous question, moved while I am entitled to the floor, is in order.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman yields the floor, it is.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The Chair says, "If the gentleman from Georgia yields the floor." I wish to know whether I did yield it when I expressly reserved the right to speak.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not called upon to decide a question which is not presented. The gentleman from Georgia is now recognized as entitled to the floor for thirty minutes.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Before the gentleman from Georgia proceeds I want to be heard. I do not understand that the debate is closed upon the question of privilege. I desire to be heard in opposition——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia desire to proceed now?

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be recognized.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. My appeal to the gentleman from Georgia is simply to continue to reserve his time.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I have reserved it. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Before the gentleman from Kentucky proceeds I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know from the Chair whether the debate is closed? I submit there is no rule permitting this arrangement to be made; and I object to it. This is not by any means like a question where a bill has been introduced. The gentleman from Georgia, by unanimous consent, and that is the only fair and honorable way of looking at this matter, reserved thirty minutes, which he had no right to do under our rules. But he had unanimous consent to reserve thirty minutes, and I am not raising any objection to his so reserving his time. But I wish the Chair to recognize me to be heard in my own right in opposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KNOTT. While I entertain the profoundest respect for the opinion of my distinguished friend from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], I trust it will not be deemed impertinent in me to suggest that it seems to me that there can be no possible difficulty in solving the question of privilege supposed in the resolutions under discussion provided we are content with the plain, written language of the Constitution, and that all the difficulty which gentlemen have professed to discover in the matter, either now or heretofore, has grown out of the fact that they have not been satisfied to be governed by the simple provisions in the fundamental law of our Government, but have insisted in looking beyond them to the principles of English parliamentary practice, which have no more force or effect here than the decrees of the Medes and Persians or the mandates of the Tycoon of Japan.

It is well known on all hands that under the parliamentary law of Great Britain the power to originate "money bills" or bills for raising revenue is vested exclusively in the House of Commons, and that that body has always been so jealous of that privilege that the House of Lords has never been allowed to propose even the smallest amendment to such a measure; and, sir, if such were the law here the present question of privilege could not have arisen.

But such is not and never has been the rule under our Constitution. Under the provisions of that instrument Congress—not the House of Representatives, but Congress—has the power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, that is, to raise revenue by any or all of the enumerated methods.

While the framers of the Constitution thus conferred upon the two Houses of Congress concurrently the power to raise revenue, they simply provided that all bills for that purpose should originate in the House of Representatives, but conferred upon the Senate the absolute, unconditional, and unlimited power of proposing or concurring in amendments thereto. The language of the first clause of section 7, article 1, of the Constitution is that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills."

Nothing could be plainer, simpler, or easier understood than this. It is too plain indeed for either question or interpretation. It means, and can only mean that bills for raising revenue must originate in this House, and can not be originated anywhere else, but that after it has been originated and sent to the Senate that body has an unlimited, unqualified, absolute right to propose any amendment to it which its judgment may suggest, and all that is then left for the House is either to concur or non-concur with such proposed amendment. There is the whole matter, sir. No amount of strained construction can get away from it. There is no question of privilege about it.

It is necessary, for instance, to raise a given amount of revenue. It may be raised by a direct tax, by duties on imports, or excises, but the initiation must be taken by the House, whatever may be the method resolved upon. The bill must originate here or it can not originate at all; and in originating it the House may select any one or all the methods authorized. It is sent to the Senate, which may disagree with the House either as to the amount to be raised or the methods of raising it.

It may under its constitutional power to amend strike out the entire bill from the enacting clause down and substitute another which in its judgment may be better calculated to answer the end proposed. In a word, sir, the Senate has just as much right to amend a revenue bill as this House has to originate it. Its power is just as absolute and unqualified as our own.

Now, sir—[Here the hammer fell.] I ask for one minute more, in order to complete my thought. If gentlemen will consent to be governed by the first, plain, cardinal canon of legal construction they will discover no difficulty whatever in this question. That simple, common-sense rule is that where the words employed in a given instance are plain and unambiguous they must be taken to mean precisely what they say. No interpretation is necessary or to be allowed. The language here is plain, so plain that the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not be mistaken about it.

This obvious principle of legal construction, then, determines this whole question. This simple, unmistakable language of the Constitution is now sought to be evaded by citations of ill-considered, fallacious precedents; and this leads me to repeat an expression which has often risen to my lips, that two vicious precedents are sufficient in the minds of many distinguished statesmen to override the plainest written provision in the fundamental law of our Government. [Applause.]

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the argument of the learned gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] must be very impressive when it makes the representatives of the people applaud because this claimed surrender of their privileges is denied. The whole question in debate fairly considered is whether the Senate under the guise of an amendment has violated the spirit of the Constitution. I admit that the letter has not been violated unless the limitation "as on other bills" is a limitation. I have contended that it is, and that the House is and ought to be the sole judge whether any amendment put on its bill by the Senate is such an amendment as might have been properly put upon another bill.

I am no stickler for the rights of the House. I am, as I said, simply presenting my individual opinion about this matter, under a sense of individual duty.

What do I find? No one but the gentleman from Kentucky seems disposed to deny the proposed substitute admits every position which my resolution takes. The cited 153 votes to 9 in 1872 made the declaration that my resolution is right, and I wish to read simply in reply to the gentleman and in favor of my resolution the remarks of Mr. DAWES and Mr. Garfield on that debate. Their names will give weight to my position.

Mr. DAWES said on that debate:

> This is not the bill which we sent to the Senate; not even the original title remains; nor is it in any fair and proper sense a bill similar in character. It is, as I have said, a general revision not only of the tariff, out of which we had selected two subjects with reference to which we repealed the revenue. It has gone over all the subjects-matter of revenue from all the sources of imports, but it has gone out altogether of that subject-matter into another and entirely different field, that of internal taxation, upon which we had originated no measure whatever, and it has repealed largely the taxes in some particulars and it has reduced others, changing entirely the bill in its character and in its effect.

Mr. Garfield said:

> We must not construe our rights so as to destroy theirs, and we must take care that they do not so construe their rights as to destroy ours. If their right to amendment is unlimited, then our right amounts to nothing whatever. It is the merest mockery to assert any right.
>
> What, then, is the reasonable limit to this right of amendment? It is clear to my mind that the Senate's power to amend is limited to the subject-matter of the bill. That limit is natural, is definite, and can be clearly shown. If there had been no precedent in the case I should say that a House bill relating solely to revenue on salt could not be amended by adding to it clauses raising revenue on textile fabrics, but that all the amendments of the Senate should relate to the duty on salt.
> To admit that the Senate can take a House bill consisting of two lines, relating specifically and solely to a single article, and can graft upon them in the name of an amendment a whole system of tariff and internal taxation, is to say that they may exploit all the meaning out of the clause of the Constitution which we are now considering, and may rob the House of the last vestige of its rights under that clause.

I will read no more from that debate, although there is the same sentiment in just as strong language expressed by other gentlemen. Will anybody here tell me that upon our little bill of the Forty-sixth Congress to make quinine free the Senate could have ingrafted amendments covering the whole subject of the tariff and internal-revenue legislation besides?

I wish to say a word more before I close against the substitute presented. Heretofore the House has been charged with standing too punctiliously upon its privileges. Now we see what to me is a humiliating spectacle, that the majority of this House are seeking to refer to a conference committee a question as to whether or not their privileges have been invaded, and refer it to a committee made up in part of the men who have made the invasion, if there be one. I care not for your recital in the preamble, for the preamble is naught. The resolution is that that committee may consider and report to this House—consider in the private chamber of a conference committee. In that private chamber this great right, which for five centuries has never been surrendered where there were Anglo-Saxon legislators, is to be settled by the men who made the violation under the pressure of party necessity. Make out of it what you please, the country will understand that you are running over all rules; that you are surrendering the privileges of the House and people, that you are marching through the Constitution of your country to take care of the monopolists and the protected classes.

Mr. REED. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois if he desires it.

Mr. MORRISON. I am greatly obliged by the courtesy of the gentleman from Maine. When with others I have contended here day after day for the privilege, which ought to be ours by right, of voting for or against the bill under consideration, I believed it was a bill which originated here to reduce taxation and just such a bill as the Senate had a right to amend—that the Senate had so amended the bill and returned it here for our approval or rejection of such amendments. The question in dispute is simply one of constitutional power, and it will appear from that clause of the Constitution just read to the House by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] that the power to raise revenue from whatever source, internal or external, excise or tariff, is derived from the same clause of the Constitution, and that no distinction is made in that provision or clause of the Constitution whether the revenue is derived from one source or the other.

The bill must originate in the House to obtain revenue from either source, and is a revenue bill and may, like other bills, be amended in the Senate. The question is not whether this is a bill relating to internal or external taxation; but was it a revenue bill when it originated here, and is it a revenue bill as amended and returned? The fact that it is such is not questioned by any one, I believe, and this, it seems to me, admits the right of the Senate to propose the amendments it has proposed.

Sir, the bill we sent to the Senate was a bill to reduce taxes received from banks and other internal sources not including tobacco. As the bill comes back to us a reduction is also made on internal tobacco tax, and so far as I know no one has questioned the right of the Senate to so amend as to relieve tobacco. It is known to us all that part of the tariff tax on tobacco is or was claimed to be imposed to protect our internal revenue from that source, and when the internal tax is reduced the tariff should be reduced in like proportion. If this is not true and you remove all tax from tobacco the tariff on it will be prohibitory and you will get no revenue from that product.

Do gentlemen intend to insist here that the Senate can so amend as to reduce the one tax, internal, on tobacco and not the other? Or do gentlemen intend to be understood as disputing the right of the Senate to reduce this tax also? They have not said so. Therefore it is that I insist the right of the Senate to propose these amendments is conceded in the argument made and the facts admitted. We can only deny this right, it seems to me, by denying what the Constitution gives in unmistakable terms. The Constitution making no distinction between the two sources of revenue when determining the right to originate and the right to propose amendments, we can make none. The Senate has power in my opinion by amendment to increase or decrease any tax we originate. It may propose to add to or take from the subjects of taxation. It may, as I believe, change or propose to change the character of the tax on any article, and get more from external and less from internal taxation without changing the character of a revenue bill, without infringing our rights to originate or without prejudicing our power over the subject to be exercised by concurring or rejecting amendments proposed by the Senate.

Mr. REED. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey, if he desires it.

Several MEMBERS. Move the previous question now.

Mr. HASKELL. Other gentlemen desire to be heard.

Mr. REED. I will move the previous question if there is no desire to discuss it further. If the gentleman from New Jersey desires to be heard I will yield to him such time as he may wish.

The SPEAKER. What time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED. I yield fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Speaker, there can be no doubt about the importance of a constitutional question upon any subject which controls the action of either House of Congress. And still less can there be doubt of the importance of this question, which is the very question which lies at the foundation of the Constitution and the relations of the two Houses themselves and of the powers which are given to them as separate Houses. When the Constitution of our country was framed the question of the right of the House of Representatives to originate all revenue bills was the pivotal question upon which was decided the final question of whether there should or should not be a Constitution.

This right was demanded and yielded to the House for two reasons. First, because it directly represented the people, and depended for its membership upon population, and because in analogy with the British constitution, upon the suggestions of which ours was framed, it was provided by our fathers that the right of taxation should go with the representation of the people, and not only the right to impose taxes but also, and here is the governing point of this case, the right to select in the first instance the objects of taxation. Therefore was it provided that this right should be inherent in the representatives directly selected by the people. Secondly, this right was given exclusively to the House of Representatives as a compromise between the larger and the smaller States. The smaller States claimed the right to be represented as sovereignties in the Senate by equal representations with the imperial Commonwealths with which they were associated in the Union; and as a compromise of that question this right was reserved to the House of Representatives.

Thus it will be seen that no more important question can ever arise here for the consideration of the representatives of the people, and it is the question upon which, in the growing interests of business and wealth in our country, the future character of our Government is to be determined. It is urged to-day that the business interests of the country press for a decision of the questions of tariff, and that any man who asks that we pause to consider the question of our constitutional rights and their invasion is interfering with the business interests of the country. But I say to you that the history of free governments and of the rights of the people show all down the pathway of its progress this one fact that whenever the constitutional rights of the people have been surrendered they have always been sacrificed under the pressure of what was claimed to be an imperative business necessity.

The simple question here is, whether, when we send to the Senate—everybody admits that we have the right, the exclusive right, to originate "bills for raising revenue"—whether, when we send a bill to the Senate covering certain subjects-matter of taxation and providing for raising revenue on them, selecting for ourselves in the first instance the objects in regard to which we originate that bill, the Senate can take it, and founding its power upon the special objects which we select and the provisions which we originate in regard to them, can enlarge its jurisdiction to the whole subject-matter of revenue and taxation.

The question involved is whether when we send a bill to the Senate altering the internal revenue derived from a single article the Senate can ingraft upon that action a general revision of the tariff. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] claims, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] followed him, that when we give the Senate the jurisdiction of tobacco we jump from internal revenue by suggestion to tariff legislation because tobacco is affected under both systems. My proposition is broader than that which they suggest. It does not rest merely upon any classification between internal revenue and tariff taxation.

It is that the right to originate revenue bills, which is exclusively with the House, includes the right to select the subjects and objects upon which the revenue is to be raised. If it were otherwise our right is worth nothing; and the men who made the Constitution understood that too well to have intended any such thing. To say that when we send a bill to the Senate to repeal the duty upon religious books or to admit the statue of Washington free of duty, that as that is a revenue bill the Senate may on it grasp and appropriate to itself all this exclusive jurisdiction of the House, and claiming what it has no right to claim and what is forbidden to it by the Constitution of our country, is to say squarely that provision of the Constitution upon which the question of its adoption rested was a hollow sham and not worth the controversy of children.

I now read from the Globe of March 3, 1871, this resolution of the House, on that day unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this House maintains that it is its sole and exclusive privilege to originate all bills directly affecting the revenue, whether such bills be for the imposition, reduction, or repeal of taxes, and in the exercise of this privilege, in the first instance, to limit and appoint—

Mark the words—

To limit and appoint the ends, purposes, considerations, and limitations of such bills, whether relating to the matter, manner, measure, or time of their introduction, subject to the right of the Senate to "propose or concur with amendments as on other bills."

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman allow me right there——

Mr. ROBESON. I have very little time; it is hard to illustrate a great question in fifteen minutes——

Mr. BROWNE. But for a moment. Suppose we sent to the Senate a bill proposing to raise revenue on but two commodities, as, for instance, on tobacco and spirits. Now, to what extent may the Senate upon such a bill add amendments?

Mr. ROBESON. I have not the time to pause. I am making a general argument with limited time and must pursue it or abandon it, and I can not be led astray into by-paths to the consumption of time, even to answer my friend's simple question.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that resolution covers this whole question, and it bears the highest sanction. It was reported to this House by Mr. Samuel Hooper, then a leading member from Massachusetts. With him were associated Mr. WILLIAM B. ALLISON, now a legislator in another co-ordinate body of this Government, and Mr. DANIEL W. VOORHEES, another legislator now in another co-ordinate legislative branch, and it was passed unanimously less than two days before the House adjourned. I now desire to read upon this subject a few words of wisdom and of strength from a man who lately died in the discharge of his duty, as the representative man of the people of this country; I refer to our former colleague the late President Garfield:

Mr. Speaker, I regard this as a most important report on a subject most vitally affecting the rights of this House. I have prepared with such care and deliberation as I could give a very careful statement of the history of this clause of the Constitution now in question (which was borrowed from the British constitution) and the precedents on the subject from the First Congress down to the present time. Rather than take the time of the House I will ask leave to print these remarks. I wish to say merely that the House has never, at any time, so far as I can find, when the matter was challenged, or called up, surrendered the right claimed in the resolution now pending; and if the House should ever make such surrender, I should look upon it as a dark day for the liberties of the country.

Mr. McKENZIE. Was that Garfield?

Mr. ROBESON. Those are the words of James A. Garfield. And now, still further to pursue that precedent. In April, 1872, the same question came up that is here presented. This House had originated and passed a tariff bill repealing the duty on tea and coffee and sent it to the Senate. The Senate added to it a revision of the internal-revenue taxation. When this came to the House then, Mr. DAWES, now a Senator, supported by Mr. Garfield, by Mr. William A. Wheeler, late Vice-President, by Mr. Fernando Wood, by Mr. Benjamin F. Butler, by Mr. Clarkson N. Potter, most cogently and learnedly by Mr. SAMUEL S. COX, by Mr. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN, by Mr. HOAR, Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. FRYE, Mr. CONGER, Mr. HALE, Mr. SAWYER, and by Mr. BECK—what a galaxy of men who attained high positions by being faithful to the rights of the people and their representatives—and supported by every man in the House except 9, offered a resolution not merely to send the bill to a conference, but to lay the bill upon the table and kill it altogether.

Now I have no desire to kill this bill. It contains valuable provisions which may not be subject to the constitutional objection. It contains many provisions repealing internal-revenue taxation and reducing the taxation of the people of this country nearly equal to if not more than $30,000,000. My own position on this constitutional question has never been doubtful or misunderstood. I have not hesitated to declare them publicly, whenever and wherever its relation to this bill has been privately or publicly discussed. If it were the only alternative presented to me I should be forced to vote for the position taken by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], for whatever I may represent, whatever may be the pressure of business interests, whatever may be the feelings of individual men or of communities under the pressure of these interests, I could not find it in my conscience or in accordance with my ideas of public duty ever to consent to resign the rights of that body to which the people elected me when I find those rights invaded on the very point which gives that body its only superior and real power.

But I desire to have what is good in this bill saved if I can. I desire to have it go back to the Senate, and I would say to them, "Gentlemen, you have invaded our rights, the rights of the people we represent; you have assumed powers to which you have no shadow of claim. Now, we ask you to act upon the proposition which we sent to you. Send it back to us, if you choose, acting upon all the subject-matters which we have originated and embraced in it and sent to you, and if it is a good bill then we will accept it, and if we think it is not a good bill we may amend it, and under our right to originate measures for raising revenue we may add to it other subjects, both of internal and external taxation, if the interests of the country seem to demand it; but you have no right to do that unless we submit them for your action." I am the more earnest on this question in the face of the plain history of this Government. To-day——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] to yield to me one minute more. The Senate are to-day the representative of aggregate wealth and property; while the House of Representatives are the representatives of the people.

Keeping pace with their advancing position the members of that body, in the interest of the powers they represent, grasp day by day more and more of the power which belongs to the representatives of the people. And, my friends, you and I and all of us can never stand justified in the light of history if we yield under any pressure, individual or popular, to the demands of mere business interests, to the arrogant assumption of their representatives in the Senate, our rights and privileges as members of the popular body—if we, the tribunes of the people, charged with the protection of their rights, yield not only our own prerogative but their dearest and more cherished rights.

Mr. REED. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE].

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Allow me to make this remark: I have ten minutes which I desire to yield. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] can dispose of his time now or later.

Mr. REED. Yield your ten minutes, and let us get through with that now.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. REED. I did not understand that the gentleman reserved any time.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The Speaker announced that there was so much of my time remaining.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There is not a member on this floor who is more thoroughly convinced than I that the Senate Chamber has invaded the constitutional prerogatives and powers of this House under color of an amendment to an excise bill, offering to us an elaborate revision of the tariff system of the country.

Still I am not in favor of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL]. I can not for my life see what good is to come from clothing a conference committee with power to inquire into and report upon this substantial invasion of constitutional prerogatives after you shall have considered the bill to which your objection lies and the material results have all passed beyond your control.

It is a singular spectacle presented. I doubt if there could be mustered a corporal's guard of members of this House to-day, who, as an original proposition, would favor the passage of the Senate tariff bill. I doubt if there be one-fifth of the members constituting this body who would vote to pass that bill as an original proposition. But I am equally certain that there are many here that would be induced to take it, if it was offered as the only alternative by which to escape the infliction of the product of a conference. I hazard nothing in the assertion, if I may be permitted to talk as broadly as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] did on yesterday—I hazard nothing in the assertion when I say that though the record does not prove it, everybody knows that this tariff revision is destined to die, and is dying now in the House of its self-asserted friends, who do not intend that either the Senate or the conference bill shall be enacted into law.

Mr. REED. Then by that language the gentleman from Kentucky means to assert that he is a friend of the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. "The gentleman from Kentucky" means to assert that he would accept the Senate bill in preference to anything that is likely to come from a committee of conference appointed by the two Houses on the tariff question, and would vote to concur in the Senate amendment, if it was the only means and method to save us from the results of a star-chamber inquisition like that which it is proposed to inaugurate.

I mean to assert more, and challenge contradiction, that gentlemen upon the other side who are now clamoring for the maintenance of the rights of this House and for the institution of this conference do not intend to allow either the Senate bill or any other bill upon the subject of a tariff to be crystallized into law. It is a process employed that is not direct in its methods. We are not playing open hands—at least the other side is not doing it. We stand here demanding and clamoring for the poor privilege of voting to concur or non-concur; and we can not have it. We can not even have a conference committee that is not to be handicapped and loaded down with extraordinary duties, so as to insure the utter worthlessness of any work which we might look for from it. We might as well charge the truth and leave it to the country to determine whether it is sustained. I make the prediction—I take the hazard of risking the assertion that those who have shown themselves possessed of the power to shape the policies of this House upon this question do not intend and will not permit either the partial relief offered by the Senate to become law or any other tariff bill at all to be acted upon by these two Houses.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM].

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] assumed that section 7 of the Constitution covering this question would, by its very letter, admit of no construction, but construed itself, and was self-evident. If that is so, then the position taken by the gentleman is correct. But that section has two clauses. The one says that the House only shall originate bills for raising revenue—the House only shall create. The Senate, by the second clause, may complete—may alter or amend, but may not destroy and substitute for the measure sent to them an entirely different creation. Therein is the whole sum and essence of this question. There was a purpose in the minds of the framers of the Constitution when they adopted that section; and if the Senate can destroy the original measure by what they call a substitute, then where was the sense in declaring that the House only shall originate or create?

Men in construing laws must inquire for the will of the maker; must look into the sense and justice and reason of the law. If when this House is vested with the power of originating the Senate may destroy in the guise of a substitute, there is no virtue in our power of originating. [Here the hammer fell.] Just one word more. I hold in my right hand this bill as created by the House. In my left hand is the creation of the Senate. That body has destroyed every fiber of the original measure and has substituted an entirely different creation.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, the question involved in this resolution seems to me one of so much importance that I desire time to explain my vote, not having opportunity in this limited debate for an argument.

Under the Constitution, as all concede, the House of Representatives must originate revenue bills, while the Senate may propose amendments to such bills as on other bills. What amendments may the Senate propose to other bills? A bill, for instance, making appropriations for the support of the Post-Office Department is a revenue bill or a money bill in the same sense that this is a bill of that class. Will it be held by gentlemen on this floor that the Senate may attach to an ordinary appropriation bill a bill revising the tariff? I think not. May the Senate, under its power to amend, attach to any bill which we may pass (no matter what the subject) a bill to revise the tariff? I think not. In respect to this power of the Senate to amend revenue bills, there must be a limit; we must draw the line somewhere.

I draw the line here—the proposed amendment must be upon the subject-matter of the bill. If we pass a bill to remove the duty from quinine will it be held that the Senate as an amendment to that bill may send us a bill revising the duty on metals, embracing the whole metal schedule and leaving out entirely the subject of quinine?

In this case the Senate has stricken out all of the House bill except the enacting clause, and has inserted an entirely new bill upon different subjects from that contemplated by the measure as passed by the House of Representatives.

An amendment imposing duties on chemicals, cotton, and woolen goods, iron, steel, and lumber is not germane to a bill repealing internal taxes on matches, bank checks, and proprietary medicines. The Senate amendments are not germane to the House bill and are in violation of the prerogatives of the House of Representatives.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE].

Mr. MCLANE, of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, like the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT], I differ with great reserve with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], for whom I have very great respect.

In determining this question it is only necessary it seems to me, to take the two clauses of the Constitution; the one authorizing Congress "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises;" and the other, providing that revenue bills shall originate in the House of Representatives that may be amended in the Senate as other bills. Take those two clauses of the Constitution together, remembering that all constitutional language is judicial language. Therefore, when we find it declared that a revenue bill may be amended as any other bill, we require no speculation, no precedent to determine what this language means, amendments of which the bill is susceptible in parliamentary law. Whatever amendment is proper under parliamentary law is an amendment which the Senate may make to a revenue bill.

There is no other signification in the terms. A revenue bill is a bill to lay taxes, duties, imposts, or excises. A bill to raise revenue by imposts can be amended by a clause raising revenue by excises. In this very Congress we proposed to tack an amendment for raising revenue by imposts to a bill raising revenue by excises. And then this side of the House voted to amend the internal-revenue tax bill by putting to it a tax of imposts. And the honorable gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE], a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, not only sustained that motion, but he vindicated on this floor the parliamentary practice which allowed an internal-revenue bill to be amended by a tax on imposts. And although the honorable Speaker of this House at that time ruled it to be out of order, on this side we were well-nigh unanimous.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what has the practice of the British House of Commons to do with the American Congress?

We have no House of Lords. We have no body representing a crown. We have two bodies, one representing the people and the other representing the States that formed the Constitution and the Union. And never in an American Congress would I desire to see any reflection cast upon the body which represents the States. And I must be pardoned if I repel the argument of the honorable gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON], who would seek to make of the Legislature of his country a single legislative democracy. He would seek to constitute a single legislative body when the Constitution has constituted two. Now, in England there is in fact but one branch, there is but one body, and that the House of Commons. The House of Lords is a fiction, a perfect fiction; it is powerless to interfere with legislation, but in this country the Senate, representing the States, is all powerful with the House except on the one single issue of originating a revenue bill. I hold in my hand the debate in the Federal Convention when it was proposed there——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MCLANE, of Maryland. One minute more.

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. MCLANE, of Maryland. It was proposed in that Federal Convention that the Senate should not amend a bill, and Mr. Madison, Mr. Wilson, and Dr. Franklin debated this very question at length, and the convention struck out the words "that the Senate shall not amend" and inserted the words "shall amend" as they amend any other bill. In the face of such a record how can it be contended the Senate have no right to make a germane amendment?

The point I make, Mr. Speaker, is that they can make just such an amendment to that bill as to any other bill. The amendment must be germane, and that is all. The point I make further is that the amendment is on an internal-revenue bill or an impost revenue, and that the amendment is strictly germane.

Mr. CALKINS and Mr. BUTTERWORTH addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. REED. I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE. I do not propose to discuss this question within the limits of one minute. I simply rise for the purpose of saying that I have no kind of doubt that the Senate, in making this amendment to a bill originating in the House, kept within its powers and invaded no constitutional prerogative of the House. I shall not vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia, and will only consent to vote for the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kansas because I am informed it does not assert that the Senate has transcended its powers in this matter of legislation.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. It does in the preamble.

Mr. BROWNE. Then I shall vote for it, asserting for myself that I do not agree with the preamble if it casts even the shadow of doubt upon the right of the Senate to amend a revenue bill originating in the House of Representatives. This bill was a revenue bill when it started from this House; it was a revenue bill when the Senate returned it here; and I confess I can not understand just when or at what point it ceased to be one. When the Constitution reserves to the Senate the right to amend a revenue bill originating in the House I suppose it uses the term amendment in the common parliamentary sense of that word. Gentlemen assume there is some technical meaning to the word "amendment" as used in the Constitution, and that it did not mean amendment provided it changed the character of the original bill as it left the House of Representatives.

Mr. BUCKNER. The Senate has the power of amendment "as on other bills."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED. I intend but to make a single statement. And that is, that I believe from the precedents and my study of the Constitution that the Senate has transcended its power in the bill it has sent to us. I had intended to go to some length to prove this from precedents, from the history of the formation of the Constitution, and from general principles in a manner which would be satisfactory to me at least if not to others. But I am about to perform a great act of generosity to the House and to the community. I am going to omit that speech; and the omission is the more singular favor because such an opportunity in the common course of events seldom happens to a man more than once in his lifetime. Anticipating the gratitude both of the House and of future generations, I call for the previous question. [Laughter.]

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL].

Mr. RANDALL. Let the substitute be again read.

The proposed substitute was again read.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I ask for separate votes on the preamble and the resolution.

Mr. REED. The call for separate votes is not in order on the question of substitution. The first vote, I submit, must be on the substitute as a whole.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Our votes for or against the resolution may depend upon how we view the separate propositions in the preamble and the resolutions.

Mr. REED. I apprehend, Mr. Speaker, that on the question of substitution, which is the first question before the House, the substitute must be taken as a whole. Afterward, on the passage of the substitute, which then becomes the original resolution, the division asked by the gentleman from Georgia may be in order, if it is in order at all.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I leave the Speaker to decide whether I am in order in demanding a division.

The SPEAKER. The only doubt the Chair has is on the point suggested by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED.] There is no doubt but that a separate vote may be had on the resolution as distinct from the preamble, and the vote would come first on the resolution, as in the adoption of a joint resolution of the two Houses, because the preamble is no part of the legislation, except as it declares perhaps the reason for the legislation. This is in the form of a substitute for the pending resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], and the Chair is inclined to hold that a division may be had unless there is some precedent to the contrary.

Mr. REED. I submit to the Chair that a division can not be had before the substitution.

The SPEAKER. But the substitute is nothing but an amendment. If an amendment involves propositions which are distinct and independent in their character the Chair knows of no practice that would prevent a division being demanded.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I demand a division.

Mr. REED. But the question now before the House is whether this resolution shall be substituted for the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Maine is out of order in discussing the question after the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine suggests no new point. The Chair knows of no practice that changes the general rule.

Mr. REED. Will the Chair allow me to suggest that the question would apparently come in this way? The question is on substitution, the substitution of what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] has proposed for what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] has proposed. You can not divide it so as to propose to the House they shall adopt one half of what the gentleman from Kansas has proposed, and not the whole.

The SPEAKER. But the word substitution means nothing more than another form of stating that the gentleman from Kansas proposes to amend the original resolution by the preamble and resolution which he submits. And the House might be quite willing to amend by putting in one of the substantive propositions in the amendment, and not both, and should have the privilege of voting separately.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to ask a parliamentary question. Does the Chair decide the substitute can be divided, and that we can vote on the preamble and resolution as separate propositions?

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that, unless some precedent the other way can be cited.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have always understood the contrary; I can not find a precedent on the question. But a substitute is to be taken in its entirety, preamble and all. That is my recollection of it.

The SPEAKER. If there is any instance of that practice the Chair would be glad to have his attention called to it. In the absence of any case cited the Chair will submit the question first upon agreeing to that part of the substitute included in the resolution which has been read.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I submit whether the vote on the preamble should come first.

The SPEAKER. The vote should come first on the resolution.

Mr. COX, of New York. I suggest, with all respect, that if the substitute shall be adopted, then it can be divided on the final vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] that the division might as well be taken upon the adoption of the substitute. If the House shall decide to amend the original proposition in that way, then the question would come on the original proposition as amended, and the same division could be had as the gentleman now asks.

Mr. REED. That is the time when it should be had.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would have the right to a separate vote in that way on each branch of the proposition.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I prefer the other way, because the House might adopt the resolution and refuse to adopt the preamble. If that were true, there might be gentlemen who would vote for the substitute who otherwise would not do so. I want to know before the vote for the substitution comes where my vote will take me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question first upon that portion of the substitute involved in the resolution which has been read. If that shall be voted down, the preamble would go with it, the Chair thinks.

Mr. ROBESON. Do I understand the Chair to hold that if the resolution is voted down the preamble would go with it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so, because their would be nothing left of it; the substantive part of it is the resolution.

Mr. ROBESON. Then the question should not be divided.

The SPEAKER. The House may conclude to amend the preamble before adopting it. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution proposed as a substitute.

Mr. CARLISLE. We may as well have the yeas and nays on that.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were 45 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 144, nays 120, not voting 27; as follows:

So the resolution of the proposed substitute was adopted.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. NEAL with Mr. BLAND.

Mr. HENDERSON with Mr. TOWNSHEND of Illinois.

Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. MCLANE of Maryland.

Mr. DOXEY with Mr. BLACK.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. REED moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon adopting that portion of the substitute which is contained in the preamble.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 117, noes 36.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. CULBERSON called for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were 20 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The preamble was accordingly adopted.

Mr. REED moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the adoption of the original resolution as amended.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and there were 42 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the resolution as amended be read.

The SPEAKER. It is the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] which has been adopted in place of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that it now be read.

The SPEAKER. It will be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas House bill No. 5538, entitled "An act to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and for other purposes," under the form of an amendment in the Senate to title 33 of the Revised Statutes, which provides for duties on imports, has been so modified and changed by the introduction of new provisions containing, among other things, a general revision of the statutes referred to as both to increase and reduce duties on imports and in many instances to repeal and in others to amend the laws imposing import duties; and

Whereas in the opinion of the House it is believed that such changes and alterations are in conflict with the true intent and purpose of the Constitution, which requires that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; Therefore,

Resolved, That, if this bill shall be referred to a committee of conference, it shall be the duty of the conferees on the part of the House on said committee to consider fully the constitutional objections to said bill as amended by the Senate and herein referred to, and to bring the same, together with the opinion of the House in regard thereto, before said conference, and if necessary in their opinion, after having conferred with the Senate conferees, said conferees on said committee may make report to the House in regard to the objections to said bill herein referred to.

Mr. BROWNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If this proposition should now be voted down, what becomes of the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND]?

The SPEAKER. It would be lost; the whole proposition would fail.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 139, nays 122, not voting 30; as follows:

So the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. REED moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. CROWLEY with Mr. DUGRO.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 355) to authorize Major William Ludlow, United States Army, to accept a civil position.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the joint resolution (H. Res. 331) for the printing of the Agricultural Report for the year 1883.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 361) granting a pension to Wellington V. Heusted:

A bill (H. R. 507) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria Worthington;

A bill (H. R. 984) for the relief of Ralph P. Ford;

A bill (H. R. 1188) granting a pension to Thomas Allcock;

A bill (H. R. 1291) granting a pension to D. D. Edwards;

A bill (H. R. 1341) granting a pension to James B. White;

A bill (H. R. 1581) granting a pension to Mary A. Conken;

A bill (H. R. 2095) granting a pension to Esther M. Carey;

A bill (H. R. 2877) for the relief of William M. Meredith;

A bill (H. R. 2912) granting relief to the heirs of Kunigunda A. Miller, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 3106) restoring the name of Mary J. Stover to the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 4387) granting a pension to Anthony B. Graves;

A bill (H. R. 4562) for the relief of Julia A. Stimers;

A bill (H. R. 5118) granting a pension to Elizabeth Weinstein;

A bill (H. R. 5384) restoring the name of James M. Akin to the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 5808) to rerate the pension of Frank S. Sowers;

A bill (H. R. 5906) granting a pension to Harriet N. Abbott;

A bill (H. R. 6400) granting a pension to Mrs. Orpah Meacham;

A bill (H. R. 6425) to increase the pension of Robert Henne;

A bill (H. R. 6524) granting a pension to George C. Rust;

A bill (H. R. 6833) granting a pension to Kate Quilligan;

A bill (H. R. 6943) granting a pension to the widow of the late Major-General G. K. Warren; and

A bill (H. R. 7486) to prevent the importation of adulterated and spurious teas.

TARIFF AND INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the rule adopted this day, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table House bill No. 5538, with the Senate amendment thereto, entitled "A bill to reduce internal-revenue taxation" and to declare a disagreement with the Senate amendment to the same, and to ask for a committee of conference thereon to be composed of five members on the part of this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the motion which he has stated.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I make the point of order that the first business at this time is the call of committees under the Pound rule.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order daily after the reading of the Journal would be, as the gentleman from Illinois states, the proceeding under the Pound rule; but the rule just adopted by its terms makes it in order to submit this motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania at any time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does that supersede the operation of the Pound rule?

The SPEAKER. To that extent it does. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the motion stated by him.

Several MEMBERS. Let it be read.

The Clerk read the motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to this motion.

Mr. TUCKER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 147, nays 111, not voting 33; as follows:

So Mr. KELLEY's motion was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. DWIGHT with Mr. PHISTER.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR with Mr. GEDDES.

Mr. MARSH with Mr. DIBRELL.

Mr. KELLEY. I move by unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object, as this is an important vote.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1342) authorizing the trustees of the Isherwood estate to amend a certain plan of subdivision of said estate recorded in the land records of the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 2316) for the relief of Daniel Breed;

Joint resolution (S. R. 123) providing for the termination of articles numbered 18 to 25, inclusive, and article numbered 30 of the treaty between the United States of America and Her Britannic Majesty, concluded at Washington, May 8, 1871; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 355) to authorize Major William Ludlow, United States Army, to accept a civil position.

DISTRIBUTION OF REBELLION ANNALS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to introduce a joint resolution (H. Res. 365) in relation to the distribution of the volumes of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, and I ask that it be considered at the present time.

Mr. RANDALL. I object. Let it be printed in the RECORD, so that we may see what it is.

Mr. SPRINGER. It extends the time during which members may give the addresses of those to whom the book shall be sent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; I object.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the resolution will be printed in the RECORD and not called up until to-morrow.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution in relation to the distribution of the volumes of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the time in which the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of the Forty-seventh Congress may designate the addresses to which the volumes of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion shall be distributed, as provided in the act of Congress approved August 7, 1882, shall continue until the 1st day of September, 1883; and that all volumes not then designated by them to be distributed under the provisions of said act, and not directed by said act to be otherwise distributed, shall be sold by the Secretary of War as provided in said act.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALKINS. I rise to a privileged question, and call up the Mississippi contested-election case.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to propose for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That the conferees on the part of the House upon the bill to reduce internal-revenue taxation are hereby instructed to so amend said bill, if possible, as will prohibit the importation into the United States of all wines grown in the German Empire, in view of the fact that our hop products are excluded by the Government of the said German Empire.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor, and calls up a privileged matter.

BUCHANAN VS. MANNING.

Mr. CALKINS. I now call up the report from the Committee on Elections in the case of Buchanan against Manning.

Mr. PAGE. I raise the question of consideration against that, for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. RANNEY. I had an impression that the Lee and Richardson case was first in order, as it was first reported.

The SPEAKER. They are to be considered as they are called up, and not in the order in which they were reported.

Mr. CALKINS. The case of Buchanan against Manning was reported before either of the other cases, except the case of Mr. Jones.

The SPEAKER. Upon that motion the gentleman from California raises the question of consideration.

Mr. CALKINS. We will dispose of this in a minute; there will not be any debate upon it.

Mr. PAGE. Upon this question of consideration I wish to say if the House shall vote down the motion to take up the contested-election case, my object is to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the river and harbor bill.

Mr. SHERWIN. The educational bill should be first considered, that being the unfinished business.

Mr. JOYCE. We do not really need any river and harbor bill at this session, and I hope that motion will not be adopted.

Mr. SHERWIN. I shall endeavor to call up the unfinished business, and if it be in order will antagonize the river and harbor bill with the educational bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the further consideration of the educational bill, which was a special continuing order and went over on the demand for the previous question on last Saturday, next in order? If the motion of the gentleman from Indiana is voted down, will not that special order be the unfinished business to come up for to-day?

Mr. HISCOCK. I believe there is another special order.

Mr. WILLIS. That bill was pending when the House adjourned, and being a special order, subject only to the exception of general appropriation and revenue bills, I do not understand the motion of the gentleman from California to antagonize that bill, because the river and harbor bill is not a general appropriation bill within the meaning of the rule, and I believe it has been so held constantly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not desire to decide that question before it is presented.

Mr. CALKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the House should decide not to proceed with the consideration of the election case, I ask as a matter of parliamentary law whether the Pound rule would not be immediately in order?

Mr. PAGE. We can set that aside.

The SPEAKER. The Pound rule is as yet unexecuted for to-day. But the question now presented is, Will the House proceed to consider the contested-election case?

The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 67.

Mr. KENNA. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, 42 members voting therefor.

Mr. KENNA and Mr. CALKINS were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 100.

So the House refused to proceed with the consideration of the contested-election case.

Mr. PAGE. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the object being to consider the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The first thing in order would be the further proceeding under the Pound rule.

Mr. PAGE. I move to set that aside.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that could only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. COX, of New York. I object.

Mr. PAGE. A two-thirds vote will set it aside.

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not in order to make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the river and harbor appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, at least as against the operation of the Pound rule, though the Chair has not examined into the subject as yet, but will do so when the question arises.

Mr. KENNA. Has not the Chair been holding that since the adoption by the House of the Pound rule appropriation bills and revenue bills are exceptions to its operation; and have not all the appropriation bills been standing upon the same footing as the river and harbor appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not fully considered that question.

Mr. KENNA. I hope the Chair will not decide the point without considering that question, because his ruling with reference to the operation of the Pound rule upon the motion of the gentleman from California will have the same bearing upon the other general appropriation bills. The river and harbor appropriation bill I submit, and the friends of the bill submit, stands upon precisely the same footing as the other general appropriation bills; and I desire to give notice to the Committee on Appropriations now that the friends of the river and harbor appropriation bill will insist upon the application of the same rule to all of the other appropriation bills that is applied to this one.

Mr. DUNN. The rule says that committees shall have the same privilege in reporting these river and harbor appropriation bills.

Mr. COX, of New York. I reserve the right to move to postpone the river and harbor appropriation bill indefinitely.

Mr. DUNN. Wait until you get it up.

Mr. COX, of New York. I want to anticipate its coming up.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that in looking at the rule—the Pound rule——

Mr. PAGE. Let us have order in the House. It is absolutely impossible to hear anything.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to state that the Pound rule provides that it shall not interfere with revenue or appropriation bills, and in that rule the word "general" appropriation bills is not used.

Mr. REAGAN. Is it not true that under the rules of the House the river and harbor bill has the same privileges as any other appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not want to decide that question now. The first impression of the Chair was that the Pound rule cut off the right to proceed with any appropriation bill. But on examination of the language of the rule the Chair finds that they are excepted.

Mr. PAGE. Is it in order to move to dispense with the Pound rule?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. KENNA. It is not necessary. The motion of the gentleman from California is in order under the very terms of that rule to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the bill.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has not been dispensed with.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I renew my motion that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. COX, of New York. Regular order.

Mr. PAGE. I insist on my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY. And I insist upon my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

On the motion to adjourn the House divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 81.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, and Mr. COX, of New York. Let us have tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, and Mr. PAGE were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 119.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and give notice that my purpose is to call up the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. KENNA. I make the point of order against that motion that one motion is already pending to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to antagonize the motion of the gentleman from New York. I claim that I was entitled to recognition on the river and harbor bill. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] desire to antagonize that?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do.

Mr. PAGE. All right. But my motion to go into Committee of the Whole is the pending motion.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX, of New York. Out of abundant caution I wish to know when I can make a motion to postpone indefinitely the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. That motion can not be made in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COX, of New York. I want to make it before the bill goes to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. But the river and harbor bill is now in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COX, of New York. Then can I not now upon the pending motion make the motion to postpone that bill indefinitely?

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can only entertain one parliamentary inquiry at a time. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] that the river and harbor bill has been reported by the Committee on Commerce, has been ordered to be printed, and has been referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, where it is now.

Mr. COX, of New York. I want to save my rights and make this motion as to the river and harbor bill. I move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of that bill, and that it be postponed indefinitely.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not now in order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not know why it is not in order?

Mr. JOYCE. I want to know when it will be in order for me to move to strike out all of the river and harbor bill after the enacting clause?

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to make a privileged report. I desire to report back the deficiency appropriation bill from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KENNA. I submit that that is not in order pending the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. COX, of New York. What has become of my motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided that the motion was not in order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York was not recognized for a motion to suspend the rules. He obtained the floor to make a parliamentary inquiry, and had no right, having obtained the floor in that way, to move to suspend the rules.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] states that he rises to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations. The rule allows a report from that committee of a general appropriation bill at any time.

Mr. HISCOCK. I report back to the House the bill making appropriations for deficiencies for the current year and previous years.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve all points of order on that bill.

Mr. KENNA. I make the point of order that the gentleman from New York can not make that report pending a motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has held that this is a privileged matter. The report is only made for reference to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve points of order.

The SPEAKER. All rights will be reserved. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and will be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. In order that we may find out upon which of these two bills it will be now conducive to the public interest to vote first, and that we may have until to-morrow morning for the consideration of the matter, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KENNA. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not filibuster against the river and harbor bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the motion in perfect good faith. I desire to avoid a night session.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. KENNA. I hope the motion will be voted down.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and there were—ayes 44, noes 105.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only fifteen members voting therefor—not one-fifth of a quorum.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. I call for a vote on the pending question, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to make a statement, and to suggest that the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] had better give way and let the deficiency bill be proceeded with.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ATKINS. Let me get through with my statement. The public business, in my opinion, is in some danger of not getting through. I think there is some danger of a gorge of business on the last day or so of the session, and some of the appropriation bills may fail. I do not rise for the purpose of making war on the river and harbor bill. I have always voted for the river and harbor bill, and I expect to vote for it again; but I simply wish to state to the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] that, in my opinion, he would expedite the river and harbor bill through this House by letting the deficiency bill first pass, and then the time of the House can be devoted to the other bills. I suggest that in order that the deficiency appropriation bill may go to the Senate, and thus action be concluded on all the appropriation bills.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to say to my friend from California [Mr. PAGE] and in response to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] that if the other appropriation bills are allowed to get "out of the woods," and the power is thereby placed in the hands of a mere faction of this House to filibuster on this river and harbor bill to the end of the session, that power will be exercised, and the bill will be lost. I hope the gentleman will insist on his motion.

Mr. HISCOCK. It certainly was not my intention to antagonize the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE]; and there was a perfect understanding between us, as I think, that I should take this evening for the deficiency appropriation bill, and he was to take to-morrow morning for the river and harbor bill.

Mr. PAGE. No; I was to have to-night.

Mr. HISCOCK. In the first place, the gentleman notified me that it was his intention to call up the river and harbor bill to-morrow morning.

Mr. PAGE. No; it was to-night.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then learning of the condition of the work before Congress, and the trouble of getting these bills properly engrossed in due time, I concluded that it was indispensably necessary that the deficiency appropriation bill should be called up to-night.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to say that I have consulted with the Clerk of the House, and I find that all the appropriation bills can be enrolled in due time. While I believe the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is perfectly sincere in what he says, yet I wish to say that it was the understanding between him and myself not over an hour ago that if I called up the river and harbor appropriation bill to-night it should not be antagonized by the deficiency bill.

The river and harbor bill contains only twenty-four pages, and it can be disposed of in two hours if members of the House want to pass a river and harbor bill. If members want to give the House an opportunity to vote on that bill, if they want to preserve and properly maintain the works which have already been erected, if they do not want the works which have cost the people of the country millions of dollars to go unprovided for for the next fiscal year, then they will vote to take up the river and harbor bill at once.

Mr. COX, of New York. I want to respond to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. One at a time.

Mr. RICE, of Missouri. I understood the ruling of the Chair a moment ago was that there was no proposition before the House which was subject to debate.

The SPEAKER. This is all going on by unanimous consent, with the expectation that there may be some adjustment reached.

Mr. RICE, of Missouri. I object to any further debate.

Mr. COX, of New York. I want to say one word.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. COX, of New York. Gentlemen, you will not save time by that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RICE] objects to any further debate.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the gentleman stating it to be his purpose to call up the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. You can not crowd through this bill in that way; you can not pass the bill in any two hours.

Mr. PAGE. I did not say positively that it could be done in that time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to inquire of the Chair if the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the deficiency bill does not take precedence?

The SPEAKER. It does not in point of time of being made.

Mr. HISCOCK. I concede that the motion of the gentleman from California was first made, but it is competent for the House to vote on the other motion first.

Mr. REAGAN. Clause 7 of Rule XI provides—— [Laughter and cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. If the motion of the gentleman from California should be voted down, would the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] then be in order?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. HAZELTON. Everybody knows that. [Laughter.]

The Speaker submitted the question upon a viva voce vote.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was putting the question to the House.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rose before the Chair put the question.

The SPEAKER. There must be an end to points of order at some time. The House is dividing.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 90, noes 97.

Mr. PAGE. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PAGE and Mr. COX of New York were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 106, noes 96.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. COX, of New York, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were 44 in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The vote in the affirmative is more than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. HORR. I ask that the other side be counted.

The SPEAKER. The other side will be counted.

The vote on the other side was counted; and there were 64 in the negative.

The SPEAKER. The hour of half past 5 o'clock having arrived, in pursuance of the standing order of the House the Chair now declares the House in recess until 7½ o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m., the Speaker in the chair.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Chair will lay before the House several executive communications.

There was no objection.

ICE-HARBOR, MUSKINGUM RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from Major W. E. Merrill, Corps of Engineers, in relation to the work for the construction of the ice-harbor at the mouth of the Muskingum River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FINES AND DEDUCTIONS ON MAIL CONTRACTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting a report of fines imposed on and deducted from the pay of mail contractors during the year ending June 30, 1882, and fines and deductions remitted during the same period; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, and ordered to be printed.

DU BOIS SYSTEM OF NAVIGATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to House resolution of the 9th instant, a letter from the Chief of Engineers, together with a report of Major W. E. Merrill, Corps of Engineers, on the Du Bois system of navigation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

TELEGRAPH LINES ALONG LAND-GRANT RAILROADS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in response to House resolution of the 12th ultimo, in relation to telegraph lines along land-grant railroads; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF NAVY-YARD COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the partial report of the navy-yard commission appointed under act of Congress approved August 5, 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE], as the Chair recollects, made a request that the communication should be ordered to be printed in the RECORD. If there be no objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The document is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 27, 1883.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the partial report to Congress of the Navy Yard Commission appointed under the act of Congress of August 5, 1882.

Very respectfully,

WM. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

To Hon. J. WARREN KEIFER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., February 27, 1883.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The undersigned commissioners, appointed by the honorable Secretary of the Navy under provision of the act approved August 5, 1882, to "consider and report" "upon the question whether it is advisable to sell any of the navy-yards, and, if so, which," and to furnish certain data and information connected with the several navy-yards, have the honor to report that the duties imposed upon us are so extensive and comprehensive and the collection of the data so laborious and difficult that we have found it impossible to prepare a full report for the present Congress, and in fact have not yet received from all the navy-yards the statistical information required to comply with the demands of the act.

Pending the completion of our investigations, we are not prepared to recommend the sale of any navy-yard, but in anticipation of our final report, we recommend the sale of the unoccupied lands lying between the marine barracks, Brooklyn, and the naval hospital, as suggested in the letter of Commodore John H. Upshur, addressed to the honorable Secretary of the Navy under date of November 24, 1882.

This property will never be required for naval purposes, and its improvement will be a great advantage, not only to the city of Brooklyn, but, from sanitary reasons, to the navy-yard itself. The estimated value of these lands is $1,530,000.

We also recommend the sale of the whole or the larger part of the naval hospital grounds at Chelsea, Massachusetts, under such conditions and reservations as Congress may determine.

As at present occupied they impose a barrier to ready communication between the Charleston district of Boston and a portion of the city of Chelsea, and are thus a serious detriment to the interests of the latter.

The area is much larger than is necessary for the demands of the hospital, and has become entirely too valuable to lie unimproved or be utilized for the minor purposes of pasturage and gardening. There is a demand for these grounds for building sites, and they would undoubtedly find ready sale if brought into the market.

Having no appropriation at our disposal, we have been unable to procure estimates from professional experts in real estate, and are therefore unable to report the value of this, or, indeed, any other similar property we have been charged with the appraisal of, as accurately as we desire. From the best information at our disposal we feel warranted in saying that the property can be sold for at least half a million of dollars, and believe, if offered under favorable circumstances, it can be sold for a much higher sum.

In conclusion we desire to say that good progress has been made toward our final report, which will be completed at the earliest moment, and in any event before the next session of Congress.

Very respectfully,

S. B. LUCE,
Commodore, United States Navy, President.
CHAS. H. LORING,
Chief Engineer, United States Navy.
A. B. MULLETT.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. URNER, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks on the tariff bill. [See Appendix.]

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the request which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BURROWS, of Missouri, asks that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 4871, and the Committee on War Claims from the consideration of House bill No. 3708, and that leave be granted him to withdraw the papers accompanying said bills from the files of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. In regard to the bill before the Committee on War Claims this memorandum does not mention whether the subject has been acted upon or reported upon.

The SPEAKER. The present rule does not require that; because copies of papers withdrawn must be left on file.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me it is a bad practice to allow the withdrawal in this way of papers from that committee. In some instances adverse reports may have been made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised whether there has been in this case any report of any kind. Under the present rules that question does not necessarily arise. If the gentleman objects the Chair will submit the question to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me the rules hardly allow the withdrawal of papers in this way as a matter of course.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule copies must be left with the file clerk in all cases.

Mr. HOLMAN. The rule must be a very liberal one to allow a proceeding of this kind except by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. It is the rule, nevertheless.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not object in this instance.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the request will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendment disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. MORRILL, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. BAYARD, and Mr. BECK.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE IN DAKOTA.

Mr. WILLITS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 6502, and that it be now brought up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6502) providing for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Dakota.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we had better have the regular order.

POST-ROUTES.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to withdraw the call for the regular order until I can report the post-route bill. It is very necessary this should be sent to the Senate to be added as an amendment to a bill now pending there.

Mr. COX, of New York. Is this the usual post-route bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. It is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, asks unanimous consent to report for present consideration a bill to establish certain post-routes. Is there objection?

Mr. PAGE. I understand this bill contains nothing but post-routes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there any legislation in the bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. The bill contains no legislation other than that pertaining to the establishment of post-routes.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7679) to establish certain post-routes was reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS' HOME, WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to take from the Speaker's table——

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been called. Is the gentleman's proposition a privileged matter?

Mr. HENDERSON. I think it is. I move to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 1821, to insist upon the amendments of the House, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Several MEMBERS. What is the bill?

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 1821) prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home, located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. BELTZHOOVER objected.

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged matter.

Mr. MCCOOK. I was going to say that one objection could not carry it over.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House insist upon its amendment to the Senate bill, and agree to the committee of conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The question was taken and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the House insisted upon its amendments; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on this bill the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HENDERSON, the gentleman from New York, Mr. MCCOOK, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. BRAGG.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. When the hour arrived for the recess to-day a question was pending whether the vote should be taken by yeas and nays upon the motion of the gentleman from California that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PAGE. For the purpose of considering the river and harbor appropriation bill. I ask that the gentleman who called for the yeas and nays withdraw that demand.

Mr. COX, of New York. Oh, no, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question again which was pending at the time that the recess took place, and which according to the recollection of the Chair was not then determined, the House having divided upon the question when the time for the recess arrived.

Mr. COX, of New York. The yeas and nays had been ordered.

Mr. PAGE. There was a demand for the yeas and nays on the motion which had been adopted, but the yeas and nays had not been ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Chair announced that there were 44 members voting in favor of the demand for the yeas and nays, but I believe no announcement was made of the count of the other side which had been demanded.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair recollects, the other side was called for, and pending that count and before it had been completed the hour had arrived when by the order of the House a recess was to be taken.

The Chair will again submit the motion. As many as are in favor of taking the vote on the motion of the gentleman from California by yeas and nays will rise and be counted.

Seven gentlemen rose.

Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. COX of New York. Count the other side.

Mr. COX, of New York. There was no quorum any way.

The SPEAKER. This is not a question of a quorum. The Chair will count the other side.

Fifty gentlemen were counted in opposition to the demand. So the yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. COX, of New York. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. It is not a question of a quorum on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAGE. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move that the House take a recess.

Mr. PAGE. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. COX, of New York. I raise the parliamentary question that there is no quorum present and voting to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DUNN. There was a very large quorum just preceding the recess that voted in favor of it.

The SPEAKER. That vote was taken by tellers, and after that the yeas and nays were demanded. The vote on the motion of the gentleman from California by tellers, as the Chair recollects, was 96 yeas to 91 nays.

Mr. PAGE. It was 106 to 91.

Mr. COX, of New York. And the yeas and nays were really ordered on that vote.

The SPEAKER. That is a question of fact.

Mr. COX, of New York. Yes, that is a question of fact; and I think the record will determine that I am correct if the Speaker will appeal to the record.

Mr. WASHBURN. It has already been decided.

Mr. HAZELTON. How can it be opened up again when it has just been settled?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will repeat that his recollection was that there was no announcement made of the vote in opposition to the demand for the yeas and nays, but pending that question, which was submitted as to whether or not the yeas and nays should be ordered, and while the House was dividing the hour arrived for the recess.

Mr. DUNN. That is the fact exactly.

The SPEAKER. That is as the Chair recollects it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I raise the question of order upon the fact. The Chair decided that 44 members had risen, a sufficient number to call the yeas and nays, although the number rising on the other side may not have been announced.

The SPEAKER. The other side was demanded; pending that the recess was ordered. Again, since the recess, the Chair submitted the question to the House whether the yeas and nays should be ordered, and they were again refused. The Chair has now nothing further to do than to submit the motion of the gentleman from California.

Mr. COX, of New York. There were enough to order the yeas and nays.

Mr. DUNN. It was not so announced.

The SPEAKER. The question was submitted to the House and was refused. It is too late now.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is it in order now to move a recess?

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from California.

The motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CANNON in the chair.

Mr. ANDERSON. I now move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. I demand a division.

Mr. PAGE. I call up the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas demands a division on the motion that the committee rise. That is a privileged motion. Does the gentleman insist upon a division?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 70.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is it in order to make the point that no quorum has voted?

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is not required on such a motion. The Clerk will report the title of the bill called up by the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. COX, of New York. I call for the first reading of the bill.

Mr. PAGE. I ask that by unanimous consent the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. COX, of New York. I object.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do object.

Mr. PAGE. Very well; there are only twenty-four pages. Let the Clerk read.

Mr. COX, of New York. Let it be read. It is very interesting reading.

Mr. PAGE. I know it is, and I hope the gentleman will be edified.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have read it before.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. COX, of New York (interrupting the reading). I rise to a point of order. The Clerk is not reading the bill. He is skipping portions of it, to my certain knowledge.

Mr. HAZELTON. I think not. The Clerk is reading every item. It is not to be assumed the Clerk is not doing his duty.

Mr. COX, of New York. I know he is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. Let him read, not skipping any words.

Mr. HAZELTON. That is what he is doing.

Mr. COX, of New York. I know better.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the first reading of the bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. I call for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the report is in the nature of debate. If there be objection the gentleman is not entitled, the Chair thinks, to have it read.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. Does the Chair decide I can not have the report read?

The CHAIRMAN. When the gentleman from New York has the floor he can have the report read as part of his remarks.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I find there are two bills, H. R. No. 7588 and H. R. No. 7631, appropriating for rivers and harbors. I wish to inquire which bill is before the House for consideration.

Mr. PAGE. The first bill, H. R. No. 7588, was reported to the House for printing and recommittal. The second bill, H. R. No. 7631, was reported to the House and went upon the Calendar. It was the final bill passed by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COX, of New York. Which bill was read?

Mr. PAGE. Bill 7631 was read.

Mr. COX, of New York. No, sir; the wrong bill was read. I want the right bill read.

Mr. HAZELTON. It was the right bill which was read.

Mr. PAGE. When the House will preserve order I would be glad to call the attention of the gentleman from New York, and all others who have any question as to whether the right bill has just been read, to the statement printed on the bill itself, as follows:

Mr. PAGE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported the following bill as a substitute for House bill 7588.

And the bill that has just been read is H. R. No. 7631, which is the substitute for the original bill.

Mr. RANDALL. But we have been confused because both bills have been given out.

Mr. PAGE. There is a very slight difference between them.

Mr. HORR. Only in three items.

Mr. PAGE. I now ask the attention of the committee while I endeavor briefly to explain the provisions of the bill.

This bill reported by the House Committee on Commerce provides for an appropriation of $7,987,000. The committee have taken into careful consideration the condition of the rivers and harbors in this country as they will stand at the expiration of the next fiscal year. I hold in my hand, Mr. Chairman, the report from the Secretary of War, in which he states that a certain amount of money will be on hand for the improvement of rivers and harbors after the expiration of the fiscal year. He gives the names in this report—it is Executive Document No. 15 of the House of Representatives.

Mr. Chairman, it is impossible for me to talk down the number of men that are conversing in different parts of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend till order is restored.

Mr. PAGE. I have a pretty good pair of lungs, but I do not desire to wear them out in explanation of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CANNON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CONFEREES ON INTERNAL-REVENUE BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce the conferees on the part of the House on the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, the Senate amendments to which were disagreed to by the House. The Chair announces as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. KELLEY of Pennsylvania, Mr. MCKINLEY of Ohio, Mr. HASKELL of Kansas, Mr. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, and Mr. CARLISLE of Kentucky.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CANNON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and resumes consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. PAGE. In response to a resolution of the House calling upon the Secretary of War for a report as to the amount of money that would be on hand at the expiration of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, I find that he says that in regard to one hundred and ninety-one items, embraced under Exhibit A, there will be $4,949,612.06. There will have been contracts made enough to take up that entire amount of money by the 1st day of August, September, and October, and very little of it will extend into the next fiscal year more than from one to three months.

Mr. JOYCE. Do I understand from the gentleman that that is the amount which will be left at that time unused of the sums appropriated by the last river and harbor bill?

Mr. PAGE. That is the entire amount of money that will be left at the expiration of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883.

Mr. JOYCE. Out of what was appropriated last year?

Mr. PAGE. Out of what was appropriated last year.

Mr. JOYCE. And what was carried over from previous years?

Mr. PAGE. What was carried over from previous years also. In Exhibit F of that statement I find one hundred and eighty-seven items upon which will have been expended by the 30th of June, 1883, the entire amount of money appropriated. In that list is composed some of the most important rivers and harbors of the country.

I will state for the benefit of gentlemen that I am reading from Miscellaneous Document No. 15, a letter from the Secretary of War, addressed to the Committee on Commerce, dated January 4, 1883. On page 7 of that document, in Exhibit F, is given a list of works which at the expiration of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, will be unprovided for, and among them are some of the most important rivers and harbors of this country.

In view of all the facts, in view of the fact that if we do not make any appropriations now these important rivers and harbors will be left after the expiration of this fiscal year without a dollar for their improvement, I call upon this House now to determine whether it will make appropriations for that purpose. It is proposed to appropriate money by this bill for the improvement of such harbors as those of Galveston, Baltimore, Savannah, Charleston, New York, Oakland, and many other of the important harbors of the country.

Do members of this House propose to ignore the fact that in reference to one hundred and eighty-seven important rivers and harbors of this country there will be no money provided at the expiration of the present fiscal year, but they will be left without a dollar to continue their improvement, and the money already expended will be to a great extent lost unless Congress shall make the appropriations here recommended?

In regard to the works included in Exhibit A, almost every dollar of the money which has been heretofore appropriated will have been expended before the expiration of the first quarter of the next fiscal year.

This bill contains ninety-one items of appropriations for works on harbors, and one hundred and twelve items for works upon rivers. Thirty-nine of those works were not appropriated for in the last bill, and one hundred and thirty-two which were appropriated for last year have been dropped from the present bill; not because they are not meritorious, but because in many cases enough money will be on hand at the close of the next fiscal year to go on with the work, or for some other equally sufficient reason.

As I have said, of the items of appropriation contained in this bill ninety-one are for improvements on harbors and one hundred and twelve for the improvement of rivers, making two hundred and three in all. One hundred and seventy-one works have been estimated for, and appropriations have been asked by the Engineer Department for them, but no appropriations are made in this bill; not because they are not meritorious, but because the committee have acted in obedience to what they conceived was recognized by this House to be the public sentiment that no works should be appropriated for but those of great national importance.

Of the less than $8,000,000 appropriated by this bill the improvements upon the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers are given $2,500,000. Your committee found that the works upon the Mississippi River would be left without a dollar after the 30th of June next, and if Congress has not made a mistake in appropriating heretofore for those great rivers and harbors upon which the commerce of this nation is carried, then this Congress should make appropriations to continue the improvements.

While your committee was not insensible to the fact that the newspapers of many States of this Union had condemned the river and harbor appropriation bill, we are willing to submit the question to the American House of Representatives. I ask the Republican party, members upon this side of the House, whether they propose that this Congress shall adjourn without due appropriations from the General Government for rivers and harbors to facilitate the commerce of the country?

If that policy is to be condemned, then I ask my Republican friends to let it be done by that party which, in the past at least, has claimed that there was no power under the Federal Constitution to make appropriations for these great internal improvements. But I am glad to learn that many of our Democratic friends on the other side of the House and all over the country have come to the conclusion that it is not only within the power of the Constitution but it is the absolute duty of the General Government to improve and maintain the great national highways of commerce, in order that the productive industries of the country may be promoted, that the products of the farm may be carried over our great national highways, and that those highways may be improved by all the appropriations necessary, so that the great monopolists, the railroads of the country, may not control the carrying of the products of the country to the markets on the seaboard.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. Does the gentleman propose to make this a party question by appealing to first one side of the House and then the other on this river and harbor bill? Is it to be made a party question?

Mr. PAGE. I am appealing to both sides of the House. I am appealing to gentlemen on both sides of the House who do not feel that they have been ostracized, that they have been whipped by the newspapers of the country into submission to the idea that no more appropriations shall be made by the General Government for the improvements of our rivers and harbors.

Mr. HATCH. Let me say to the gentleman from California, if he will yield to me for a moment, that gentlemen on this side of the House do not consider this a political question.

Mr. PAGE. Nor do we on this side.

Mr. HATCH. And we propose to vote on this bill according to our instructions from the people whom we represent, under our obligations as members of this House, and without any regard to party lines at all.

Mr. PAGE. I recognize the fact that gentlemen on all sides of this House who are free to exercise their own judgments and are bold enough to express their opinions are in favor of a river and harbor bill providing for the commerce of this country, providing for the protection of the productive interests of the nation and opening our rivers and harbor to the great industries of the nation.

Mr. Chairman, let me say, while I have been tantalized repeatedly by my friend from New York [Mr. COX], who, since the last election, has never lost an opportunity to say that I have been beaten, there is no one on the floor of this House who recognizes that fact with more certainty than I do. [Laughter.] I know I have been beaten; but if the gentleman means to insinuate that I was beaten because I favored the river and harbor bill he is simply mistaken. I represent a constituency who, whether they elect a Republican or a Democrat to Congress, recognize the right and the duty of the General Government to protect the great national highways of commerce by liberal appropriations in order that we may not be left at the mercy of the railroad monopolies. Let me say to my friend that not only the Republican but the Democratic party of California indorsed the last river and harbor bill unanimously in their conventions, and the people of the great West and Northwest to-day stand as a unit in favor of honest, liberal, decent appropriations for rivers and harbors.

I say it ill becomes the gentleman from New York to flaunt the fact of their defeat in the face of gentlemen who have tried to do their duty here as Representatives. For myself, at least, though I have always been as I am now, his friend, I am tired of having continually thrown in my face the fact that I was defeated. I am sorry I was; I tried not to be; I would have secured a re-election if I could. [Laughter.]

But if this river and harbor bill is to fail by the action of the gentleman from New York, there will be a time when a river and harbor bill will be passed, and then I shall be in this House, the representative of the people of California, who as one man stand up to-day asking for liberal appropriations for the great national highways of commerce. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose to yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR]. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty minutes.

Mr. PAGE. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Michigan, reserving ten minutes to myself.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, the bill which we are considering here to-night is, of all the bills which can possibly be passed by this or any other Congress, a non-partisan measure. Since the foundation of this Government no river and harbor bill, so far as I can learn, has ever been passed by a strictly party vote. There has always been in the United States a diversity of sentiment regarding the propriety of these river and harbor bills; but there has always been found in both parties a sufficient number of men who believe in the improvement of the water-ways of the country to keep up this method of looking after and improving our rivers and harbors. I do not think the question to-night will be or should be affected in the least by any consideration as to whether this man or that man was left at home in the last election. Let us rather look at the simple question before us: Is this a good bill, and ought it to receive our support?

We present to you a bill carrying about $8,000,000; and let me add right here that it is just such a bill as my friend from New York [Mr. COX], at every session since I have been here, has told the House he desired to vote for; that is to say, it is a bill which makes moderate appropriations for the great works of the country and one which the gentleman can not possibly oppose if he stands by his declarations made here in the past.

This bill contains thirty-eight items of less than $5,000 each, aggregating $109,500 for those smaller works. There are nineteen items of $5,000 each, forty-nine items over $5,000 and up to $10,000, inclusive, making one hundred and six items from $10,000 down, aggregating $607,500. There are thirty-four items from over $10,000 and up to $20,000, aggregating $534,500. So that of the two hundred and four items in the bill, there are one hundred and forty which aggregate only $1,141,000. The thirty-seven items from $20,000 up to $50,000 aggregate $1,380,000. There are, as I have said, two hundred and four items in the bill. Without the appropriations for the Mississippi River the bill carries $5,837,000 only. The bulk of this money is so distributed as to take care of the great ports, harbors, and rivers of the United States.

The simple question presented for this House to decide is whether we shall abandon this great system of internal improvements adopted by the fathers of our Republic and approved by every Congress since our Constitution was adopted. It is well known to gentlemen who are associated with me on the committee that I do not sympathize with the ordinary harangues which are made against the railroad companies of the United States. I believe I understand the great work they have done and are doing for the development of our country. But I do say to this committee to-night that this question of improving our rivers and harbors is a question which involves cheap transportation for the people. It is a question whether we shall get our products to the seaboard cheaply or not. For I say it with all kindness to the railroad companies that you could not get up among the railroad directors of the United States a more certain jubilee than to put a sand-bar at the mouth of each of our rivers and inland harbors. They would have the transportation of this nation then in their own hands. The competition furnished by our water-ways is to-day the great leveler of freights for our people.

I do not believe that the American Congress is going back on the idea of keeping these water-ways open. They are the greatest protection we have for cheap transportation to the seaboard.

I am not going to detain the committee to-night by any lengthy remarks upon this bill. We have given the Mississippi from its mouth to its source $2,150,000, $1,500,000 of which is to be expended under the direction of the Mississippi River Commission below Cairo. I know there are gentlemen here who differ with me as to the success of that undertaking. I know there are men here who do not believe we can ever tame that great river if we try. I stand here to-night to say that I believe this nation ought to grapple with this problem and solve it if it can. I know there is a good deal which can be said for levees and against levees. But I wish to say to gentlemen here that we shall never know whether we can control and improve that river unless we try. I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet; and while I know I speak in opposition to the opinions of a large number of members here, I desire to put it on record now that I do not believe that any system which you shall adopt in the great future for the improvement of the Mississippi River which leaves out the leveeing of its banks and the confining of its waters when high will ever prove to be a success. I believe while levees may not contribute to the improvement of low-water navigation, that the river can never be controlled and managed on any plan which does not provide for and prevent these disastrous overflows. However, in this bill we appropriate not one cent for levees. We have simply given the smallest amount which the commission said is necessary to improve the two lower reaches, about which we all agree. There is not a dollar in the bill for levees, but simply enough to go on with the experiment and finish those two reaches.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. My friend from Michigan understands the bill will deprive the commission of the right to spend money for levees if they shall so conclude.

Mr. HORR. The bill is silent on that, but under their plan the commission stated to our committee that the million and a half would not permit them to build a single levee; that it would take every dollar of it to carry on the work on the two reaches they are now attempting to complete.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. But under the silence my friend says lingers about his bill——

Mr. HORR. We leave it for the commission to control.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Exactly.

Mr. HORR. And if the gentleman thinks it ought to be bound up he can make his amendment to that effect.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I did not wish to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. HORR. I do not say the commission is hampered in the bill at all. On the contrary, it is left to the commission to follow their own judgment as the bill now stands.

Mr. KENNA. If the gentleman will allow me to suggest, the provision which inaugurated the commission was not silent on the subject of levees, but confined the building of levees to those necessary as incidental to the improvement of navigation.

Mr. HORR. There is no doubt about that, but there is a difference of opinion even among the commission as to the levees. The gentleman from Massachusetts was on a special committee which examined the river, and I understand he is opposed to levees. I do not object to your putting any amendment on this bill you see fit as to this levee question if the House shall approve it. It makes little difference, since the bill carries so little money, that there is none for building levees. If you desire to guard it, so far as I am concerned I have no objection, though I prefer to leave the commission free to carry out their own well-devised plans. All I was aiming to do was to state my opinion, on the manner in which the future would compel us to treat that river.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the members of this committee are going off wild on this river and harbor bill. It is an old subject; we have been improving these streams now for seventy years. This bill is drawn with the greatest economy. And you will find at the close of the bill a clause whereby we prevent any further surveys being made, and any further expenditures entered upon except on a report of the engineers who are to make examinations, and they are required to report as to the national character of the work proposed and the importance of each new improvement before even any extended survey shall be made.

Now, the items in this bill for small works aggregate but a few thousand dollars. The great bulk of this bill is for the improvement of such streams as the Ohio, the Mississippi, the Missouri, the Kentucky, the Red, the Columbia, and the Great Kanawha, and such harbors as New York city, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, Savannah, Galveston, Oakland, and so on. The great bulk of this money is simply for the purpose of improving these great harbors and rivers, which all admit are national in their commerce and of great importance to our country.

We present to-day the most remarkable spectacle on the face of the earth. We as a people to-day, after having gone through a war that destroyed property, devastated fields, and unsettled business, and after being saddled with a debt which other nations would stagger under; after all this, and at a time when the greatest and richest nations of the Old World are laboring to keep their debts within bounds and are struggling even to pay their interest, this nation is to-day struggling to prevent the payment of its debt, principal and all, too rapidly.

Just think of it, money is actually coming into our Treasury so rapidly as to alarm our financiers, and they fear we are receiving it faster than we can safely use it, even in payment of our debts. Now, this money is largely collected from the commerce of this nation. And shall we not, Mr. Chairman, give to that commerce encouragement? If we do not, if we refuse that encouragement, we shall act differently from every other civilized nation on the face of this earth. Why, only think of it; France, not as large to-day as the State of Texas, or certainly no larger, spends every year over $15,000,000, and from that to $50,000,000 on her rivers and harbors. England spends over $15,000,000 a year; and here we, a nation that includes thirty-eight States and eight Territories, a nation grand in its territorial extent, each State and Territory averaging as much as all Great Britain; only think of it, such a nation here now higgling about a little bill that appropriates $8,000,000 for the great water-ways and harbors of such an imperial domain. It is almost ridiculous to talk about the expenditure of such a sum as being extravagant; and the hue and cry that comes up now about a river and harbor bill, I care not whether it comes from party organs or not, it must come from people who do not appreciate or properly understand the needs of this great nation. I make no charges against any one, and I hope that the members of this committee will wait long before they will go back upon a policy which has been approved by every great statesman from the days of Washington down to the present time.

That is all I desire, Mr. Chairman, to say upon this bill by way of general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield the remainder of his time?

Mr. PAGE. How much time is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used fifteen minutes of the time allotted to him.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman from New York [Mr. RICHARDSON] desires to be recognized in his own time, and I will reserve to myself the balance of the time given to the gentleman from Michigan, if there be no objection.

Mr. COX, of New York. Are not the opponents of this bill to have a chance?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. RICHARDSON] is recognized.

Mr. BELFORD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COX, of New York. When do the opponents of this bill get a chance?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I am against the bill. Am I recognized?

Mr. BELFORD. Under what rule does this debate proceed?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules of the House of Representatives which govern the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BELFORD. Is the gentleman from New York now on the floor a member of the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir; and opposed to the bill.

Mr. BELFORD. What time is he entitled to?

The CHAIRMAN. One hour.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER].

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, I wish in a few words to do my duty to my colleagues on the Committee on Commerce by bearing testimony to the fact that this bill was prepared with unusual care by that committee. Every item in the bill was closely scrutinized, and it is my honest opinion, based upon a knowledge of the facts, that this bill contains no item which can or ought to be objected to unless gentlemen wish to make no appropriations for rivers and harbors that are clearly in the interest of commerce and navigation.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact that our time is very precious and limited, and I therefore will not occupy any more of it but simply by expressing the wish that gentlemen on this floor will not consume any more time than is strictly necessary to bring this bill to a final passage and that the sluice-ways of oratory will not be opened to flood this committee. It is very desirable that this flood of eloquence should be dammed a little at this time, so that we may soon dispose of this bill in one way or the other.

This is all I wish to say at this time.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. Mr. Chairman, it is with no little regret that I oppose this bill, for in its essential features it is substantially the same as the last river and harbor bill, that received my hearty approval and support.

There are no navigable waters in my district requiring improvement, and perhaps from this circumstance I more readily accepted the statement that many of the water-ways under improvement were not of national importance. But be that as it may, such was my conviction, and I voted against the river and harbor appropriations in the Forty-sixth Congress.

Placed upon the Committee on Commerce of this Congress, it became my duty to investigate this subject and to determine for myself what works were of sufficient importance to justify an appropriation.

I soon discovered that the phrase "national importance" as popularly used had no fixed or definite signification, and that if a definition of that phrase was formulated in accordance with the popular idea of its meaning, and all works were suspended that did not meet the requirements of that definition, there would be but few works prosecuted in all this country.

Probably the improvement of the Mississippi River would not be suspended, for its waters and those of its 16,000 miles of navigable tributaries wash the soil of eighteen States and two Territories, and in its valley dwell three-fifths of our people; but it is not so clear that the improvement at Buffalo would be continued, although the tonnage of the vessels that enter and clear at that port is greater than the aggregate tonnage of vessels entering and clearing at all other lake ports in the State of New York, yet only a small minority of the people are interested in that improvement, and but a fragment of our commerce goes in and out of that harbor. Should operations upon its works cease today and remain suspended for years the loss would be great, but would be felt by a comparative few and be known only in a limited section of the country. Again, an improvement admitted to be of lasting benefit to national commerce might not properly be made. If the work at Hell Gate had involved the expenditure of five hundred million instead of five million dollars it would not have been commenced in this generation.

On the other hand, it might not be proper to appropriate a small sum to benefit a great commerce. Cover Seneca Lake with ships—it will float the largest—and give it a tonnage equal to that of the Hudson River, its harbors will not be improved by the General Government, for its waters lie wholly within one State. But it does not follow that waters that do lie wholly in one State may not be improved, for nearly $1,200,000 have, without objection, been appropriated for the improvement of the Hudson River, that lies wholly, or substantially so, in the State of New York.

How, then, are we to decide what rivers and harbors are to be improved? By what standard is their importance to be determined?

In the case of the United States vs. The New Bedford Bridge, 1 Woodbury and Minot's Reports, 421, Mr. Justice Woodbury used the following language:

> For purposes of foreign commerce, and of that from State to State, the navigable rivers of the whole country seem to me to be within the jurisdiction of the General Government, with all the powers over them for such purposes (whenever they choose to exercise them) which existed previously in the States or now exist with Parliament in England.

In the case of Corfield vs. Coryell, 4 Washington Circuit Court Reports, 379, Mr. Justice Washington said:

> The grant to Congress to regulate commerce on the navigable waters belonging to the several States renders those waters the public property of the United States for all purposes of navigation and commercial intercourse, subject only to Congressional regulation.

And in the case of Gilman vs. Philadelphia, 3 Wallace, 724, it was said:

> The power to regulate commerce comprehends the control for that purpose, and to the extent necessary, of all the navigable waters of the United States which are accessible from a State other than those in which they lie. For this purpose they are the public property of the nation, and subject to all the requisite legislation of Congress. This necessarily includes the power to keep them open and free from any obstruction to their navigation interposed by the States or otherwise, to remove such obstructions when they exist, and to provide by such sanctions as they may deem proper against the recurrence of the evil, and for the punishment of offenders. For these purposes Congress possesses all the powers which existed in the States before the adoption of the national Constitution, and which have always existed in the Parliament in England. It is for Congress to determine when its full power shall be brought into activity, and as to the regulations and sanctions which shall be provided.

Although Congress has the constitutional power to appropriate for the improvement of every navigable stream or harbor whose waters are accessible from a State other than that in which they lie, it would not be proper to improve any such stream or harbor unless its commerce is commensurate to the expenditure necessary to make the improvement; nor do I believe that it would be improper to improve every such stream or harbor, great or small, whose commerce is commensurate to the required expenditure. That is, the propriety of the improvement is to be determined not by the amount of money required to be expended or by the commerce to be benefited, but by the relative proportion of the expenditure to the benefits to be derived therefrom.

The improvement of every such stream or harbor is of national importance in a legal sense, for their waters are the public property of the nation for all the purposes of commerce; and their commerce being interstate or foreign, is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the national Government.

Although the last river and harbor bill was prepared upon a more conservative theory than I have indicated, it met with unprecedented opposition.

This opposition evidently was not aroused by reason of the amount, for there had been appropriated aside from this, at the last session of Congress, more than $245,000,000 without criticism, included in which latter amount was more than six millions for public buildings, the necessity for which in many instances is not so clearly apparent.

It was well known, at the then rate of payment, that such portion of the interest-bearing debt as could be reached before the year 1891 would be extinguished within the next two or three years, after which, as aptly expressed by the President in his last annual message—

> Either the surplus must lie idle in the Treasury or the Government will be forced to buy at market rates its bonds not then redeemable, and which under such circumstances can not fail to command an enormous premium.

It is equally well known that this House had passed a bill to reduce the revenues $23,000,000, which failed to pass in the Senate, and that a surplus was accumulating in the Treasury at the rate of $150,000,000 a year. I believe the people would have preferred that the whole of the twenty-three millions we tried to leave in their hands had been appropriated to be invested for their benefit in the improvement of our waterways for the reduction of freights, thereby giving employment to labor and disseminating the money through all the channels of trade, to having it remain in the Treasury to expedite the appreciation of bonds or the contraction of the currency, if they had not been taught to believe that the money was corruptly appropriated and would be injudiciously expended.

There seemed to be an organized effort in certain sections to inflame the people and create a public sentiment in opposition to further appropriations for rivers and harbors. But what is the motive for making this effort, or who is to be benefited by breaking down these appropriations?

Nearly 80 per cent. of the exports of domestic merchandise from the United States to foreign countries consists of products of agriculture, and the principal part of the export of such commodities other than cotton is the product of the Western and Northwestern States. The value of the products of agriculture exported to foreign countries during the year ended June 30, 1882, exclusive of cotton, amounted to $352,407,175.

More than one-half the grain crop of the United States in 1879 was raised by the States of Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, and Arkansas, and the Territory of Dakota, for all of which the natural outlet is the Mississippi River. In 1880 there were received at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore 312,050,930 bushels of grain, and exported from them 225,776,549 bushels. In 1881 there were received at these cities 250,698,517 bushels of grain, and exported from them 213,162,263 bushels. More than three-fourths of this grain came to these cities by rail.

Work upon the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River was begun in June, 1875. Previous to that date it was difficult for vessels drawing more than sixteen feet of water to pass the bar at the mouth of the Mississippi River; the depth of water now reported is twenty-nine feet. In 1875 there were exported from New Orleans 777,127 bushels of grain; the exports have continued to increase, and in 1881 there were exported from that city 16,859,343 bushels. During the year ended June 30, 1881, there were exported from New Orleans 4,650,119 bushels of grain more than in the previous year, whereas the aggregate exports of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore were 12,614,286 bushels less than the preceding year. (See report of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department.)

In the Forty-sixth Congress a sub-committee of the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River, to whom was referred the report of the Mississippi River Commission, under a resolution of the House proceeded down the Mississippi River from Saint Louis to its mouth for the purpose of acquiring a knowledge of its peculiar condition and wants, and to gather information relative to the best methods for its improvement. That sub-committee in its report (No. 1575, second session Forty-sixth Congress) states, among other things:

It is not unreasonable to estimate that the deepening of the channel of the Mississippi River will lessen the freight carriage and insurance rates of the cereals alone to the seaboard at least 5 cents per bushel.

Second. The rate by river determines the rate by rail.

The people of the State of New York at the last general election, by more than 200,000 majority, adopted an amendment to the constitution of that State making the canals free.

The following is from an editorial in the Albany Evening Journal of September 20 last:

The development of rival routes by way of the Mississippi River and the Welland Canal and Saint Lawrence River calls upon New York to adopt such a course as will enable it to continue to compete successfully with the new claimants for the control of water transportation.

A large share of New York's commercial supremacy is to be traced to the construction of De Witt Clinton's ditch, and the adoption or rejection of the pending amendment involves the continuance or abandonment of the beneficial waterway.

That was the potential argument in favor of free canals, and was made everywhere in the State by those favoring the amendment. It was not the intent of that argument to create a prejudice against the improvement of the Mississippi River, for the people of the State of New York would not harbor the thought that what helps others injures them, but to impress the fact that in order to retain the carrying trade in its accustomed channels their rates must be reduced; nor could that argument be controverted. If the improvement at the mouth of the Mississippi River enabled New Orleans to increase her exports of grain more than twenty-fold in six years, and her exports for the year 1881 were increased nearly five million bushels over the preceding year, while during the same year the aggregate exports of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore decreased nearly thirteen million bushels, what may be expected from improvements that will secure a reduction of 5 cents per bushel on the cost of moving grain from the interior to the sea—from the grain-fields that supply our foreign market.

If the result should be to divert this trade it might seriously affect some of the markets that now handle this grain.

There were shipped in 1880 from the principal primary markets of the West, exclusive of Saint Louis, 274,863,477 bushels, as follows:

	Bushels.
Duluth	6,511,100
Milwaukee	29,691,524
Chicago	154,377,115
Peoria	20,544,508
Detroit	10,366,491
Toledo	53,372,739
	274,863,477

And there were exported to foreign countries the same year from—

	Bushels.
Boston	15,702,941
New York	123,731,628
Philadelphia	32,615,156
Baltimore	53,726,824
	225,776,549

Is there an apprehension in any of these cities that their grain trade will be diverted, and does this apprehension account for the attitude of their public press?

The lines of trade and travel are not readily changed, and the best informed believe that the railways that now carry the great bulk of this grain will not give up their traffic, but to retain it will reduce their freights to competing rates.

These roads annually bring from the West between two and three hundred million bushels of grain. A reduction of 5 cents per bushel involves a decrease of from ten to fifteen million dollars a year in their revenues from this product alone. Can we expect these roads to favor a project that will take from them such sums as these? Will they not make every effort to defeat it? And will not the organs of the roads use all their power to advance the interest of their owners, regardless of the public good?

I have mentioned only the grain product, but the argument applies to meats and all other domestic merchandise that enter into our foreign trade.

I have heard not a word uttered against the improvement of the Mississippi River, nor would it be politic to assail a work so important, in which so many are interested. But by denunciation of small works, by vilification and charges of corruption, the bill carrying the appropriation for that river has been made obnoxious, and by this course more effective work has been done to embarrass, postpone, and ultimately defeat that project than could possibly have been accomplished by a direct attack upon it, and the people have come to denounce the very measures that would reduce their freights, and leave millions in their hands.

By a resolution of this House, adopted on the 9th of December last, the Secretary of War was requested to report to the House the following information:

Whether any moneys appropriated by the act of August 2, 1882, "making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," were appropriated for works or objects that are not in the interest of or do not benefit commerce and navigation; and, if so, to name such works or objects, and the respective amounts so appropriated.

Whether any of the moneys appropriated by said act have been or are being used or expended under its provisions upon works or objects that are not in the interest of or do not benefit commerce or navigation; and, if so, to name such works or objects, and the respective amounts so used or expended.

Whether the expenditure of any moneys authorized by said act has been withheld or stopped; and, if so, to state how much, for what works or objects, and for what cause.

Also the amount of moneys appropriated by said act on hand and unexpended and uncontracted for, and likely to be on hand July 1, 1883, with an explanation of why such balance is likely to be so on hand, and how much of any balance on hand and unexpended comprises moneys that have been previously appropriated, and are carried over from year to year through non-compliance with the conditions of law making such appropriations.

And that he also furnish the reports and estimates of the Engineer Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, which have not been transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury, in conformity with section 3669 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

And any other information pertinent to this subject that he may see proper to send to the House.

In response to the resolution the Secretary of War replied by letter dated January 4, 1883, in which he states:

My wish to give a satisfactory answer to the inquiries of the House has compelled me to make a new and very extended examination of the subjects covered by the act.

Having done this, it has appeared to me that in many instances the results of substantial benefit to general commerce were so obscure and apparently insignificant as to vindicate the doubt on the part of the House of Representatives indicated by the inquiry presented in the resolution.

I therefore submit herewith (Exhibit A) a list of works directed by the act, which are seemingly of this character, with such details of information concerning them briefly stated as seem to me substantially to furnish the information called for by the resolution.

Under Exhibit A are named ninety-two works, carrying appropriations of $1,032,000, which deducted from the entire bill there remain two hundred and sixty-nine works, carrying appropriations of $17,706,875, which do not appear obscure or insignificant to the Secretary of War after a very extended examination.

In this amount of $1,032,000 is included the sum of $250,000 which, in the language of the act, was appropriated "for the improvement and protection of the navigable channels of the Sacramento and Feather Rivers, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

The statement in Exhibit A relative to this appropriation contains the following:

If it was the intention of Congress to protect these lands—

Referring to lands adjacent to the Sacramento and Feather Rivers—from the flow of detritus, it would be, in my opinion, to that extent a local work and not in any way in the interest of commerce and navigation.

If Congress designed that this money should be diverted to a different object from that for which it was appropriated, and the Secretary of War, under whose direction the expenditure was specifically placed, had actually diverted it, it is quite evident that would not have been in the interest of good morals, whatever the effect might have been upon commerce and navigation. But as the Secretary states that this was not the intention of Congress, and as the money has not been expended, I fail to see the pertinency of the criticism.

Sixty-four works named in Exhibit A, carrying an appropriation of $559,000, are being prosecuted, and nearly the whole of the money appropriated for them will be expended during the present fiscal year. By the act itself the money is appropriated to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War; it can not be drawn from the Treasury without his requisition nor expended without his authority.

In August, 1870, President Grant sent the following message to the House of Representatives:

To the House of Representatives:

In affixing my signature to the river and harbor bill, No. 3922, I deem it my duty to announce to the House of Representatives my objections to some features of the bill, and the reason I sign it. If it was obligatory upon the Executive to expend all the money appropriated by Congress, I should return the river and harbor bill with my objections, notwithstanding the great inconvenience to the public interests resulting therefrom and the loss of expenditures from previous Congresses upon incompleted works. Without enumerating, many appropriations are made for works of purely private or local interest, in no sense national. I can not give my sanction to these, and will take care that during my term of office no public money shall be expended upon them.

There is very great necessity for economy of expenditures at this time, growing out of the loss of revenue likely to arise from a deficiency of appropriations to insure a thorough collection of the same. The reduction of revenue districts, diminution of special agents, and total abolition of supervisors may result in great falling off of the revenue. It may be a question to consider whether any expenditure can be authorized under the river and harbor appropriation further than to protect works already done and paid for. Under no circumstances will I allow expenditures upon works not clearly national.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 14, 1876.

As quite a number of works appropriated for in the last bill are not being prosecuted, and as the order for their prosecution has so far been withheld, it is fair to assume that the principle here enunciated is approved by the executive department, and that these sixty-four works are meritorious, or at least have sufficient merit not to warrant their discontinuance.

Take for example the first work named in Exhibit A, Plymouth Harbor, Massachusetts, one of the sixty-four just referred to. The annual report of the Chief Engineer estimated for this harbor $1,000; $14,000, however, were appropriated.

Although it would not be unseemly to make liberal appropriations for a harbor so memorable, yet it was not from any sentiment that this increase was made, but upon the recommendation contained in the following letter read in the United States Senate on May 2, 1882:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., April 7, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a letter from the Chief of Engineers of the 5th instant, and accompanying copy of one from Colonel George Thom, Corps of Engineers, reporting serious damage to the work of the United States for the protection of the outer end of Long Beach, Plymouth Harbor, Massachusetts. It is represented that the preservation of this harbor depends entirely upon the maintenance of Long Beach, and any action of the sea thereon likely to seriously injure it should be at once arrested.

The cost of the required protection is estimated at $14,000, and an appropriation by Congress of which amount is respectfully recommended.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

Hon. S. J. R. MCMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

The following is the statement found in Exhibit A:

IMPROVING HARBOR AT PLYMOUTH, MASSACHUSETTS.

Continuing improvement	$14,000

Previous expenditures on this work have aggregated in round numbers $85,000, the object of the expenditure being to preserve the beach by which the harbor is sheltered from easterly storms, and to widen, deepen, and straighten a channel leading to the wharves at Plymouth, the original channel having a minimum depth of six inches only at mean low water. The benefits to be derived from these improvements appear to be local, with but little bearing on the commerce of the country. One of the strong arguments advanced for improving the neighboring harbor of Scituate, Massachusetts, is that the Plymouth Harbor is so difficult of approach as to render it almost useless for strangers.

Balance in Treasury July 1, 1881	$——
Appropriated act August 2, 1882	14,000
Drawn on requisition, July 1 to December 31, 1882	10,000

The statement that "previous expenditures on this work have aggregated in round numbers $85,000" would imply that no more than this amount has been expended. I find, however, that there has been expended on Plymouth Harbor since 1824 to the beginning of the present fiscal year the sum of $141,976.74.

The collector of that port reports that for the year ended December 31, 1881, the collection from imports, hospital, and tonnage dues amounted to $45,048.24 over and above the expenses of collection. Total value of imports and exports, $1,430,306; arrival and departure of all vessels, 2,732.

In the Engineer's report of 1882, at page 519, will be found this strong argument advanced for improving the neighboring harbor of Scituate:

The coast between Scituate and the entrance to Boston Harbor is so densely studded with dangerous shoals and sunken rocks that vessels can not find shelter there at times, when most necessary (in fogs and easterly storms), so that if on passing around Cape Cod or coming elsewhere from the eastward a vessel should fail to make Boston Harbor, and fall to the leeward, it could now find no other refuge except Plymouth Harbor (about eighteen miles to the southward), the approach to which at the "Cow Yard" is difficult and dangerous, especially for strangers.

It is well that this harbor in the year 1620 was not "almost useless for strangers," but perhaps at that early day it was as easily discernible as now that the "Cow Yard" is not the main ship channel.

No portion of the $223,000 appropriated for the remaining twenty-six works named in "Exhibit A" has been expended, and no provision, as I understand, has been made for its expenditure. Two of these works are in the State of New York. The following are the statements of the Secretary of War relative to them:

Improving Grass River at Massena, New York: appropriation, $3,000. The principal purpose of this improvement appears to relate to the town of Massena and the summer resorts there located.

Improving Niagara River, New York: continuing improvement, $1,500. The object of this work is to create a new channel from the river to the wharves of Tonawanda.

Perhaps there is no work for which an appropriation was made that is less meritorious than the improvement of Grass River. The engineer, however, states:

An examination of the map will show the relatively small proportion of the shoal water, such as would obstruct the passage of a three-foot-draught boat (such as now run) and the navigable water. As I have already remarked, the uniformity in depth and width, absence of current, stability of channel, and other features, give this stream more the character of a large canal than of a river, and make it admirably adapted to navigation by small steamers.

As to the commercial interest to be benefited by the proposed work I think there is no question. Massena is the center of a wealthy country, and as a summer resort it has no little celebrity.

Considerable business is carried on with Cornwall, Canada, by way of Grass River. As the Ogdensburgh and Lake Champlain Railroad (American) is fifteen miles distant, a good deal of live stock and produce are shipped east by the Grand Trunk Railroad (Canadian).

The improvement of the river would largely increase this business, besides enabling boats from Ogdensburgh to ascend to Massena some three months in navigable season, drawing four to five feet of water.

Taking in consideration the small cost of the work, its durability, and the demand for it, I believe the improvement advisable.

The necessity for the improvement of Niagara River is shown by the following letter:

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Oswego, N. Y., January 17, 1881.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit herewith my report upon the survey of Niagara River, at the mouth of Tonawanda Creek, ordered by act of Congress approved June 14, 1880, and placed in my charge by letter from your office dated June 17, 1880.

The port of Tonawanda, which lies at the mouth of Tonawanda Creek, on the Niagara River, 11 miles below Buffalo, partly in each of the two collection districts of Buffalo Creek and Suspension Bridge, has, within the last few years, become of great importance as a lumbering port, rating, it is said, next after Chicago, most of the lumber trade of Buffalo having gone to it. Last year it received 350,000,000 feet (board measure) of lumber. This lumber, which is almost exclusively from the forests of Michigan and Wisconsin, is sent away or distributed chiefly through the agency of the Erie Canal and the New York Central and Erie Railways. The arrivals and departures at Tonawanda during the last year were, of lake vessels, 1,800; canal boats, 6,000; employing upward of 8,000 men.

In front of the mouth of Tonawanda Creek lies Tonawanda Island, between which and the shore is a narrow channel, so obstructed by bars near its middle and at the upper and lower ends of the island that it has become necessary, in order to avoid maneuvering in it, for large vessels seeking the port to pass down the outer channel between Tonawanda and Grand Islands, doubling the lower end of Tonawanda Island, and so passing up the inner channel to Tonawanda Creek. The outer channel through which they have to pass is, however, obstructed in several places by submerged rocks, on which a number of vessels have been lost.

The improvement desired here is that these rocks in the channel be removed and that the bars before referred to be cut away so as to admit of a safer handling of vessels in the inner channel.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WALTER MCFARLAND,
Major of Engineers.

Brig. Gen. H. G. WRIGHT,
Chief of Engineers, U. S. A.

Upon that letter and the report of the assistant engineer accompanying it, Congress on the 4th March, 1881, appropriated $5,000 for the improvement of Niagara River, which was applied by the War Department to the improvement of Tonawanda Harbor. The engineer estimated that it would require $1,500 more to complete the improvement, as will appear by reference to the engineer's report 1881, and on August 2, 1882, Congress appropriated that amount for that purpose. On page 310 of the annual report of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army to the Secretary of War is found the following statement relative to this improvement:

3. Niagara River at Tonawanda Harbor, New York.—The troublesome bars at the head and near the middle of Tonawanda Island, and at the mouth of the Tonawanda Creek have been removed, a depth of thirteen feet water being secured over them.

The contract rates were so low that all the work contemplated has been done under the appropriation of 1881, and no more money is asked for.

I have examined the reports and have been unable to find anything that justifies the statement that the object of the work is to create a new channel from the river to the wharves.

The products of the forest received at Tonawanda during the year 1881 aggregate a value of nearly $10,000,000, and the lumber that was shipped away from that port during that year that had been received by the way of the lakes required over 9,000 freight cars, besides 328,000,000 feet that were shipped on the Erie Canal, and it ought not to be forgotten that this lumber is the raw material that supplies the manufacturing centers all through the East, and that its value is increased many fold by the skilled workers in wood.

I do not believe that this work deserves to be branded as insignificant or obscure. Although it would be profitable to take up each one of the twenty-six works and compare the statements in Exhibit A with the statements of the engineers, I shall call attention to only one other work, Old Town Creek, Mississippi.

The following is the statement in Exhibit A:

Improving Old Town Creek, Mississippi: appropriation, $3,000. This creek runs into the Tombigbee River, after meandering thirty miles in a direct distance of twelve miles. The estimated cost of the proposed improvement is $10,000, with which it is proposed to make it navigable after the winter rains set in for an anticipated period of about five months. When examined, a box drain twelve inches square would pass all the water in the creek.

The engineer, Captain A. M. Damrell, states, page 1326, report for 1882, that—

The creek can not be improved for low-water navigation.

For high-water navigation, from about December 1 to May 1, it can be put in good boating condition from its mouth up to City Point, four miles from Verona, on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, a distance of thirty miles by the creek and twelve miles by land, by the removal of overhanging and fallen trees and drift accumulated, at an estimated cost of about $10,000, and in one good working season.

The immediate benefit to be derived would be a saving in freight of about $1.50 each on about 34,000 bales of cotton annually, which is now transported by rail, and a corresponding reduction in freight on return supplies of probably 80 per cent. in value of the cotton.

It is further stated in the report that from December 1 to May 1 the stream is from six to eighteen feet above low water.

I do not believe that a single objection would be raised against the improvement of this stream in the whole State of Mississippi, unless it be by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, which takes annually $90,000 from the people that this improvement would leave in their hands.

Shall smaller communities be compelled to pay revenues, customs dues, and taxes to the Government, to be invested in improvements for large communities, and be denied a more economical expenditure to improve a navigable stream, bearing interstate or foreign commerce, in sight of their very doors?

I am fully satisfied that the smaller appropriations yield better returns and accommodate a greater number of people, dollar for dollar expended, than the larger appropriations for our greater works.

The items in the last bill that seem to be or are of little merit are so few in number, and involve the expenditure of such an inconsiderable amount, it can not be possible that they aroused the opposition which this bill received. Who believes that if every item named in Exhibit A had been omitted the bill would have been received with greater favor? The people were unadvised as to the real merit of any of these appropriations, for not one report of any engineer officer in relation to these improvements was published by the press for their information. Whoever, being ignorant of the evidence upon which a verdict was founded, should condemn a jury for that verdict would still condemn, whether the verdict was for a few cents more or a few cents less.

Were it possible for the people of my district or State to request me to violate my oath and vote for measures that I know to be unconstitutional and wrong, I should refuse to comply; but in matters of mere policy, involving no principle, but only the expenditure of money, I feel it to be my duty to execute their will.

Party conventions assume to express by their resolutions the will of the people relative to matters of policy.

The Republican State convention at Saratoga last fall—

Resolved, * * * The President's courage in resisting the enactment of the river and harbor bill, which violated the accepted rules of constitutional power, and which, while authorizing many needed public improvements, carried with it large, wasteful appropriations for works of neither national nor public good, has secured for him admiration even of his enemies.

Perhaps my colleagues on the other side of the House may not feel bound by this declaration, especially in view of the result of the election last fall.

But they must not forget that from Syracuse came no uncertain sound, and that its convention announced:

In particular we proclaim our condemnation of the river and harbor bill, in which, by the multiplication and mutual support of obnoxious provisions, the infamous measure purchased its way through Congress in disregard of the limitations of the Constitution and to the depravation of morals.

I believe the people of my State are at present opposed to further appropriations for rivers and harbors, and for that reason alone I shall vote against this bill.

I realize that cheap transportation can best be secured by improving our water ways; that although our mountains may be full of ores, our coal-fields exhaustless, and our soil never so fertile, our industries will languish without cheap transportation, for without that we can not have cheap metals, cheap fuel, cheap food—the chief elements of our prosperity.

The State of New York has expended over a hundred million dollars upon her canals, and has recently made these canals free as rivers, at an expense of at least a million dollars a year.

Who can estimate the benefits of these improvements to State and nation? They stimulated every industry, built up thriving cities and populous towns, raised the State from a subordinate to the chief position, and made its principal city the metropolis of the continent, with financial strength to sustain the Government in its struggle for existence.

I would that the temper of the people were such that the Government could emulate the liberal policy of the State of New York, not by digging artificial water ways, but by improving, under the limitations heretofore expressed, every navigable water, with which nature has so bountifully supplied this broad domain of ours, as rapidly as the condition of the Treasury would warrant and the wants of commerce demand.

During the delivery and at the close of the remarks of Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, the following proceedings took place:

Mr. HISCOCK. Is the gentleman entirely sure his statement about the amounts appropriated in the last session is right?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I took it from your speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. No, you did not; not from any speech of mine.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Do I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. RICHARDSON] to say the people of New York State are opposed to any appropriation to rivers and harbors, or merely that they are opposed to appropriations which they believe were secured by log-rolling, by which appropriations that ought not to be made are got through in order to secure those that ought to be made?

Mr. HORR. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I would like the gentleman from New York [Mr. RICHARDSON] to answer the question.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. Does the gentleman say the last bill was secured by log-rolling?

Mr. HUTCHINS. I made no such statement. I asked the gentleman did not the people believe that appropriations were so secured? And did they not for that reason condemn that bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. That was the idea the gentleman started with.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I want the gentleman to answer my question. Does he think the people of New York are opposed to proper appropriations for the improvement of the national highways of this country?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I ask the gentleman whether he thinks the last bill was secured by log-rolling?

Mr. HUTCHINS. I think appropriations were made in the last bill that should not have been made. I think they were placed there in order to secure appropriations that should have been made.

Mr. ROBESON. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS], before he sits down, a question, whether he thinks that New York is the nation and that only its rivers and harbors are the national highways?

Mr. HUTCHINS. No, sir; so far from that, I think that New York furnishes five times as much of its money toward the improvement of rivers and harbors as it receives back in this bill.

Mr. WHITE. Has the State of New York not always got more than its share?

Mr. HUTCHINS. Do you consider $280,000 more than its proper share when you apply more than that to the improvement of one Oregon River alone—the Columbia River?

Mr. CALKINS. I would ask the gentleman, does not the commerce of the whole country pour itself across his State?

Mr. HISCOCK. And New York has given $100,000,000, has taken that money out of its own pockets for improvements, and does not ask the Federal Treasury to contribute anything.

Mr. HUTCHINS. If there are to be any more questions addressed to me I shall be happy to hear them.

Mr. HORR. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Has the gentleman not always been in favor of a river and harbor bill and always aided the bill in being passed?

Mr. HUTCHINS. I am in favor of a proper river and harbor bill, and will vote for it.

Mr. HORR. Is this a proper one?

Mr. HUTCHINS. I will tell you after it has been considered. Some things in it look strange; perhaps the gentleman from Michigan will be able to explain them.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I move that the committee rise, in order that the House may enforce its rules. Have we not a Sergeant-at-Arms that can preserve order in this Hall?

The CHAIRMAN. Members will take their seats and come to order.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has fifteen minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, for a question.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand my friend from New York to have given full, good, and conclusive reasons for voting for this bill. Now, is it his purpose to vote against it?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understood my colleague was talking against the bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understood my friend from New York to say the citizens of New York are opposed to appropriations for rivers and harbors. Do I understand him to mean that they are opposed to appropriations for rivers and harbors unless they are expended within or upon the borders of the State of New York?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I did not say that.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Is that so?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I did not state so.

Mr. ROBESON. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I do.

Mr. ROBESON. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York whether the State of New York is not the seat of the concentrated railroad capital of this country?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I so understand it.

Mr. ROBESON. I would like to ask him whether the metropolitan press does not respond to the interests that are concentrated in New York?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. ROBESON. One moment. I would like to ask the gentleman whether when New York did herself so much honor by making her great canal a channel of free transportation, whether that measure was not advocated by Ex-Governor Seymour, of New York, in a statesmanlike letter; whether his views were not sustained by public meetings of the Democratic representatives, some of them now here; and whether he did not call the attention of the people of New York to the fact that when their great free water way of transportation was closed in the winter season then the freights upon the food of the people and upon the results of their industries and upon their commodities rose 25 per cent.?

Mr. HUTCHINS. I will answer the gentleman by saying——

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. RICHARDSON] to yield for a question from me.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. Have I still the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] has asked me a question.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Will my colleague yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. The gentleman from New Jersey has asked me a question. He has answered it, I am certain, satisfactorily to himself, and therefore I think there is no necessity for me to answer it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Now I ask my colleague to yield to a question from me?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is not the State of New York and are not the people of New York in favor of internal improvements?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. Have I not said that they have spent a hundred millions of dollars on them?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes.

Mr. CALKINS. Spent in the State of New York?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes; they are in favor of improvements of a national character and for the national benefit.

Mr. CALKINS. Who is to judge of that? The people of New York?

Mr. HISCOCK. The House of Representatives.

Mr. CALKINS. And the people of New York have been made rich by carrying the commerce of the West.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to ask my colleague this question, in reply to the insinuation that New York is influenced by the railroad interests: I ask my colleague if he can tell me how the railroads of New York are benefited by a free canal in the State of New York?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I believe that it takes off 1 cent a bushel from their freight.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is that for the benefit of the railroads?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I have not claimed that it was.

Mr. HISCOCK. No; but the gentleman from New Jersey insinuated that it was.

Mr. ROBESON. I said the railroads opposed the free canal.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask my colleague if the metropolitan press of New York opposed free canals?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I did not say that.

Mr. HUTCHINS. No; they supported them unanimously.

Mr. HISCOCK My question was in response to the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUTCHINS. And the city of New York voted almost unanimously to make the Erie Canal free, and so far to take off taxes from every Western State. I hope the gentleman from New Jersey understands that. [Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Mr. MILLER. I yield the floor to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not the floor to yield.

Mr. BELFORD. I rise to a point of order. When we are discussing the great question of water let us have peace. [Laughter and cries of "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Until members of the committee take their seats and order is restored the Chair will recognize nobody.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. There will be no further business transacted to-night until the committee comes to order.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. I desire to reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. RICHARDSON] has six minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of fixing the time when general debate upon this bill shall close.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BROWNE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. PAGE. I now move that when the House again resolves itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor bill all general debate upon that bill shall be limited to one hour.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I move as an amendment that general debate be limited to two hours. I will say to my friend from California [Mr. PAGE] that there is one portion of this bill, that relating to the improvement of the Mississippi River, which is very important, and upon which a special committee was appointed. The members of that special committee desire to be heard, and two hours is certainly as little time as should be allowed for general debate.

Mr. PAGE. I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question then is upon the motion as modified, that general debate be limited to two hours.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Three speeches have been made in favor of this bill and none against. And now the gentleman in charge of the bill desires to put on the gag and cut off debate. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. PAGE. I hope not.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. DWIGHT. I move that the proposition to limit debate be amended so as to make it three hours. And I wish to state the reasons——

Mr. PAGE. Oh, no; no reasons.

Mr. DWIGHT. Let me state the reasons.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DWIGHT] proceeding?

Mr. DWIGHT. I wish to state that everybody knows that this is a very important bill. The river and harbor bill was passed last year without much discussion; it was vetoed and came back here and was not discussed at all. It comes here now——

Mr. PAGE. We can not allow all this debate.

Mr. HISCOCK. Everybody else has given a reason. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] gave a reason for his amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. DWIGHT] yield to me for a single question? Is it not true that the river and harbor bill which billed some of our friends into the wrong harbor last November, was a twenty-million bill, while this bill is only a seven-million bill? Certainly no one ought to be afraid of a moderate bill like this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DWIGHT] to amend the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] so that general debate upon the river and harber bill shall be limited to three hours.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 18, noes 98.

Mr. ANDERSON. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do not make that point.

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, I withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment is not agreed to, and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from California.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I raise the point that no quorum has voted.

Many MEMBERS. Too late! Too late!

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I was not too late. [Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the matter can be disposed of without trouble.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I wish to be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair wishes to ask the gentleman from New York if he made the point at the time that no quorum had voted on the proposition submitted to the House.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I did.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the point.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest, for the purpose of going on with business, that the time for general debate be limited to two hours and a half; and I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. PAGE. I will make no condition with the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDERSON. All right. I renew the point of "no quorum."

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. No mule-driver or stage-driver from California can crack the whip over this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from California, Mr. PAGE, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. VAN VOORHIS.

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to say——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado is out of order. The gentlemen will take their places as tellers.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether he will not be willing to limit general debate to this evening——

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HISCOCK. And that to-night members talk as long as they please.

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope that all sides will compromise upon that.

Give the whole of this evening to general debate, but let no vote be taken to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair begs to say that this debate is proceeding entirely by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAGE. I will consent that all general debate be limited to two hours and a half this evening.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope that the arrangement will be made.

Mr. WASHBURN. I rise to a point of order. I wish to inquire whether anything is in order at this time except the vote by tellers?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not, if any gentleman objects.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the vote by tellers. The gentlemen will take their places as tellers.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to limit the time for general debate in Committee of the Whole to three hours.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from New York will modify his motion so as to limit debate to two hours and a half.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No debate is in order.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 17, noes 134.

So the motion of Mr. DWIGHT was not agreed to.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I call for the yeas and nays. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] I withdraw that demand, and move an amendment to make the time two hours and a half.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. And let the debate be confined to this legislative day.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. On behalf of several gentlemen of the special committee on the improvement of the Mississippi, who desire some time to discuss that question, I hope that the proposition just made may be adopted. There are nine members of the committee who wish to be heard.

Mr. PAGE. At the request of the gentleman from Michigan I will accept that proposition——

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. PAGE. Provided the debate be had to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to understand the situation of this matter.

Mr. PAGE. That the debate be confined to two hours and a half, not to extend beyond this legislative day.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I can not assent to the last suggestion. The gentleman very well understands that if the debate is to be concluded to-night and the agreement be entered into that no vote is to be taken to-night, that means a vacation of these seats instantly. The question of the improvement of the Mississippi River is an important one, and I think that two hours and a half will not be an unreasonable time to give to this debate.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to have an arrangement by which whatever time may be allotted to members of the special committee on the improvements of the Mississippi River shall be divided between gentlemen of that committee holding opposing views.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks there will be no difficulty about that; but it is a matter which must be arranged in the Committee of the Whole, not in the House.

Mr. COX, of New York. I would like to know from the gentleman in charge of this bill whether it is the intention to go on and have these two hours and a half of debate to-night.

Mr. PAGE. To go on till the committee desires to rise.

Mr. COX, of New York. I would like to hear gentlemen who wish to speak upon the Mississippi River improvement, but I do not want the debate to go on to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is that general debate in Committee of the Whole be limited to two hours and a half.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KENNA moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. PAGE. I hope not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (having put the question). In the opinion of the Chair the motion is agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 116.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE], that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to make an inquiry of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. HISCOCK. How much time is to be allotted to the Mississippi River?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That arrangement must be made in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to go into committee.

Mr. ANDERSON. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 123, noes 2.

Mr. ANDERSON. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as tellers Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. PAGE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 148, noes 4.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CANNON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain rivers and harbors, and for other purposes. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE] was recognized, and the Chair would ask how much time he desires to occupy.

Mr. MCLANE, of Maryland. The rules give me an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. But debate has been limited to two hours and a half.

Mr. MCLANE, of Maryland. I have no condition to make with the Chair at all.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to inquire of the members of the Committee on Commerce how much of the two hours and a half——

Mr. MCLANE, of Maryland. It would give me great pleasure to yield all of my time to the Mississippi River Committee.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. How much time?

Mr. MCLANE, of Maryland. I have the floor, and it would give me great pleasure to surrender my time to the Mississippi River Committee. There are only two hours and a half, and I only take the floor in the interest of the bill, and will very cheerfully surrender my time as I have stated.

Mr. KENNA. Let them divide it.

Mr. MCLANE, of Maryland. I have already promised a portion of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], and after learning from him how much time he wants, and I know he speaks in support of the bill, I would be then willing to surrender my time to the committee. I have been appealed to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to know if I would give way in order he might move the committee rise. We might have the two hours and a half of debate to-morrow.

Mr. DUNN. They will filibuster.

Mr. MCLANE, of Maryland. I ask the attention of my friend in front of me and of friends of the bill generally. We have two hours and a half for debate, and there is a general expression of desire those two hours and a half of debate shall proceed to-morrow, in order that the House may be full. This suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan has been renewed by the gentleman from New York, and for one I think it is entirely reasonable. I do not think that gentlemen who address the committee can have any satisfaction in two hours and a half of debate to-night. I would therefore yield with pleasure to the motion to rise, and I will give what time the gentleman from Missouri on my left wants, and the rest I will surrender to the chairman of the Committee on the Mississippi River, if that is agreeable all around.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman from Maryland will yield to me.

Mr. MCLANE, of Maryland. I will hear you, but do not yield the floor.

Mr. COX, of New York. I simply want to carry out a suggestion.

Mr. PAGE. What is it?

Mr. COX, of New York. The proposition of my friend from Maryland is this: Inasmuch as we desire some careful, sedate debate of this Mississippi question, and two hours and a half are reserved for that, I think it would be wise, prudent, and fair to this bill in its best feature to let this debate go over until to-morrow, and if you please meet at an earlier hour. I myself would like to have spoken, but I am cut off; I can not answer even what has been said. If the gentleman will permit me, therefore, I will move the committee rise.

Several MEMBERS. Say until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. COX, of New York. You will not be here.

Mr. KENNA. With the permission of the gentleman from New York, I desire to ask a question. I know what his answer will be, and I mean no reflection by it.

Mr. COX, of New York. I wanted to be heard with reference to that part of the bill relating to the Mississippi question.

Mr. KENNA. I am very willing as one of the friends of this bill that the gentleman shall have the opportunity he desires——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield the floor?

Mr. MCLANE, of Maryland. I will yield to the gentleman from West Virginia for a suggestion.

Mr. KENNA. In the moment yielded to me by the gentleman from Maryland I only want to say, as one of the friends of this bill, that I am very willing that this debate should go over until to-morrow with the understanding that this bill is to be treated at that time on its merits, and that there shall be no filibustering to delay it. With that understanding I have no objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TALBOTT. Let me say to the committee, with the consent of my colleague, and I believe that he will accede to my suggestion, that since it is well known to all that only four days of this session remain, if this bill is to become a law we had just as well proceed to its consideration, or at least conclude the debate on it to-night; and I make the appeal to him, he having charge of the floor, that he will not yield to any motion, but go on with the discussion, in view of the short time remaining of this session, until the debate is concluded, and then we can come to a vote in the morning on the bill.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I am very sorry it is not in my power to come to an understanding in reference to this discussion.

Mr. BELFORD. Will the gentleman from Maryland allow a suggestion at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield?

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. BELFORD. Only for a question.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. For what purpose?

Mr. BELFORD. I wish to make a suggestion with reference to the bill, that we carry over the discussion until to-morrow, and have a fair, honest discussion of it on its merits.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I am just trying to make such an arrangement.

Mr. TALBOTT. What is said on this debate with reference to the bill to-night can be seen in print to-morrow morning.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is entitled to the floor; but the Chair will recognize no one until the committee is in order.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Will my friend from Maryland allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I will hear the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It is only in reference to this matter of the debate on this bill. The time, as all gentlemen understand, has been fixed at two hours and a half. Debate by order of the House has been limited to that time, as we all know. Now, any debate upon the substantial parts of the bill, to be of any weight or of any use, should be of course made in the presence of the House. I would like to say something myself upon the item in reference to the Mississippi River. I have been commissioned with other gentlemen to go there and make an investigation, and have given the matter some attention But I should not be willing to make suggestions to empty chairs. And if we are to be forced to go on here to-night, without coming to a vote, as it is understood there will be no vote to-night, gentlemen will understand, of course, that members will be very apt to seek their comfort and convenience and go home and let the debate run on. That, of course, would not be fair to the House or to the proper consideration of the bill. Therefore I think some such arrangement as has been suggested would be more satisfactory to all the members of the House. Some gentleman here in the neighborhood says "print." Let me say in response that I have never printed since I have been a member of Congress, and the presumption is that I never shall. I only want to say now in the interest of a proper consideration of this bill that the debate on it should go over until to-morrow, and that the motion to adjourn should be made.

Mr. KENNA. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me a question? Would he have any objection to a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I only wanted to see a proper time allowed for the discussion of the bill, but I think it not at all likely that members will be in attendance at the hour suggested by the gentleman from West Virginia. The members will most probably be at the different Departments, attending to that character of work, and will not be here in time.

Mr. KENNA. We have but four days of this session remaining, and I believe if we take the recess until 10 o'clock the House will be here to listen to this discussion. The friends of the bill will certainly be here.

Mr. McCOOK. Not before the usual hour of meeting.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield the floor?

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I am consuming my time very unprofitably.

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman from Maryland yield to me for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Maryland if he yields to the gentleman from California?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. If the gentleman from Maryland will yield to me I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. Before yielding to the gentleman from Massachusetts or any other gentleman I prefer to yield to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PAGE. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Maryland yields to me I will ask unanimous consent that we may take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock. I do not care to make a motion that the committee now rise unless it will be with the understanding that we will take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. That must be done in the House.

Mr. KENNA. We can agree upon it in committee, and when we go back into the House the motion can then be made.

Mr. PAGE. I do not care to make the motion that the committee rise unless with that understanding.

Mr. KING. Say 9 o'clock.

Mr. PAGE. Ten o'clock will be as early as we can secure the attendance of members.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from California to the fact that there can be no agreement made in the committee to bind the House upon this subject.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. I am going to yield the floor to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, as I understand that he will make a motion that the committee do now rise with the intention that when we go into the House he will then move to take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. THOMAS. That is right.

Mr. McLANE, of Maryland. With that understanding I will yield.

Mr. PAGE. I will make the motion, but I do not know what the House may do.

Mr. BELFORD. I will object.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CANNON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7631) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the House take a recess until to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I hope the gentleman from California will not insist on that.

Mr. BELFORD. I want to be heard on this question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not debatable. The question is on the motion to take a recess.

The House divided: and there were—ayes 87, noes 13.

Mr. COBB and Mr. VAN VOORHIS. No quorum.

Mr. PEELLE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KENNA. I hope that will be voted down.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 71, noes 38.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Pending the announcement of the vote,

Mr. McCLURE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks on the river and harbor appropriation bill. [See Appendix.]

The result of the vote was then announced; and accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 28, 1883.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. SHERMAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no routine morning business, unless there are concurrent or other resolutions, the call for the ordinary morning business is gone through with.

Mr. VANCE. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 2504) to amend the act of August 5, 1882, making appropriations for the naval service, which was reported from the Naval Committee the other day. It will take but a moment to consider it. If there is any debate I will not press it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks for the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to make an observation.

Mr. MORGAN. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. As soon as Senators arrive in the Hall to take part in the discussion upon the pension bill, we wish to ask the Senate to take that bill up. I merely state this so that no Senator will go on with a bill that will be likely to take considerable time without bearing in mind the suggestion.

Mr. VEST. I think this bill will take but a very short time.

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

Mr. BUTLER. Then we will take it up by a majority. It is a bill of very great importance.

Mr. MORGAN. That is all right; you can do that.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is morning business through?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair called through the order of morning business, but if there is morning business to be presented the Chair will receive it. The Chair will recognize the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] after the formal business is through.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FAIR presented a memorial of the Legislature of Nevada; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint memorial and resolution relative to establishing a mail-route from Hawthorne to Mount Cora, in the State of Nevada.

Whereas the population at and in the immediate vicinity of Mount Cora, in Esmeralda County, Nevada (distant twelve miles from Hawthorne, in said county, the place of the nearest post-office to said Mount Cora), is now about one hundred, and is rapidly increasing; and

Whereas there have been rich and valuable mines of gold and silver developed at and near said Mount Cora, giving evidence of permanency and continued necessity for mail facilities: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to urge upon the Post-Office Department the necessity of establishing a tri-weekly mail-route from Hawthorne to Mount Cora, in Esmeralda County, Nevada, and a post-office at said Mount Cora, at the earliest practicable time, to meet the growing requirements of the people of Mount Cora and vicinity.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to forward to the Post-Office Department at Washington city and to each of our Senators and Representative in Congress a certified copy of the foregoing memorial and resolution.

Passed January 22, 1883.

STATE OF NEVADA,
Department of State, ss:

I, John M. Dormer, secretary of state of the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true, full, and correct copy of the original on file in my office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of State. Done at office, in Carson City, Nevada, this 19th day of January, A. D. 1883.

[SEAL.] JOHN M. DORMER, Secretary of State,
By J. H. MARSHALL, Deputy.

Mr. FAIR also presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Nevada; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Assembly joint resolution relative to a weekly mail from Elko, Elko County, Nevada, to Lamoille Valley, in said county and State.

Whereas Lamoille Valley is one of the largest, most populous, and most important precincts in Elko County, polling at the last election nearly one hundred votes with a fair prospect of doubling it at the next election; and

Whereas said valley is situated about twenty miles southeast of Elko, the county seat, and that there is now no mail facilities whatever for the accommodation of the people between the said Lamoille Valley and the county seat and the Central Pacific Railroad running through said county; and

Whereas the growing business between the agricultural portions of said county and the balance of said county and of the State are not sufficiently accommodated by the present postal communications: Therefore,

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That our Senators be instructed and our Representatives be requested to urge to the best of their ability the passage of an act of Congress authorizing the transportation of a weekly mail from the town of Elko, Elko County, Nevada, to the said Lamoille Valley, Elko County, Nevada.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor of the State of Nevada be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to forward to the Postmaster-General at Washington, District of Columbia, and to each of our Senators and Representative in the House of Representatives a copy of the above resolutions.

Passed January 15, 1883.

STATE OF NEVADA,
Department of State, ss:

I, John M. Dormer, secretary of state of the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true, full, and correct copy of the original on file in my office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of State. Done at office, in Carson City, Nevada, this 19th day of January, A. D. 1883.

[SEAL.] JOHN M. DORMER, Secretary of State,
By J. H. MARSHALL, Deputy.

Mr. FAIR also presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Nevada; which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The people of the State of Nevada, represented in senate and assembly, do memorialize the Congress of the United States as follows:

Your memorialists, representing the miners and producers of silver bullion in Nevada, earnestly request such change in the coinage laws as will permit the miners and producers of silver bullion to deposit the same at the United States mints and to receive full equivalent in 412½-grain dollars for the silver bullion deposited, free of charge. The price of silver bullion produced in Nevada is controlled and regulated altogether by the London quotations. The discount upon silver bullion at present quotations is 20.79 cents a fine ounce, or over 16 per cent. of the value. The present discount on the silver falls directly and only upon the producers. By a report of the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, dated April 28, 1882, it appears that the profit on the coinage of the standard silver dollar at all the coinage mints from the commencement of the coinage of the dollar, in July, 1878, to June 30, 1881, aggregates $10,081,496.31. This amount represents during the above period a loss to the producers only of the above amount. There can be no valid reason given for discriminating against the coinage of silver and in favor of gold, and we demand such change as will place the producers of both gold and silver on equal and exact terms.

Your memorialists therefore do hereby most respectfully urge such action on your part as will relieve the miner and thus revive a struggling industry, and as in duty bound they will ever pray.

Resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representative requested to use all honorable means to the end that such change be made in the coinage laws as will abate the hardships complained of.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to speedily transmit a copy of the foregoing to each of our Senators and Representative in Congress, and also to the governor of each State and Territory that is engaged in mining and producing silver bullion, with a request the same be presented to the Legislatures for joint appeals to Congress for the relief prayed for.

Passed February 10, 1883.

STATE OF NEVADA,
Department of State, ss:

I, John M. Dormer, secretary of state of the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true, full, and correct copy of the original on file in my office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of State. Done at office, in Carson City, Nevada, this 19th day of February, A. D. 1883.

[SEAL.] JOHN M. DORMER, Secretary of State,
By J. H. MARSHALL, Deputy.

Mr. FAIR also presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Nevada; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution in relation to artesian wells.

Whereas most of the arable lands in the State of Nevada are worthless in their present condition, owing to the dry seasons and great deficiency of water; and

Whereas a scarcity of water for irrigation greatly retards a large increase of population and permanent homes; and believing that water in great abundance may be had by sinking artesian wells, thereby bringing into market millions of acres of public lands equally productive as those of other portions of the United States; and

Whereas the Humboldt House Station in Humboldt County, in this State, is a magnificent exemplification of the fertility of our desert lands when irrigated: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate and assembly conjointly, That our Senators and Representative in Congress be requested to use all honorable means to secure an appropriation of $250,000 with which to pay for the expense incurred in digging such artesian wells.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to forward immediately to our Senators and Representative in Congress copies of this preamble and joint resolution.

Passed February 6, 1883.

STATE OF NEVADA,
Department of State, ss:

I, John M. Dormer, secretary of state of the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true, full, and correct copy of the original, passed February 6, 1883, on file in my office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of State. Done at office, in Carson City, Nevada, this 21st day of February, A. D. 1883.

[SEAL.] JOHN M. DORMER, Secretary of State,
By J. H. MARSHALL, Deputy.

Mr. FAIR also presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Nevada; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Assembly joint memorial and resolution to the Congress of the United States, relative to a national appropriation for improving the navigation of the Colorado River.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Nevada, respectfully represent, that—

Whereas the Colorado River is a portion of the boundary between the United States and Mexico, and its navigation in case of war would be of paramount importance in the protection of our territory and our people; and

Whereas it is now navigable to the junction of the Virgin and Colorado, at Rioville, during the higher stages of water; and

Whereas at the proportionately small outlay asked by your petitioners the said Colorado River could be made, by the removal of obstructions, navigable during all seasons of the year for light-tonnage craft of all kinds to a point thirty miles above Rioville, which is verified by the actual inspection of members of this body, and can be by any practical and unprejudiced engineer; and

Whereas there are on both sides of said river mines of gold, silver, copper, and other valuable metals, and in the interior large tracts of agricultural and grazing land along the course of said stream, between the points above named, which are now sparsely settled and unproductive owing to the cost and difficulties of transportation, and which would become valuable land if said stream were made navigable; and

Whereas the principal obstructions to the navigation of said stream lie between a point thirty miles above Rioville and Fort Yuma, and consist principally of rock and drifts and sand-bars which could be readily removed without any great expense as measured by the benefits to be derived; and

Whereas Nevada has never asked or ever received any aid toward improving the rivers in or bordering upon our State: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representative requested to use every honorable effort to secure from the General Government an appropriation of $125,000, to be used in improving the navigation of the Colorado River between Fort Yuma and a point thirty miles above Rioville, the junction of the Virgin and Colorado Rivers, under the proper management of competent engineers, for the purpose of making said stream permanently navigable between the points above named.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor of Nevada be requested to forward a copy of this resolution to the honorable the Secretary of the Interior, to each of our Senators and Representative in Congress, to the governor of California, the governor of Arizona, and the governor of Utah, requesting their hearty support and earnest co-operation in obtaining said appropriation for the benefit of each of the said States and Territories.

Passed January 25, 1883.

STATE OF NEVADA,
Department of State, ss:

I, John M. Dormer, secretary of state of the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true, full, and correct copy of the original on file in my office.

[SEAL.] JOHN M. DORMER, Secretary of State,
By J. H. MARSHALL, Deputy.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN THE SENATE, January 25, 1883.

Whereas great doubt and uncertainty prevails in many branches of industry throughout the country as to values, caused by reason of pending tariff legislation, which if long continued will bring distress and suffering upon the laboring classes and widespread disaster to the business interests involved: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the Commonwealth in General Assembly met, That we earnestly request our Senators and Members of Congress at Washington to use their influence to remedy the existing evils by the speedy adoption of such tariff legislation as will afford ample protection to American industry, and thereby restore confidence and prosperity to the general business industries of the country.

Chief Clerk of the Senate.

IN THE HOUSE, January 26, 1883.

The foregoing resolution concurred in.

P. GRAY MEEK,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Approved the 30th day of January, A. D. 1883.

ROBERT E. PATTISON.

Mr. MITCHELL also presented concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania; which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN THE SENATE, February 7, 1883.

Whereas the city of Philadelphia did, in the year 1866, cede to the Government of the United States of America all its former rights and title to certain land and water privileges located in the southern section thereof, known as League Island, together with such portion of the territory on the north bank of the water course separating said island from the city as said Government declared necessary for its purposes; and

Whereas, in consideration thereof, the said United States of America were to locate a naval station thereon for the construction and repair of vessels for naval purposes, it being distinctly understood by all parties therein concerned that a necessity existed for the erection of rolling-mills, founderies, &c., to prepare for the construction of vessels of steel or iron, said location having been determined by a board of officers, appointed for the purpose by order of the Navy Department, to be superior to any and all others upon the Atlantic coast; and

Whereas a board of naval officers has now been appointed to ascertain what navy-yards can best be dispensed with, and said board, in the discharge of its duty, propose to visit the city of Philadelphia on or about the 21st instant, and has expressed a desire to meet and consult with citizens interested in the sale or retention of the League Island navy-yard; and

Whereas it is of the utmost importance to the interests of the State of Pennsylvania that this navy-yard, located within easy reach of the great iron and coal-mines, rolling-mills, &c., and destined if continued to open up new fields for labor and the mineral production of said State, should not be disposed of but retained and improved to an extent which would make it, as intended at the time it was ceded to the Government, the great naval station of America: Therefore,

Be it resolved (if the house of representatives concur), That a committee to consist of three members of the senate and five of the house of representatives be appointed for the purpose of meeting said board of naval officers at such time as it may arrive in the city of Philadelphia, and take such action as they may deem proper to secure the retention of the navy-yard at League Island.

And be it further resolved, That the Senators of the United States from the State of Pennsylvania be, and they are hereby, instructed to use their utmost endeavors to prevent the closing of said navy-yard by the Government, and that the Representatives in Congress from the several districts of said State be, and they are hereby, earnestly requested to exert themselves to accomplish said purpose.

ROBERT E. PATTISON.

Mr. MITCHELL also presented concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania; which were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 22, 1883.

Resolved (if the senate concur), We cordially indorse the action of the House of Representatives of the United States in passing the bill for the increase of pensions for the soldiers of the Union who lost an arm or leg in the war for the preservation of the Union.

Resolved, That we respectfully request our Senators at Washington to advocate and vote for the passage of said bill through the Senate of the United States.

ROBERT E. PATTISON.

Mr. COKE presented three memorials of colored laborers in the cotton-fields, and growers and planters of cotton, residents of Walker, Montgomery, and Waller Counties, Texas, remonstrating against the imposition of any increased tax upon iron ties and bands used in baling cotton; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VEST presented a petition of Coffey Grange, No. 777, Patrons of Husbandry, of Bonanza, Caldwell County, Missouri, praying for the creation of the office of secretary of agriculture; which was ordered to lie on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had appointed as the conferees on the part of the House on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, Mr. WILLIAM D. KELLEY of Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAM MCKINLEY, Jr., of Ohio, Mr. DUDLEY C. HASKELL of Kansas, Mr. SAMUEL J. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, and Mr. JOHN G. CARLISLE of Kentucky.

The message also announced that the House insisted on its amendments to the bill (S. 1821) prescribing regulations for the Soldiers'

Home, located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. THOMAS J. HENDERSON of Illinois, Mr. ANSON G. MCCOOK of New York, and Mr. EDWARD S. BRAGG of Wisconsin, the managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7679) to establish certain post-routes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3832) to provide for the restoration to citizenship of such citizens of the United States as have become naturalized as subjects of Great Britain, to report it with the expression of opinion that it ought not to pass; and I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

FISH AND FISHERIES REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred a concurrent resolution for printing additional copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, have instructed me to report the same without amendment and to recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 10,000 additional copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1882 be printed, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House, 1,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and 500 copies for sale by the Public Printer at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereon added.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE SHACKELFORD.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 358) to provide for the publication of the memorial addresses delivered upon the life and character of Hon. John W. Shackelford, of North Carolina, have instructed me to report it without amendment, and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BINDING OF BOOKS FOR THE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2482) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1878, have directed me to report it without amendment, and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It amends the act by adding to the clause relating to the binding of books for the Departments of the Government, after the words "Congressional Library," the words, "nor to the library of the Navy Department;" so that it will read "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes, approved June 20, 1878, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding to the clause of said act relating to the binding of books for the Departments of the Government, after the words 'Congressional Library,' the following words: 'Nor to the library of the Patent Office, nor to the library of the Department of State, nor to the library of the Navy Department.'"

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALDRICH asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 2509) granting a pension to Emily Munroe; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 141) concerning the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. TABOR asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 142) providing for the participation by the Government in the national mining and industrial exposition to be held at Denver, Colorado; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENTS TO BILL.

Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. MILLER of California, and Mr. ROLLINS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That William H. Bennett have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate in the matter of his pension claim.

SILAS Q. HOWE.

Mr. VOORHEES. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to furnish to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives a copy of the engrossed bill (S. 565) for the relief of Silas Q. Howe, surviving partner of William T. Pate & Co., the same having passed the Senate February 13, 1882, and having been by the House of Representatives referred to the said committee July 15, 1882, said bill having been lost or mislaid since being so referred.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana whether the Senate should make its communication to a committee of the House.

Mr. VOORHEES. I had thought of that.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that it should be sent to the House.

Mr. VOORHEES. Perhaps that is so. The object is to replace as speedily as possible a copy of the engrossed bill which has been mislaid.

Mr. HOAR. I make no objection to any way the Senator prefers, but it strikes me that the correct method of proceeding would be that the Secretary be directed to send to the House a duplicate of the bill with the action of the Senate upon it.

Mr. VOORHEES. My object is to get the bill there as soon as possible. The House is in that crowded condition now that it might be some time before it could be taken from the table of the Speaker.

Mr. HOAR. It does not require that it shall go to the table of the House. If this was once there, I suppose the Ways and Means Committee would at once take possession of it without any action of the House.

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senator thinks that is best, I will accept his suggestion and just let it be communicated to the House of Representatives instead of the Ways and Means Committee. Let the resolution be read as modified in that way.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to furnish to the House of Representatives a duplicate of the engrossed bill (S. 565) for the relief of Silas Q. Howe, surviving partner of William T. Pate & Co., the same having passed the Senate February 13, 1882, and having been by the House of Representatives referred to the Committee on Ways and Means July 15, 1882, said bill having been lost or mislaid since being so referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire, if the morning business is through, to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1410.

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] has the floor, if there is no further morning business.

Mr. VANCE. I now move to take up Senate bill No. 2504.

Mr. GARLAND. I should like to have the message read that came from the House about the committee of conference and the revenue bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message has been sent for and will be here in a moment.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I want to have an executive session of a few minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message is now here. Does the Senator from Tennessee withdraw his motion while the Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives as requested by the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir.

INTERNAL-REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message of the House of Representatives will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 27, 1883.

Ordered, That Mr. KELLEY, Mr. MCKINLEY, Mr. HASKELL, Mr. RANDALL, and Mr. CARLISLE be the conferees on the part of the House on the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed last night to a conference upon this bill, and before I give my reasons for it I will ask the Secretary to read from the RECORD of this morning, on page 31, the portion I have marked.

Mr. VANCE. What has become of my right to the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina had the right to the floor, but this matter relating to the conference committee was laid before the Senate. The Chair thinks the Senator from North Carolina has the right to the floor.

Mr. VANCE. I understand the Senator from Arkansas to ask that the message from the House be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was done. The Chair did not suppose it would lead to debate.

Mr. GARLAND. I asked that the message be read, and I also ask that what I have sent to the desk be read, in order to make them the basis of my motion, because it is an important matter. After that is read I will ask but a short time in which to give my reasons for making the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless the Senator from North Carolina yields the floor he has the floor.

Mr. VANCE. These matters of prime importance can always get the right of way, of course; and as I have the floor I will move to take up the bill which I indicated, being a bill providing for cadets at the Naval Academy, just as was done in the case of the West Point Academy, placing the cadets of the two institutions on the same footing.

Mr. MORGAN. If the morning business is closed, I call for the regular order.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to make a motion.

Mr. GARLAND. Has my motion to reconsider been entered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair decides that the Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. GARLAND. He had the floor and yielded it to me, and I made my motion. Has the motion been entered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has he yielded?

Mr. VANCE. I yielded for the purpose of the Senator from Arkansas making the motion; I did not yield for action on it.

Mr. GARLAND. The motion is entered, then?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. SHERMAN. If entered it ought to be immediately considered.

Mr. ALDRICH. Of course.

Mr. SHERMAN. That motion ought to be immediately considered, unless it is intended to arrest the whole action of the Senate. I take it that pending a motion to reconsider the committee of conference would not be justified in meeting.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to proceed to the consideration of the motion.

Mr. GARLAND. That is just what I was going to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from North Carolina yielded the floor for the purpose of a reconsideration he yielded it altogether.

Mr. BLAIR. I object to this yielding the floor for that purpose. I addressed the Chair long since, and I desired the floor for the purpose of making a motion to postpone the Calendar, to be followed by a motion to take up the pension bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to a yielding of the floor for any special purpose. It can not be yielded except for a general purpose, and when a motion to reconsider is made it is then before the Senate and ought to be acted upon.

Mr. HARRIS. The objection certainly comes too late. After the floor has been yielded and the Senator from Arkansas has entered his motion the objection is entirely too late so far as that motion is concerned.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rose immediately upon the motion being made, and called the attention of the Senate to the fact that if the motion was pending it ought at once to be decided. I have not been derelict.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from North Carolina yielded the floor for that purpose he yielded it altogether.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the motion to reconsider is pending it is all right.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask the Secretary to read what I have sent to the desk.

Mr. BLAIR, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is it?

Mr. BLAIR. When the Senator from North Carolina first rose, when it was stated by the Chair that the morning business was closed, he said he rose for the purpose of moving to take up a bill. I thereupon rose and objected, and stated that I desired to move to postpone the Calendar for the purpose of taking up the pension bill, according to the understanding last night. Then morning business intervened, and the Senator took his seat. A variety of morning business was transacted. After that was transacted the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] indicated his purpose to go on with the pension bill, postponing the Calendar. I also myself rose. The Senator from North Carolina has not the floor, unless he holds it by virtue of his rising to make the motion originally. Much business has been transacted meanwhile——

Mr. HARRIS. The question of order is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question of order is not debatable.

Mr. BLAIR. I am stating the facts, and upon those facts I ask if the Senator from North Carolina has the floor to make the motion or to yield it to the Senator from Arkansas?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the facts as they occurred. The Chair asked for the presentation of memorials, for all the ordinary morning business. There was no morning business, as Senators were not present; they were delayed and came in afterward. Then the Senator from North Carolina rose and asked to take up a bill. The Chair informed him that he must wait until the morning business was over. When that was concluded the Chair recognized him to move to take up his bill. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] antagonized that by a motion to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business; but the Senator from North Carolina had the right to have a vote upon taking up the bill. He then yielded the floor to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] and the Senator from Arkansas made his motion to reconsider. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BLAIR. Upon the statement of the facts by the Chair how could the Senator from North Carolina have the floor when these other purposes had been indicated?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Because the Chair recognized him.

Mr. BLAIR. How could he have the floor to yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to reconsider the vote by which the conferees were appointed on the revenue bill.

Mr. GARLAND. Now I ask the Secretary to read what I have sent to the desk.

Mr. INGALLS. I rise to a question of order. The parliamentary rule is that it is not in order to refer to particular words that have been spoken in debate or particular acts of the other House upon pending measures between the two. The reason of that is obvious, because if it is done difficulties may arise that can not be satisfactorily adjusted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no such question before the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I raise it. If the Chair will inspect what the Senator from Arkansas desires to have read, he will see that it is the action of the House of Representatives upon a measure that is now pending between the House and the Senate, and which was not communicated to us in the regular channel. While I think that the action of the House is disingenuous and that under the action of the House a full and free conference can not be had, yet I must say that under the parliamentary law it is not in order to have extracts from the RECORD read as a basis for or in support of a motion to reconsider. I ask the Chair to inspect the portion of the RECORD that the Senator from Arkansas desires to have read.

Mr. GARLAND. What I have requested to have read is from the official record of this Congress kept here by an express rule of Congress for the purpose of informing Congress, and informing the public what is being done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not see any objection to reading the last resolution in the series sent up.

Mr. GARLAND. That is what I want read. I ask the Secretary to read it.

Mr. INGALLS. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that what is publicly done and reported, and which can be made the basis of a reconsideration, there is no objection to reading.

Mr. INGALLS. The Chair is aware of the parliamentary rule, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is aware of that; but if a resolution is adopted in the House, it then becomes part of the public records. This is simply a resolution they have adopted, which may be read here.

Mr. BAYARD. Inasmuch as there is a question of order as to reading from the RECORD the proceedings of the House of Representatives today, I would submit that the reason of the rule that forbids allusion to matters pending in the other House forbids allusion to debates at the same session or during the same Congress. The whole object of that is to insure the absolute independence of each House from any influence of the other. That is the intent, so that by general parliamentary law as well as by the rules of this body allusion to the possible or probable action of the Executive is improper and grossly out of order. So it is not allowable to cite the action of the other House for the purpose of influencing the action of the Senate, unless that action comes to us by the usual regular methods of communication, and then we may consider what we may do; but we are not at liberty to cite the debates or the arguments used in the other branch of the Legislature for the purpose of affecting our action in this body.

The meaning of the law is the preservation of the independence of each branch unaffected by that which led to the action of the other. Up to this time no action of the House of Representatives has been communicated to the Senate; there is nothing before the Senate that we can take up and act upon. There is no resolution of the House before us. Therefore, I submit that it is not in order that the Journal of the House or the record of its proceedings shall be read to affect the action of the Senate upon something not yet before us.

Mr. GARLAND. The honorable Senator from Delaware is entirely mistaken——

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to know if the motion to reconsider is now before the Senate?

Mr. GARLAND. Have I not the floor, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Delaware is entirely mistaken. It has not been five minutes since I had read a message from the House of Representatives brought in here by its Clerk, announcing its committee of conference, which was withheld last night from us, and upon that, together with the official report of their proceedings, I make the motion to reconsider.

I make the motion to reconsider in good faith, for I voted for the conference last night believing that we had in our possession all that the House had done in regard to this matter. Now it turns out from the official RECORD that practically a fraud has been committed upon the Senate; I do not say an intentional fraud, but I say practically it has been so, for the gist of the House proceedings was omitted last night in its message to the Senate.

By this proceeding their committee of conference is handicapped in advance in reference to the power of the Senate to orignate the bill that passed. They are told to bring back their construction of the matter, as the House now gives them its version of our power. Then what are you to have a free conference about? There is the point I make. The parliamentary proceeding is a free and open conference upon which all the parliamentary writers agree in England and in this country, where these questions are discussed viva voce, freely and openly, for the purpose of a free conference, not for the purpose of a prejudged and handicapped consideration by one House or the other. The House of Representatives has played Hamlet with the part of Hamlet left out, so far as the Senate is concerned on this occasion. We send out our conferees to meet theirs on a question already prejudged by them.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GARLAND. Certainly.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senate has proceeded, the Senator said just now, to vote to meet the conferees of the House in what upon its face of the proceeding is a free conference.

Mr. GARLAND. A free conference with this exception, I must say to the Senator——

Mr. BAYARD. I wish merely to ask a question.

Mr. GARLAND. A report for a free conference from the House is generally accompanied with the names of their committee, which they did not send us last night.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senate having appointed a committee of conference to meet the conferees of the House, if they find immediately on meeting that the conferees on the part of the House are affected by what he has termed a restriction or handicap or whatever may be the name he gives it, would it not be the duty at once of the Senate conferees to report to the Senate the fact that what they supposed on the face of the House message was a free conference was in fact not a free conference?

Mr. GARLAND. Now, the Senator has asked the very question that I was coming to, and I wish the Senate to pay attention to it, for it is with no purpose of obstruction that I am making the motion, for I have not obstructed this bill during the forty days and nights it has occupied the Senate, like the flood.

We have no right to send a committee out except for a free conference. The purpose of my motion to reconsider is to say to that committee, "You shall not confer upon a proposition that was already prejudged before you were appointed." We can not now instruct that committee, because it has gone beyond that point, but we can by this motion to reconsider get the matter back into our hands and then act upon it as we should have acted if we had had this information before us yesterday as to what the House had done. I say, Mr. President, that my action, my vote upon appointing this committee of conference, would have been quite different had I known of this proceeding. I would not have voted to refer this matter to a conference last evening had I known that this second resolution was in the action of the House, and I undertake to say, without knowing, that other Senators are probably in the same situation.

The books before me say that a full and free conference is a conference in which every question is discussed freely, openly, and frankly, as among gentlemen, as the saying is; but here the very question at the origin, the power of the Senate, is denied by the House, and we were not informed of that. I wish to have the vote reconsidered, and the proposition brought fairly before the Senate whether we shall indulge in this play of putting up a cob-house for the purpose of having it knocked down. When the motion to reconsider is acted on I shall take the position then that the Senate can not confer upon this matter under such circumstances.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is really not debatable, though it has been debated.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely wish to say for myself, and it sustains the views of the Senator from Arkansas, that I have no doubt whatever that the committee appointed by the Senate last night was a committee of conference which meant a free conference, and if they should find themselves face to face with a committee that were not free it would be the duty of the Senate committee instantly to withdraw and come back and tell the Senate.

Mr. GARLAND. Now, will the Senator yield to me for one moment? What he proposes is that we take action backward. Had we known the full action of the House we could not have consistently indulged in the course we agreed to follow. Therefore, practically, I say a fraud has been committed on the Senate, and we should recall and retract it.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator differs with me only in this respect: I had rather not assume or presume irregularity on the part of the House, nor have I any desire to reflect upon that body in the least degree; but I do propose that the Senate shall maintain not only its dignity in every respect, but that the Senate shall maintain the truth and the true meaning of its own action of last night. There was no other suggestion before the Senate last night than that we were to appoint a committee of conference—a free conference. If when we come to confer we shall meet in conference a set of conferees who are not free, it is not the conference that the Senate contemplated, and therefore it can not be held. That I take for granted will be the result.

Under the rules of the Senate we have no knowledge communicated to us by the House of its action except its message. What was that message? It was a message inviting the Senate to appoint a party of conferees without restriction, without instruction on their part. That was the result. That is all the Senate knows.

Now, the question comes in whether or not you can inform the Senate by means other than the message of the House that something else might be intended or might be implied or might hereafter be urged which would tend to change a free conference into a restricted conference, a limited conference, a shackled conference, which was not the object of the Senate. While I am quite as strict as the Senator from Arkansas is or would wish to be on this subject, I do not believe that according to the rules we should take up the RECORD to discover there whatever has been said in debate or what has been said by action elsewhere of which we have not been informed.

This Senate intended a free conference on this bill, and the five Senators appointed in my judgment have no right to attend any other than a free conference; and should they find themselves in an association with a committee of conference on the part of the House who are bound by something else than the House has informed us of, it will be clearly our duty to return to the Senate, and not to accept a restricted conference or to act upon it, when we were appointed only upon a general and free conference.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I do not desire that the time shall be wasted about what I conceive to be a very unimportant matter, and one with which we have nothing to do. I therefore move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will first decide the point of order. The point of order was presented by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] that the resolution which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] desired to have read, passed in the House, was not proper to be read here. At first blush, not having examined the question with any care, the Chair thought the point of order was not well taken; but on reflection he believes it is well taken. Jefferson in his manual says this:

> It is a breach of order in debate to notice what has been said on the same subject in the other house, or the particular votes or majorities on it there; because the opinion of each house should be left to its own independency, not to be influenced by the proceedings of the other; and the quoting them might beget reflections leaning to a misunderstanding between the two houses. (8 Grey, 22.)

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MORRILL. Is not my motion in order? I moved to lay the whole subject on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order was raised about the reading before the Senator from Vermont had the floor to make that motion.

Mr. MORRILL. But I move to lay the appeal, as well, on the table.

Mr. GARLAND. But I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order was made before anything else. That was the question before the Senator from Vermont could make his motion to lay on the table.

Mr. GARLAND. I have appealed from the decision of this point of order in good faith, and I will ask the Senate to decide it.

Mr. SHERMAN. But a motion to lay on the table is made; and I do not think even the Chair would be at liberty to make a decision pending that motion.

Mr. GARLAND. The Chair before receiving that motion ruled upon the point of order and I have appealed from the decision.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw any objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas raised the point of order. The Senator from Arkansas was on his feet asking to have read a resolution of the House of Representatives. Then the Senator from Kansas raised the point of order, and the Senator from Arkansas was occupying the floor until that point of order was decided. It seems to the Chair that he has the floor still.

Mr. HOAR. I do not object to the floor being awarded to the Senator again, but when the point of order is raised and the Chair rules upon it and an appeal is submitted, that certainly takes the Senator from the floor as to his original right to the floor. I do not object to his going on, however.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator as usual has got it all wrong. I appealed and had the floor and stated that I took the floor on the appeal.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair has not awarded the floor to the Senator on the appeal.

Mr. GARLAND. I think the Chair would have to do it because I rose in order.

Mr. HOAR. Go on.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, there is not a syllable in the extract that has been read from the Manual by the Chair that touches the question here. I am not asking to have read here anything that was said by any member of the House in debate, but I am asking to have read from the official RECORD, which has been made official by act of Congress, to which we appeal every day for what occurs in Congress with the same certainty of correctness that we would appeal to the Journals that are written in manuscript by our clerks and which we move to have corrected, to which we call the attention of the Senate as a privileged question——

Mr. HOAR. I call the Senator to order under the thirty-sixth rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The thirty-sixth rule?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

36. If any Senator, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall, or any Senator may, call him to order; and when a Senator shall be so called to order, he shall sit down, and shall not proceed without leave of the Senate, which leave, if granted, shall be upon motion that he be allowed to proceed in order; which motion shall then be in order and be determined without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the point?

Mr. HOAR. The Chair has ruled that the Senator in having read the proceedings of the House was transgressing the rules of the Senate. Now, I certainly hope he will have leave to proceed. When the Senator asserts that the Chair has got to give him the floor without objection, I think it is proper to remind him of the rule.

Mr. GARLAND. I stated that the Chair would have to give me the floor because I was in order, just as I would have said the Chair was put there for the purpose of enforcing the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has been called to order. Of course the Senator can not refer to anything done in the House. The question is, Shall he have leave to proceed in order? Is there objection?

Mr. GARLAND. I have not referred to anything done in the House yet. I have been trying to get permission to do it.

Mr. BUTLER. Has not the Senator a right to read from debates in the RECORD?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir. That is the question the Chair has just decided.

Mr. GARLAND. That is the question which is being considered, but there is no trouble about it, if the Senator from South Carolina pleases. It is all in order, as I shall show. This is no new thing.

I have asked the Senate to listen to the reading of what has transpired as printed in the official RECORD of the two bodies of Congress. I am not reading it, and do not intend to, till the point is decided; but I say that the rule in Jefferson's Manual as read by the Chair does not affect this question, because that rule was handed down to us from the Parliament of England and was not made in reference to any official record or any official register whatever. It was made with a view, as the general rule states there and as was stated by the Senator from Delaware very aptly, to prevent influence being imported from one House to the other. But here I propose to show from the official record that is now here for the purpose of informing the two bodies of what is going on, that the Senate of the United States has been called upon to do something when the whole and entire reason for doing that thing has not been given to the Senate. I say that it is perfectly in order to read this entire record of proceedings that occurred in the House of Representatives or Senate, under the rule that makes this the official record or register of these two bodies.

It is made manifest here that the Senate has been led, inadvertently, if you please, or practically to permit a fraud in appointing its committee of conference on a subject that had already been prejudged by the other House. That is the question I bring before the Senate. It will be too late to wait, as the Senator from Delaware proposes and seems to think it can be done, till our committee of conference go and say "We are without instructions;" and finding those from the other House are bound by instructions, say "This is not the feast we have been invited to, and, therefore, we will take up our hats and walk out." That is not respectable foolishness; that is not first-class nonsense, because it is to be presumed when the Senate acted on this matter it acted on every fact that had transpired.

We have two messages from the House, first one saying that they disagreed to our amendments and asked for a conference, then a message this morning announcing the names of their committeemen; but not yet have we been told just exactly what transpired in order to get that conference in the House, and what we are asked to consider and have a conference upon. Now, I say the ruling of the Chair, with the utmost respect, does not affect this question. This question is upon the right to read from the official record of Congress, a record made official long since the time Jefferson wrote his manual, and no words in that rule apply to any such document as this, and, in my opinion, the rule does not affect proceedings of this character.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the rule in Jefferson's Manual, page 264 of the book of rules of the Senate, is that—

Neither house can exercise any authority over a member or officer of the other, but should complain to the house of which he is, and leave the punishment to them.

Suppose one of our members in the Senate should go to the House of Representatives and complaint should be urged against him there of impropriety of conduct before that body and the House should proceed to deal with him, and he should return to his own body this morning and ask that the Senate should take cognizance of the treatment he had received there, would it be in order for him to have read before this body the proceedings of that House in dealing with him? No man will deny that, I presume, and yet if that would be in order this is in order. Whatever official action has taken place in either House which affects the conduct of the other is a subject of proper consideration here; and inasmuch as the House of Representatives does not communicate it to us we have the only other resource left to us, which is to send a resolution of inquiry to that House as to what has been done or to receive that information from the official channel, the RECORD, printed by authority of law by the Government of the United States. It can not be that the Senate of the United States is in such a prone and imbecile condition as that it can not ascertain, except at the pleasure of the House, what action has been taken by that body which may affect the action of this body.

It has been well stated by the Senator from Arkansas that if this resolution had been known to the Senate yesterday the vote of the Senate would have been quite different in respect to this conference. Our jurisdiction at least would have gone along with our conference and our authority to the conferees to withdraw from that conference in the event that they found themselves embarrassed by the resolution of the House so that the conference could not be full and free. A conference between the two Houses that is not a full and a free conference is simply a fraud and a sham, and we may characterize it as we will. I for one shall never surrender the independence of this body so far as my vote is concerned by yielding to the other House the right to send to us a committee of conference instructed by them when we appear to be cut off from the opportunity of finding out what the instructions are and they withhold the instructions from us.

The honorable Senator from Delaware says that the Senate need not be alarmed; that when the conferees meet if the Senate's representatives find that they are not meeting other conferees from the House who are free to act, free to consult with them upon every subject connected with this bill, it will be their duty to return to the Senate and make report. Sir, that will be their duty, but they will never do it. That committee will never return to this body to make that report; they will withhold it. More than that, sir, the Senate of the United States has no right to abdicate into the hands of one of its committees or into the hands of any five gentlemen the action that it ought to take for itself. While I am willing to trust the gentleman who made that statement that he will honorably do all that is required to be done, yet as a Senator of the United States it is a part of my right to vote upon instructions to him as to what he shall do, and not what his honor may prompt him to do. He, sir, is the authorized agent of this body and not of himself when he gets upon that committee; he has no right to interpolate his own private views either to the assistance or to the overthrow of the action the Senate has taken or may be inclined to take.

This, sir, is no small matter; this is no trivial affair. It is something that merits the consideration of this great body, because we are giving up here, it appears, powers vested in us by the Constitution, and doing it to-day we shall convert ourselves in some future time again into a mob for the purpose of being led by party leaders. When we act here without rules, without law, and aside from the Constitution we are no more than a mob. We ought to conform our action under all circumstances, especially upon great occasions like this, to the rules of order and of parliamentary procedure.

I can not conceive how it can be possible that the House of Representatives, by stealth and by concealment, can give instructions to its committee which it withholds from us, and yet that there is some law in this country, some rule of parliamentary procedure, which prevents us from access to the real facts of the transaction.

Are the Houses of the United States Congress to deal with each other in the manner that has been done in the last twenty-four hours? Are we to give secret instruction to our conferees which no man in the House can rise upon that floor and demand shall be read for the information of that body, and send them into conference, apparently a free and an open conference, when in fact it is one that is narrowed down to certain inquiries, and that certain matters they are prohibited from inquiring into at all? Can the House of Representatives withhold its action upon the important question of the constitutional powers of the Senate, and then send to us as if they were acting in good faith a resolution inviting us to a conference upon a bill which they have declared in their own resolution is an unconstitutional invasion of their rights? Is the Senate of the United States to be humiliated to that low degree when it must enter upon a conference with the House of Representatives as an act of courtesy upon a bill which that House has solemnly resolved that the Senate has no constitutional right to enact; and not so only, but refusing to send that resolution to us? Are we the representatives of the sovereign States of the Union in the Senate of the United States, and can we be baffled and tampered with and paltered with in this manner by the other House?

Sir, there may be some pressure of party demand which will require us to stultify ourselves in this way; but whether the Senate has the power to look to the RECORD to see the facts or not, the people of the United States will be astounded to know that we have some manner of procedure here which compels us not to know what everybody in the world is cognizant of but us. Never was the doctrine of estoppel carried to this extent before.

Sir, I concur with the Senator from Arkansas that that which has been read as the foundation of the decision of the Chair does not in the slightest degree touch this question. It has no relevancy to it. With the most profound respect for the Chair, for his learning and his ability, I must say that the first ruling of the Chair upon this question strikes my mind as being incontrovertibly true.

It is a breach of order in debate to notice what has been said on the same subject in the other house, or the particular votes or majorities on it there.

Nothing in the resolution of the Senator from Arkansas touches either of these questions. He recites nothing that was said in debate; he recites no particular vote or votes of the majority or the debates that may have been held there upon the resolution. The reason assigned by the parliamentarian is this:

Because the opinion of each house should be left to its own independency, not to be influenced by the proceedings of the other; and the quoting them might beget reflections leading to a misunderstanding between the two houses.

Why, sir, you might as well hold that you can not consider a bill that comes from the House, because in doing so you are obliged to consider something that the other House has done. Their action is final when it reaches us. This action is final in the House now, and beyond all power even of review, because I believe a motion to reconsider and to lay that motion on the table was adopted in that House. It is entirely beyond the reach of the House now to correct its action, and we are to be left here to act upon a grave question like this in darkness, which has been manufactured for the purpose of concealing the truth; we are to be inveigled and led in the thralls into a conference where the House itself has concealed the pith and substance of its own action.

Sir, the respect of the Senate of the United States will not bear this tax. Great and august as this body is and has always been, it will not bear the tax. There is no occasion for resorting to this extreme method of deception and gag law for the purpose of keeping down the action of this body upon the truth as it exists. Let the truth come to light. Let those hide it whose deeds are evil and whose thoughts are against the public welfare. Let those participate in this dark scheme of perversion and fraud who feel that the right way to treat the American people is to deceive and to wrong them. I will not do it, sir.

I believe that the decision of the honorable President of the Senate upon this proposition is not such law as we can vote upon our records for the government of this body in the future, for if it is we willingly tie our own hands and victimize ourselves, placing all of our constitutional powers at the will and pleasure of the other House, so that they may cheat and defraud us as they please.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I am not about to contribute anything to the prevention of a large reduction of taxation at the present session of Congress. I merely say that the Senate have often, as the RECORD will show, instructed a committee of conference, and it never has been returned or rejected by the House whenever the Senate has done so.

Mr. MORGAN. Allow me to make an inquiry of the Senator from Vermont? I wish to know from the Senator whether he knew of this action of the House yesterday when he moved for this committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I did not.

Mr. MORGAN. The chairman of our committee did not know it.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not regard it as of any consequence whatever. The House has the right to instruct its committee, and so has the Senate. Whenever the Senate has done so heretofore no objection has been made on the part of the House, and no conference report has been rejected on that account.

Now, Mr. President, I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. HARRIS. What becomes of the appeal?

Mr. MORRILL. Well, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. GARLAND. Before that is done I——

Mr. SHERMAN. Laying the whole subject on the table takes the appeal to the table.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Vermont has said something about the practice in this matter.

Mr. MORRILL. It has been often done.

Mr. GARLAND. That the Senate may not be unadvised about this matter I wish to say—there is no impropriety in reading this—that as fine a parliamentarian as the Senator's colleague was overruled on this very point; and I ask the Secretary to read the fact from the book I send to the desk.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is the motion to lay on the table debatable?

Mr. MORRILL. I made my motion for the purpose of stopping further debate.

Mr. GARLAND. Let that be read to put this matter right.

Mr. MORRILL. No; that would require me to read a further extract from the Journal to show that what I said is true. I do not desire to consume any more time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects to the reading. The question is on laying the appeal on the table.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the Senator from Vermont persist in this motion just at this time?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. To cut off any information on the subject whatever?

Mr. MORRILL. I think it has been sufficiently discussed.

Mr. BUTLER. I must say that it is a very extraordinary proposition for a Senator of his experience to make in this body at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. GARLAND and Mr. MORGAN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY].

Mr. McDILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR]. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. VEST (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. VANCE. My colleague [Mr. RANSOM] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN].

Mr. CALL. I wish to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Florida] with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. FRYE. My colleague [Mr. HALE] is necessarily absent on a conference committee, as is also the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. They are paired.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES].

Mr. WINDOM (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS]. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Anthony,	Frye,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Blair,	Harrison,	Lapham,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hawley,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Conger,	Hill,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sherman,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Tabor.

NAYS—26.

Barrow,	Garland,	Jackson,	Slater,
Bayard,	George,	Jonas,	Vance,
Brown,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Call,	Groome,	Morgan,	Walker,
Camden,	Grover,	Pendleton,	Williams.
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Pugh,
Coke,	Harris,	Saulsbury,

ABSENT—26.

Allison,	Farley,	Logan,	Ransom,
Beck,	Ferry,	McDill,	Saunders,
Butler,	Hale,	McPherson,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Pa.,	Johnston,	Mahone,	Vest,
Davis of Ill.,	Jones of Florida,	Miller of Cal.,	Windom.
Davis of W. Va.,	Jones of Nevada,	Mitchell,
Fair,	Lamar,	Plumb,

So the Senate refused to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I offer the following resolution——

Mr. GARLAND. The question is on the appeal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir; the question is on the appeal. The resolution of the Senator from Delaware can not be in order during the pendency of this appeal.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall offer it when it is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the appeal from the decision of the Chair. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. HOAR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I do not quite like the attitude of this affair from what we hear outside; but I am bound to say that I think the judgment of the Chair is correct. Each House, I think, has the right to instruct any of its committees, and it is not bound as a matter of parliamentary law to communicate to the other House the instruction that it has given. I think each House has a right to instruct its own committees, and I think it has just as good a right to instruct a committee that it calls a conference committee as any other, although it is called a free conference. The Senate has decided the question three or four times in respect of instructing its own conference committees, and as usual it has decided both ways.

I remember when the celebrated salary-grab, as it was called afterward, was pending in this body about the 3d of March, 1873, I think it was, when it was moved to instruct the Senate conferees to recede from the amendment increasing salaries that we had put on a House appropriation bill, a Senator from Illinois, I think, Mr. Trumbull, raised the point of order that it was not competent for the Senate to instruct its conferees, and the Chair holding that it was, an appeal was taken and the Senate decided that it was not competent, that they could not be instructed. At the beginning of the next session the matter was carefully explored and all the precedents hunted up, and it turned out that on numerous occasions before that time, whenever the Senate thought it convenient and desirable in order that its conferees should carry the weight of the whole judgment of the Senate on a given point into a conference with the House, a conference committee might be instructed exactly like any other of the committees; and it turned out that the same Senator from Illinois who had made the point of order on this salary matter himself on the last preceding occasion had moved an instruction to a committee of conference.

So, taking all the precedents in this body together, I think it perfectly clear that it is competent for this body, and certainly of course for the other House, under its powers, to instruct a committee of conference. I know that no question was ever raised in the Senate as to whether it would be the duty of the Senate, having instructed its committee of conference, to inform the House by a message of those instructions. The Senate conferees being instructed would meet the House conferees in the conference-room and would of course, like other diplomatic representatives, so to speak, inform the representatives of the other branch what they were instructed to present and insist upon and discuss and so forth. That has been, as I say, often practiced in this body; and I do not remember any instance in which this body thought it necessary as a matter of parliamentary duty to send a message to the House of Representatives to inform them that it had instructed its own committee.

Now, when we come to this precise question of order, if I am right in what I have already stated, of course this supposed proceeding of the House of Representatives on which the question of order arises was a proceeding the House of Representatives had a perfect right to take, instructing its own representatives what sort of views to present to the representatives of the Senate. Therefore it is exactly like referring here to any other proceeding in the House of Representatives on any question that engages their consideration, as an instruction to the Committee on Ways and Means to bring in an internal-revenue bill or an instruction to the Committee on Elections to report an election case or whatever the House of Representatives might think it fit to do. Therefore if there is anything in the rule which it has always been thought was the fundamental rule of parliamentary law between two independent bodies that the members of neither body can refer to or comment upon the proceedings of the other except so far as they are brought to the notice of each other by messages in the regular way—if there is anything in what I think is that fundamental rule, then it appears to me, with great deference to those who disagree with me, that the Chair is clearly right.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, on the first point suggested by the Senator from Vermont I want now to read what his colleague very graciously declined to hear read a few moments before he came into the Chamber.

This occurred in the Forty-third Congress:

> The report of the committee of conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill is under consideration. A motion is made to recommit the report to the committee of conference with instructions to strike out certain parts of the report. Mr. Trumbull raises a question of order, viz: "That the province of the committee of conference being to confer freely and fully upon the subject of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses committed to it, it was not competent to limit such conference by instructing the committee in any manner in respect to its action at the conference." The Presiding Officer (Mr. EDMUNDS) overruled the point of order, and decided that the motion to recommit the report with instructions was in order.

I call the attention of the other side particularly. Mr. Trumbull raised the question of order on the motion to recommit, with instructions to strike out a certain part of the bill:

> That the province of the committee of conference being to confer freely and fully upon the subject of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses committed to it, it was not competent to limit such conference by instructing the committee in any manner in respect to its action at the conference. The Presiding Officer (Mr. EDMUNDS) overruled the point of order, and decided that the motion to recommit the report with instructions was in order. From this decision Mr. Trumbull appealed, and the decision of the Chair was reversed; yeas 11, nays 47.—Senate Journal, third session Forty-second Congress, March 3, 1873, 556.

What do you suppose was the vote on that? The Chair received for the support of his ruling 11 votes, and there were 47 against it. Yet we are told here to-day that it is competent for each House, in asking for a full and free conference, to tell its conferees in advance "you must do so and so." Where, then, is the "full" and the "free?" You send them there not only shackled but bound hand and foot, and then you have the courage to say that is a full and a free conference. Where does the "full" and where does the "free" come in? You are not sending them under that state of case to confer. You are sending them to submit to the orders of one House.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope that order will be preserved in the Senate. We are very anxious to hear the honorable Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will Senators please take seats, and those gentlemen who are here by the courtesy of the Senate will sit down or leave the Senate Chamber.

Mr. GARLAND. Here was the express point made and overruled by the most overwhelming vote I have ever known given in the Senate on any controverted question, 11 votes to sustain the Chair and 47 against it. The Senate then said, "No; if you are going to confer frankly and fully and freely, we will not tell you what subject you must enter on in advance; when we say we send you to confer freely and fully we do mean to send you there, not to defy one another and to pull off your coats and threaten to whip one another." That is the proposition now; that is what this farce is now.

Upon the most important question that has been before Congress since I have been a member of the Senate, a bill that took forty days and forty nights for the Senate to consider, you are asked now to appoint a free conference on the most material point when the House conferees are instructed. The Senate has said heretofore that can not be done. We ought not to have conferences under false pretenses; we ought not have the conferences as a juggle. Suppose when we send five gentlemen into this committee-room of conference they are met, as we are told here, by House conferees who say to them, "You have done an unconstitutional thing, and we can not hear any argument about it." Then what does your conference come to?

Let me ask the Senate in good faith, for we do not deceive ourselves or deceive anybody else, after the exhibition made by the Senator from Vermont who objected to this being read, after his moving to lay this important question of ruling on the table, do you expect this committee to withdraw from anything of this kind? No, it will not. The whole proceeding shows that we are coming to an illegitimate result, and there is no use in saying a word or discussing the meaning of this. They will not retire; but they will sit there handcuffed and trammeled and tied, bound hand and foot like the dancing man upon the mimic show for the edification of the five members of the House. The Senator from Vermont shows that he has predetermined to do this, for he has endeavored to cut off debate on this important question when a Senator rises here and says under his oath that he believes the Senate has been trifled with, and the Chair thinks that that can not be read.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Arkansas permit me to interrupt him for a single moment?

Mr. GARLAND. It does not interrupt me at all.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Arkansas had already addressed the Senate twice on the subject. My only purpose was to save sufficient time, so that if there is to be a conference committee which can have an opportunity to report to the Senate and give the Senate some time after the report is made to say whether they would accept it or not. It was only for the purpose of enabling the conference committee to have sufficient time to consider the question that I made my motion.

Mr. GARLAND. There is not sufficient time for anything if there is not time to consider this matter. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] appealed that this motion should not be introduced to cut off debate, which the Senator from Vermont sought to do when I wished to call the attention of the Senate to the rulings made on previous occasions on this very point. But there is something more than time, there is fair dealing involved here; constitutional questions of high privilege as to the right of this body are involved here, and I stand here under the sanction of my oath and say that I have information which leads me to believe that the Senate has been trifled with, and I think it can be made to appear that it has been. That would so far influence my action that I would not have voted for this committee of conference had I known that that estoppel was placed there in advance of the conference.

Mr. MAXEY. I would ask the Senator from Arkansas if he has ever known a single instance in the course of his extensvie practice where the fact was brought home to the court that the record did not disclose the whole truth, and that fact was shown by credible and reputable sources, that the court refused to hear the whole truth?

Mr. GARLAND. I never have, and if it is done now it will be the first instance on record so far as my information goes. I do not suppose there would have been a dissenting voice yesterday if the whole truth had been known. I believe the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] stated then a hypothetical case; but as it was merely a hypothetical case a majority of this side voted for the committee of conference; and yet if I had known as a matter of fact what had transpired I should not have voted for this conference. I would not have agreed to send our conferees to such a meeting. We are not in the Senate of the United States to act upon questions affecting the very vitals of the country without free course. Let Senators look at it. It is nothing more to me than to anybody else. We are called now to a feast of reason and a flow of soul, a feast of parliamentary reason, and then we are presented with this order from the House: "Here is your ultima Thule. You can not step one foot beyond this." What am I asking? That the Senate may act advisedly if it is going to tear down this conference. If instructions are to be interposed to the committee, if it is to be dictated to by the resolution of the House, we ought to know it before we decide to have a conference at all. If there is any decent way to escape from that I am not aware of it, but I will accept anything at this time. But here is the question: I have information that convinces me that this body has not been dealt fairly with. I deny the proposition of the Senator from Vermont that we can impose instructions upon our committee of conference; but if we can, good faith, fair dealing, requires that we should inform the other House of it when we do it, so that they may know what we are proposing.

Mr. MORGAN. I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the fact, the supposition at least, that the action of the House upon the instruction given to its conferees is predicated upon a denial of the constitutional power of the Senate to enact this law at all, and they ask a conference from us, but they have denied our power and send their conferees to treat on that question.

Mr. GARLAND. That is the supposition I am going upon, and I believe I can make that supposition good before the Senate, if permitted to do it. We are asked to confer upon our rights and privileges under the Constitution, with that question already prejudged and settled by the co-ordinate branch of the Legislature. That is all there is in the question. Not merely as affecting this bill, but for all future time I want it settled. It is time it was settled. I have shown you a vote of 47 to 11 on a straight-out, unadulterated, and unmixed question where the Senate said this could not be done.

I say to the Senator from Delaware that he will never see that committee withdraw and retire from that conference if they once go there, because over that conference chamber will practically be written, "He who enters here leaves hope behind."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas is quite right in saying that it was a very decisive vote that held, on the night of the 3d of March, 1873, that this body had no parliamentary power to instruct its own committee of conference; but my friend from Arkansas, had he been here at that time, I am sure would have been found voting with the minority, because the question existing at that time was one of those questions that went by the passion or wish or selfishness of the hour, and not by any deliberate judgment. As I said before, it was on an amendment of the Senate increasing the salaries of Senators and members of the House of Representatives to I believe $10,000 a year.

Mr. MORRILL. Seven thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Seven thousand five hundred dollars or whatever it was; and that increase was to be paid into the pockets of Senators whose terms would expire that night or the next day at noon as the practice is and who would pocket the difference of $2,500. That of course to anybody besides a Senator would be a temptation. Of course to a Senator it would not. But there was a good deal more jugglery going on at that time than even there is supposed to be now, upon that question; and although I think if the thing could have been fairly reached so that if we could have got a straight vote on striking out that amendment we should have had a majority. But as everybody knew, as it was on an appropriation bill, if that salary grab was left in the report of the conference and it was the very last night of the session that report would be agreed to in order to save the appropriation bill, as the phrase ordinarily is. In other words we have not pluck enough to resist a wrong if it is put on an appropriation bill first. Consequently the thing was whistled down the wind, and the determination was that that back pay for two years should be given to Senators and members of the House of Representatives in spite of any possible straight vote on that question.

Accordingly the Senator from Illinois raised the point of order and a Senator from Vermont being in the chair he overruled it upon the belief, looking at the books on parliamentary law, that a full and free conference is not the kind of conference that my friend from Alabama describes, a conference in which the agents of the appointing powers are to run wild without following the wishes of the bodies who create them, but a full and free conference is an oral conference as distinguished from a conference where each representative of the two Houses presents his views in writing like a set of pleadings in a court. That is all there is meant by a full and free conference in the books on parliamentary law.

However, as I say, the Senate overruled the Chair with a whirlwind of course. At the next session attention was drawn to the subject and the precedents sent for, and for years back they were looked up, and they are all brought together and collated by our accomplished Reporter, Mr. Murphy, at that time; and at the risk of occupying the time of the Senate too long I must be excused for reading it. It is not very long:

An examination extended back but a few years shows two instances in direct opposition to the ruling of the Senate on the 3d of March last.

At the first session of the Thirty-eighth Congress, the committee of conference upon a bill "to increase the internal revenue and for other purposes"—

Sounding very much like this one so far—having reported on the 1st of March, 1864, to the House of Representatives their inability to agree, a resolution was offered by Mr. Washburne, of Illinois, as follows:

"Resolved, That the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments to House bill No. 122, and that the House request of the Senate another committee of conference on the said bill; and it is hereby declared to be the judgment of this House that in an adjustment of the differences between the two Houses on the said bill there should be an additional duty of not less than 20 nor more than 40 cents per gallon imposed on spirits on hand for sale."—Congressional Globe, page 892, part 1, First session Thirty-eighth Congress.

A question of order being raised, the decision of the Speaker (Mr. Colfax) was as follows:

"The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the House of Representatives has the power to instruct any committee which it authorizes to be appointed. It is a judicious check upon the power of the Speaker in appointing committees. They have a right to instruct a committee of conference as they have a right to instruct a standing or a select committee. The gentleman from Illinois moves this himself as a resolution. It seems, however, susceptible of division, first, upon asking another committee of conference, and, secondly, upon the instructions. As to the right to move instructions the Chair has no doubt."—Congressional Globe, part 1, first session Thirty-eighth Congress, page 892.

The decision of the Speaker was acquiesced in by the House, no appeal being taken, and the resolution of Mr. Washburne was agreed to.

Then follows what I am sorry did not occur in this case because it would have saved all this trouble.

On the following day, the action of the House of Representatives having been communicated to the Senate, the Senator from Ohio, Mr. SHERMAN, offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the conference requested by the House of Representatives be agreed to; and that the conferees heretofore appointed by the Senate be instructed to agree to proper amendments to the Senate amendments disagreed to by the House, providing for a tax of not exceeding 20 cents a gallon on spirits on hand for sale."—Ibid., page 900.

The late Senator from Maine, Mr. Fessenden, at once suggested a doubt as to the resolution being in order; to which the Senator from Ohio replied as follows:

"I have not examined for precedents, but I think there can be no doubt of the power of the Senate to instruct its conferees on any point. It is a question of discretion. Ordinarily it would not be done; but there have been two conferences on this disagreement, which has all grown out of one difference. The House of Representatives have now expressed their opinion on that difference, and I think the Senate ought also to do so."—Ibid., page 900.

Mr. Fessenden then raised the question of order directly for the decision of the Chair, and the Vice-President, who is now Senator from Maine, Mr. Hamlin, gave his decision in the following words:

"The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair can have no doubt that the resolution proposed by the Senator from Ohio is in order. Conferences are of two characters—free and simple. A free conference is that which leaves the committee of conference entirely free to pass upon any subject where the two branches have disagreed in their votes, not, however, including any action upon any subject where there has been a concurrent vote of both branches. A simple conference—perhaps it should more properly be termed a strict or a specific conference, though the parliamentary term is 'simple'—is that which confines the committee of conference to the specific instructions of the body appointing it. The Chair therefore rules that the resolution is in order."

In the discussion which ensued, the Senator from Ohio said—

Repeating again his views:

"The Senate might very properly object to any action by the Senate conferees which was not strictly within the parliamentary rule, but the Senate itself may, by its instructions, enlarge the power of the committee. There is no doubt about that. There is no limit to the power of the Senate over its committees. It may authorize its conferees to agree to amendments to its amendments, which might not be in order if those amendments to the amendments came directly from the conferees without the action of the Senate. That is the view all the conferees took, although they differed on the question of parliamentary law."—Ibid., page 900.

In the course of the debate, Mr. Hendricks, of Indiana, said:

"I agree with the decision of the President of the Senate that it is competent to instruct a committee of conference on the part of the Senate."—Ibid., page 902.

Again he said:

"In respect to the questions of disagreement, the Senate may instruct its part of the committee, but outside of the questions of disagreement the Senate can not instruct that committee, for the reason that that is not one of the modes of legislation known to parliamentary usages." * * *

That is, on points about which there was no difference, instructions could not be given for the reason that it would be entirely useless, being beyond the power of either House.

"The Senate may instruct the committee upon all the questions that were referred to that committee, but not upon other questions."—Ibid., pages 902 and 903.

From this view of parliamentary law, no Senator dissented, although the debate on the subject-matter extends over many pages of the Congressional Globe.

The result of the debate, which was quite protracted, was the rejection of the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, although no one doubted the right of the Senate to instruct the conferees, and the adoption of the following resolution offered by Mr. Conness, of California:

"Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 1st instant, proposing instructions to the conferees, and ask another free conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 122) to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes."—Ibid., page 907.

The House of Representatives having agreed to a further free conference, the conferees on again meeting were unable to agree, and the bill was disposed of by the Senate receding from its amendments.

The proceedings in this case, as in that which follows, are recorded in the Journal, but the Congressional Globe is quoted from, because it contains the details of the points raised with the decisions made and the debate thereon, instead of the Journal, which merely records the votes.

At the first session of the Thirty-ninth Congress an amendment was added by the Senate to the sundry civil expenses appropriation bill increasing the pay of Senators and Representatives and taking effect retroactively from the beginning of that Congress. This amendment was disagreed to by the House of Representatives, but they amended other Senate amendments by the addition of a provision granting bounties to the soldiers of the war of the rebellion. Two committees of conference were unable to agree.

Then the question of difficulty was stated and again the committee of conference was instructed to agree upon a certain line of policy in regard to that bill—

Whereupon Mr. Trumbull—

The very Senator who raised the point of order on the 3d of March, 1873, on the salary grab—

Whereupon Mr. Trumbull, then a Senator from Illinois, moved
"That the committee of conference be instructed to agree—

To a certain proposition that had been reported that the House conferees insisted upon.

A modification of the terms of the proposition having been suggested by Mr. Doolittle, Mr. Trumbull said:
"The proper motion I suppose would be to recommit the report to the committee with instructions to agree to that proposition." (Ibid., page 4247.)
No point of order was raised, no doubt was suggested.

So that with great deference to my friend from Arkansas, on the primary question we have been discussing I think it is clear from the parliamentary books and from the constant action of both Houses, with this single exception of the salary grab, that either House has the right to instruct its own committee of conference as it has the right to instruct any other committee.

The Senator from Arkansas could have reached this point of getting at what is supposed to have been done in the House of Representatives, not by referring to it in debate, but by reciting it in a resolution—if he thought it a breach of the privileges of this body, or any improper conduct toward this body—a resolution of privilege, stating what action of the House he complained of. He could submit such a resolution to the Senate, and then of course that action of the House would be before us and we should have a right, if we thought so, to send a message after that remonstrating against that course, or directing our conferees to withdraw from the conference, or rescinding the order for a conference, or taking any other action. But here, on a motion to reconsider a legislative vote of the Senate, it does not appear to me that it is any more open to refer to this proceeding of the House than to any other.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, decisions upon points of order are very opposite, because every Senator knows that decisions upon both sides of every question can be found, and that they will continue to be made as the wishes of a majority may indicate or dictate hereafter. I have no doubt that the House of Representatives had an unquestioned right to instruct their conferees. If they did so, the only regret I have is that they did not communicate their action to the Senate; and I suppose that all the Senator from Arkansas desires is that the conferees on the part of the Senate, if they find that limitations have been placed on the House conferees by the action of that body, retire for the purpose of submitting the question to the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the idea.

Mr. INGALLS. Now, I suggest whether or not the resolution I send to the Chair, and ask unanimous consent that it may be read, would not be a solution of this whole difficulty without proceeding further upon the debate on the question of order? I ask that it may be read, and if it meets the approbation of the Senator from Arkansas and those who think with him I will ask unanimous consent that it may be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the Senate that the conference on House bill 5538 should be full and free, and that if the Senate conferees become advised that any limitation has been placed by the House upon the action of their conferees, the Senate conferees shall retire and report to the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. Allow me to say that I had prepared a resolution almost in those words for the purpose of being offered, and I concur in that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose it is the desire of the Senate to bring about an agreement upon the tariff and internal-revenue bill. If so, these resolutions and counter-resolutions tend to defeat that object. Now I will ask the Secretary to read the message sent to us by the House of Representatives, that we may see what they have said to their committee. Just read the action of the House, the official action, and the only action we have before us.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 27, 1883.

Resolved, That the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, to be composed on the part of this House of five members.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. GARLAND. I ask to have read the message they did not send us.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not desire to have that read for a moment, and I will state the reason why. The only official message sent to us by the House of Representatives is one asking a free conference upon the disagreeing votes between the two Houses. What are they? First, the tariff section, which is one amendment proposed by the Senate which the House disagreed to; and, second, two or three amendments of a minor character in regard to internal revenue. Those are the disagreeing votes between the two Houses, upon which the House of Representatives asked us to confer. Now I will ask what the Senate responded to that?

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator a question? Has there been any vote whatever in the House upon the amendments of the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYARD. Upon the Senate amendments?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYARD. Read the message.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask again that the Secretary read it. In that formal message to us they say they have disagreed to our amendments and ask a conference upon that disagreement. Read it again.

Mr. BAYARD. That was the formal resolution, but I am speaking as to the fact. There never has been any consideration by the House of Representatives of the action of the Senate on this bill at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. We know nothing but what they say to us officially, that they disagree to our amendments. That is not only formal, but precise, and they ask us to confer with them on that disagreement. Now I will ask that the Secretary read the action of the Senate.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SHERMAN. Here is an agreement on the part of the two Houses that there shall be a free conference, and an unusual mark is given to the importance of that conference by increasing in each House the committee to five, so that there will be five instead of three on the part of each House—a free and full conference. That is all we have before us.

But now the Senator from Arkansas tells us that the House have passed a resolution which they did not communicate to us. What have we to do with that? What right have we to criticise their conduct? What right have we to comment upon their action? It is not their formal action communicated to us. Suppose we should pass a resolution expressing our opinion about any subject-matter, whether before us or not, would the House be at liberty to discuss our action, to have it read and commented upon, and arraigned as raising grave constitutional issues? No, sir. I say the Chair was perfectly right in holding that we have nothing to do with the action of the House except the formal announcement to us of their action. But suppose on the other hand the conferees on the part of the House should present to our conferees a proposition not embraced in the disagreement between the two Houses, which only extends to these amendments, as a matter of course the Senate ought to have sufficient confidence in a committee of its own members thus selected to know that it would not undertake to act upon matters not referred to it. Is it to be presumed that the five members selected by the Presiding Officer here to confer with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses as to tariff and internal-revenue legislation would allow the House conference to present to us a grave constitutional question never yet debated in the Senate in this connection?

It seems to me that the better way, therefore, is to let the formal action stand as it is, relying, as you may fairly rely from the nature of the case, that the conferees on the part of the Senate will not undertake to extend their jurisdiction to other questions not embraced in this conference. The conference itself is simply confined to the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments proposed by the Senate. If they propose topics that go beyond those, as a matter of course the Senate conferees would not consider themselves bound to receive or act upon those propositions outside of and beyond the scope of our instructions and beyond the scope of the reference to this committee.

It seems to me, therefore, that these resolutions are totally unnecessary, and that if we desire to expedite this business to allow these conferees to improve the little time that is left the matter ought to be left precisely as the record leaves it, a free and open conference between five Senators and five members of the House upon the amendments proposed by the Senate to the House bill. That is all there is of it.

For this reason I object to the resolution of the Senator from Arkansas as unnecessary, and I hope the decision of the Chair will be sustained.

I say further that by the established usage of parliamentary law and innumerable precedents, as is shown clearly enough by the precedents read by the Senator from Vermont, either House can if it chooses, verbally or in writing, formally or in any other way, let its conferees know how far it is willing they may go, and there is no trouble about it, and we have no right to inquire into the extent of that authority by the House any more than when two parties employ two lawyers to meet and confer on matters in dispute between them, those lawyers have a right to inquire as to the instructions they have received from their own private clients. These Senators and Members represent the two opposing bodies. They will gather the wishes of their respective bodies by the votes that have been cast in open Senate and House, and they will take the general tenor and course of the debate and action of the respective Houses as instructions which will govern them; and it is perfectly proper for either House to make those instructions explicit, definite, and limited without trampling at all upon the power of the other House.

Mr. GARLAND. I differ entirely, as far as the heavens from the earth, with the Senator from Ohio in the proposition he has stated that either House proposing a free conference can instruct its conferees how far they shall go and what they shall do. The only decision of any importance on that point which has been made here was a very significant one overruling one of the best parliamentarians of the Senate by a vote of 11 to 47, after the debate that was had on it by the Senator from Vermont. I wish the Senate now to recollect the language of Mr. Hamlin where a distinction is drawn between a simple conference and a conference free and full. In a mere simple conference, of course, the rule is that you can instruct the conferees; but in a full and free conference it is unheard of and it has been stamped upon several times by significant votes of this body. This is no matter of private agency. The comparison of the Senator from Ohio falls, and falls to rise no more. These are plenipotentiaries of this body; not mere private agents to go out and sell a horse fifteen hands high or to buy one fourteen and a half hands high, but ministers with full power to confer fully and freely.

The resolution of the Senator from Kansas meets with my approbation. I only want to get at this matter in its real, genuine merits. My motion for a reconsideration, if passed, I intended to follow up with a resolution of that character or some other resolution to get at the question. I will state, if the Senate will listen, that it has not been dealt fairly with upon a case now of supposition. Suppose the other House of Congress after ordering a committee of conference on their part and requesting us to accede to it had passed a resolution of this character:

Whereas in the opinion of the House it is believed that such changes and alterations are in conflict with the true intent and purpose of the Constitution, which requires that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives: Therefore,

Resolved, That if this bill shall be referred to a committee of conference, it shall be the duty of the conferees on the part of the House on said committee to consider fully the constitutional objections to said bill as amended by the Senate and herein referred to, and to bring the same, together with the opinion of the House in regard thereto, before said conference, and if necessary in their opinion, after having conferred with the Senate conferees, said conferees on said committee may make report to the House in regard to the objections to said bill herein referred to.

I do not say the House have passed such a resolution as that; but suppose they had, would any Senator except the Senator from Ohio rise in his place and say that would be a free and full conference? I believe the Senator from Ohio said so, because he said positively this was not one of the questions voted on. So much the worse. The matter as it stood before was bad, but in the shape in which it is placed by the Senator from Ohio it is horrible beyond description that one House can say to the other, "While we ask you for a conference with our right hand, presto, change! with the left we are going to do this and not give you a full and free conference." The statement of the Senator from Ohio makes it illimitably and unutterably worse than it was before. What is wanted is a full and free conference, not a limited conference, not a simple conference. To escape from the conclusion, to say that the question was not voted on, but simply the question of the amendment was voted on, only makes it infinitely worse.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not feel at liberty to discuss what action occurred in the House, but upon the supposititious case put by the Senator from Arkansas it is perfectly clear that even if such facts exist as he now states them, on the case that he presents, the words do not in the slightest degree limit the powers of the conference or extend them in the least but simply refer an additional question to the conferees not raised by the formal action of disagreement. There can be no objection at all to the House submitting any outside question of expediency, propriety, constitutionality, &c. It is sufficient to say that the question to which the Senator refers is not referred to in the formal action of the two Houses, which alone is the basis and foundation of the conference about to be entered upon.

Mr. GARLAND. Then, with due respect to the Senator from Ohio, he makes his case still worse; and I will show it. If I do not you can spit in my face and call me a horse, or anything else you please. The Senator from Ohio says that the House of Representatives, upon the supposititious case that I make, can order the committee of conference to have a full and free conference and then say "you must bind the Senate conferees upon a question that was not passed upon." That makes the case infinitely worse than it was before.

Now, what is the question? If such action as this has been taken by the House they say that we have transcended our constitutional limits. Come right square up to the question and let us meet it face to face, and we shall see how it dispels this gauzy objection of the Senator from Ohio. The Senate of the United States is presumed to know something of the Constitution; it is presumed to understand something of the Constitution; it is presumed to legislate with a view to the Constitution. If it does not it gets its inspiration and instruction from the other House. What are we now to be told?

"You have no constitutional authority to do this thing and we are now to meet you with this and defy you upon it." That is the question that the Senator from Ohio wants, a question that never was discussed in this body. Distinguished gentlemen like the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], the Senator from Ohio himself, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], whose term, I believe, numbers nearly thirty consecutive years in service in the two bodies, never raised this question. It was not brought here; it was not broached; and the Journals in the other House and this House are to say, "You do not understand what you are doing, but we will instruct the committee of conference to tell you what you are doing." That is the plain, unvarnished, unadulterated English of this matter.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator permit me to interfere once more?

Mr. GARLAND. I will.

Mr. MORRILL. I see by the discussion it is apprehended on the other side that there is to be some jugglery about the consideration of the bill in the committee of conference, and that by the position taken by the House subsequently to the proposition for a conference it may be supposed that the committee on the part of the House will be instructed to strike out all but the internal-revenue bill. I wish to say that so far as I am concerned I do not so understand it, and so far as I am concerned I should not consent in the conference committee to any such operation.

Mr. GARLAND. Let any man look at these proceedings clear through. Let us be honest with one another and we shall be honest with the rest of the world.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VOORHEES in the chair). The Senator from Arkansas will suspend for a moment while the Chair calls attention to the fact that the morning hour has just expired when the unfinished business comes up. It is not necessary that an order should be made. If the Chair hears no objection the discussion will proceed.

Mr. MORRILL. This matter ought to be disposed of, obviously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. GARLAND. I will occupy the attention of the Senate but a little while. If any man looking at these proceedings clear through does not believe that there is to be jugglery in this matter, he must be blinder than all the bats that inhabit the earth. The simple proposition that came to us yesterday for a committee of conference is very plain to be understood, although it is a little unusual in its shape.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator from Arkansas permit me just a moment? I suppose this proceeding will not interrupt the unfinished business when it is closed?

Mr. GARLAND. No, sir; not so far as I know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that this discussion is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRIS. The unfinished business is simply informally laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is simply informally laid aside, to come up as soon as this matter is disposed of.

Mr. BLAIR. Is it necessary that the Chair should formally lay the unfinished business before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been announced.

Mr. GARLAND. I say if a man can stand up and say there is not to be jugglery in this, and he does not see it, after all that has transpired, he must be blinder than all the bats that inhabit the earth. I would not have been tempted to lay my hand on it if I had not believed it. If the simple resolution that came yesterday stood alone and solitary, there was no occasion for any quarrel about it, but when I am informed that this is not all of it, and the record was suppressed, I deem it my duty to call it to the attention of the Senate and let it take proper action. The excuses furnished by the Senator from Ohio only make it worse and more glaring, because they say, "While we invite you to come to our feast, for we have sent you an invitation, we will sprinkle a little poison with it and interfere with your digestion, because you have not behaved yourselves in a proper way, or have done something else that we object to."

It makes these five members of the House the guardians and custodians of this bill. That is the long and short of it, and no sort of quibble of words, no circumlocution, no dialectics, no law, no rhetoric, no morals, or anything else will mistake the conclusion. It is as plain as my five fingers before me.

It is time that the Senate should halt and see whether it has been fairly dealt with or not. Here we took forty days and nights over this bill by the watch, and now we are told solemnly (at least it is supposed that we have been told) that we have transcended our constitutional duty, and the conferees are possibly ordered to bring that question back to the House prejudged, prestated, prerecorded; and that is to be settled in a closet, in a committee-room.

The Senate should not let this escape from its hands. So that we go at it directly without any equivocation is all I want. I am perfectly content with the resolution of the Senator from Kansas, and if it is acceptable to those gentlemen who agree with me I am willing to withdraw the appeal on the point of order and the motion to reconsider; but I want the Senate to come squarely to the question and see whether or not we are Little Leather Breeches yet hanging to our mothers' aprons and that we need guardianship on this matter.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope that the Senate, by unanimous consent, will take a vote on the resolution of the Senator from Kansas. It relieves the question of all doubt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] objected to its reception.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senate can have a vote on that or any other proposition without further debate, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senate is ready to take a vote on the resolution.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope the Senator from Ohio will withdraw his objection and let a vote be taken, because it touches the very marrow of this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection from any Senator, the resolution is before the Senate and will be read.

Mr. MORRILL. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read, for information, and then the vote will be put upon it if there is no objection.

The resolution of Mr. INGALLS was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the Senate that the conference on House bill No. 5538 should be full and free, and that if the Senate conferees become advised that any limitation has been placed by the House upon the action of their conferees, the Senate conferees shall retire and report to the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. HOAR. I do not propose on the last Wednesday of the session, within four days of its termination, to object to the resolution, as it is to be passed without objection to save time; but I think it is my duty to say that there is nothing which has occurred anywhere, so far as I know or believe, which affords the slightest reasons for the passage of such a resolution by the Senate. It is only to save time that I make no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the appeal.

Mr. INGALLS. That is withdrawn.

Mr. HOAR. I supposed the appeal was laid on the table, as the resolution was considered by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the appeal withdrawn?

Mr. GARLAND. I withdrew the appeal by the consent of the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I sent up a resolution similar in its purport to the resolution offered by the Senator from Kansas. The adoption of his resolution will supersede the necessity of any action on mine.

Mr. GARLAND. It is understood that the point of order and the motion to reconsider are withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. GARLAND. Very well.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to survey of a canal from Hennepin, on the Illinois River, by the most practicable and convenient route, to the Mississippi River at or above Rock Island, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting one from Major W. E. Merrill, Corps of Engineers, in relation to the work for the construction of the ice-harbor at the mouth of the Muskingum River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a partial report of the Navy-Yard Commission appointed under the act of Congress of August 5, 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in compliance with law, a memorandum showing the condition of the several libraries in his Department; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the city officers of Grand Rapids, Michigan, and a letter of the Michigan State board of health of Lansing, Michigan, in favor of an appropriation to continue the immigrant-inspection service; which were referred to the Select Committee to Investigate and Report the Best Means of Preventing the Introduction and Spread of Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. BROWN presented a petition of citizens of Saint Mary's, Georgia, praying for the preservation and prosecution of the work upon the jetties at the entrance of Cumberland Sound, and for a reasonable appropriation therefor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of workingmen, employés of the Cherokee Iron Company at Cedartown, Georgia, praying that Congress will adopt no lower rates of duties on any foreign-manufactured products than are recommended by the Tariff Commission; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRISON presented the petition of Georgetta Harp, of Posey County, Indiana, widow of Burgess Harp, late a private in Company K, Eighty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteers, praying an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

CENSUS REPORT MAPS.

Mr. ANTHONY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. 143) authorizing the Committee on Printing to instruct the Public Printer relative to the maps, &c., for the census reports; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7679) to establish certain post-routes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CALL and Mr. HAMPTON submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. 7595) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JONAS, Mr. VOORHEES, and Mr. WINDOM submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. 7637) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had appointed Mr. EMORY SPEER, of Georgia, a member of the conference committee on the part of the House on the bill (H. R. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, in the place of Mr. S. J. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, excused at his own request.

RATES OF PENSIONS.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order, the unfinished business, will be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1410) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pension of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask the Secretary to read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension-roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall have lost one arm, one hand, one leg, or one foot, or shall have suffered disability equal thereto, shall be entitled to a pension of $40 per month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] in line 7, to strike out the words "or shall have suffered disability equal thereto."

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, this bill, known in the country as House bill 1410, which proposes to increase the pensions of soldiers of the late war who lost an arm or a leg in the service, passed the House of Representatives on the 8th day of June last, came to the Senate, and was referred to the Senate Committee on Pensions. Immediately that committee was inundated with a flood of petitions coming from every section of the country, asking the immediate consideration of the subject. The committee itself was beset with delegation after delegation representing especially the class of soldiers and also other classes, the Grand Army of the Republic, and others, asking also that the committee should act promptly upon the subject.

It had been stated in the House of Representatives when they passed this bill that it would involve an increased expenditure for pensions of only about $1,000,000; the highest figure given being $1,500,000. The Committee on Pensions of the Senate, having the question in their mind in regard to that statement, thought proper to delay their action in order to inquire more carefully into the subject. Before Congress adjourned last August it was apparent to the committee that if the House bill were to pass it would involve an annual expenditure of more than $5,000,000, so that that question came to be one of very great importance as it was thought by the committee. Finally it was impossible to secure its passage at the last session of Congress, and the whole subject went over in the final hours of that session to the session which met in December.

The question now before the Senate is an important one, on the amendment moved by the Senator from Missouri. It is not my purpose to address myself especially to that, but rather to review as hastily as I can the general situation on the subject.

The Committee on Pensions is divided into four sections on this question, as will be seen by those Senators who have done the committee the honor to read their several reports. There is a report which stands pro forma as the report of the committee, although concurred in by only four members of that committee, against the passage of the bill. There is a minority report signed by two Senators on this side of the Chamber in favor of the passage of the bill. There is another minority report signed by two Senators upon this side of the Chamber proposing important amendments, which are embraced in the proposed amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. There is also another report, made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], accompanied by a proposed amendment by him.

Pending the consideration of this question, in pursuance of a resolution adopted by the Senate, there came to the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior forwarding to us a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, which gives very interesting information upon the subject. Certain inquiries were made of him with a view to ascertain if possible how large an increase would result in the annual expenditures under this proposed bill. I will read from that report a portion which covers, I think, the House bill as it was presented to the committee.

The Commissioner of Pensions reports that there are now upon the roll 1,108 soldiers who lost a hand; 3,564 who lost an arm above the elbow or at the elbow joint; 2,523 who lost a foot; 1,966 who lost a leg, meaning by that amputated at the knee-joint or above it; 15 who lost a hand and foot; and 6 whose limbs were amputated at the hip-joint. Upon the first class, those who lost a hand, by the House bill there would be an increased monthly allowance of $22, as they are now entitled to receive only $18, and the bill proposes to give them $40. That would involve an increase to that class alone of $292,512. Of the next, those who lost an arm, 3,564, the bill proposes to raise them from $24 a month to $40 a month, an increase of $16 a month. There would result in that class an increase of $684,288. To those who lost a foot, the number being 2,523, there would be an increase of $22 a month, resulting in a gross increase of $666,072. To those who lost a leg, numbering 1,966, there would be an increase of $16 a month, making a total increase of $377,472.

Those who lost a hand and foot now receive under the law $36 a month, and they would receive by the proposed bill as it passed the House $4 increase, which would add $720 to the pension-roll. The six who have suffered amputation at the hip-joint would receive only an increase of $2.50, which would add but $180 to the pension-roll.

The total number, it will appear by a glance at these figures, of those who have suffered amputation is 9,182, and the total increase resulting from the passage of the bill to cover those cases of actual amputation would be $2,021,244. But the bill as it came from the House includes that provision which the Senator from Missouri proposes now to strike out; that is, those who have suffered a disability equal thereto, "equivalent disability claims," as they are called under the existing pension laws. The Commissioner's estimate as to them is as follows:

8,847 now receiving $18 per month, and the net increase will be	$2,335,608
1,552 now receiving $24 per month, and the net increase will be	297,984
232 now receiving $31.25 per month, and the net increase will be	21,576
14 now receiving $36 per month, and the net increase will be	672
280 are officers above the rank of first lieutenant, and the estimated net increase will be	60,480

In all 10,925, and a net annual increase of $2,716,320 for equivalent disabilities.

The Commissioner also estimates that of the pending applications, if this bill should become a law, enough would be allowed during the current year to increase the amount $450,000, and his estimate by a percentage of allowances, taking the history of that department for all those applications now pending, when considered and acted upon, is a further increase of $892,000; so that the total increase as estimated by the Commissioner of Pensions under the bill as it came from the House would be $6,079,564.

If the House bill were to become a law and Congress were disposed to deal equitably with other classes of pensioners, it would be necessary to increase the rates in other cases. The questions propounded to the Secretary of the Interior under the resolution adopted by the Senate led the Commissioner of Pensions to make an estimate also covering what would be likely to follow if a pro rata increase were made as to them, if such legislation should be enacted, and the result of his calculations is that this bill would legitimately result finally in an annual increase of about $18,000,000.

In view of this very large proposed increase in the annual expenditures for pensions, the committee thought that it would be wise for Congress at this time to consider the whole question, not to go about it piecemeal granting an increase to one class and omitting to consider the claims of other classes, but to consider the whole subject together. At least that was the judgment of a majority, I think, and their views are presented in the several reports which are now before the Senate.

The proposition of the Senator from Missouri to strike out the equivalent-disability clause in the bill, in my judgment, is very unjust. If we are to do anything on the subject, that ought to be retained in the bill. I have received from a very large number of soldiers embraced within this class a very interesting statement describing their physical condition. We have here about us every day a number of ex-soldiers who illustrate the injustice of such a proceeding as that, where soldiers have not actually suffered amputation, but have suffered so great physical disability, resulting from wounds or otherwise, from their service as to make them in many cases deserving of greater liberality, if possible, from Congress than they would have deserved had they actually suffered amputation.

I recognize the importance at this stage of our proceeding of being as brief as possible in presenting my views and the views of the committee on the subject, and I shall hasten to a conclusion. Under the existing law the soldier who lost a hand or a foot receives $18 per month. This bill proposes to raise the pension to $40 per month. One who has lost a leg at the knee-joint or above it, or an arm at the elbow-joint or above it, now receives $24 per month, and it is proposed to raise this class to $40 per month. Those who have suffered amputation at the hip-joint receive $37.50 per month, and the proposed bill gives them $40, an increase of only $2.50 a month.

It was, I think, the general opinion of the committee that if we were to legislate upon the question at all we ought to graduate the rates somewhat with respect to the actual physical disability suffered in the several classes of cases covered by the bill, and that it would be unjust to grant in the one case an increase of $22 a month, in another of $16, and in another of only $2.50 per month.

In view of these conclusions, the minority of the committee, whose report I signed, has presented an amendment to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate for a moment. That amendment proposes to raise the $18 class to $24, the $24 class to $30, the $31.25 class, those who have been disabled from performing manual labor and who need some attention from other persons, but who are not permanently disabled, to $40; those who have lost a foot or hand, who now receive $36 per month, $40; and those who have suffered amputation at the knee joint to $40 from $37.50. The amendment presented by the Senator from New Hampshire also proposes to cover two other very meritorious classes of pensioners, those who have lost an eye or who were so injured as to be rendered deaf or partially deaf.

Under the existing law the soldiers who lost one eye received a pension of only $4 a month. We regard that as grossly unjust to that class. The soldier who is permanently and totally deaf receives only $13 a month under existing law. It is proposed by the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire to increase the pension of those who have lost one eye from $4 to $12 a month and allow them an equitable increase for any greater injury by affecting the sight of the other eye not exceeding $40 a month. That, of course, would be graded on the certificates of the surgeons in the Pension Office. For total deafness it is proposed to increase the present rate from $13 a month to $30 a month, and to make an equitable allowance for any disability of that character of a less degree, leaving that also to be settled by the tests of the surgical examination.

This I believe covers all the cases of specific disabilities, so called under the law, included within the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire; but there is another very important provision in that amendment, which is to increase the total rate which is now divided into fractions according to disability by the practice of the Pension Office from $18 to $24 a month. It was thought by the Senators who agree to that report and generally by the Senators composing the committee that if we were to increase pensions in cases of specific disability we ought to reach this class, who in many instances, I think, are entitled to as great pensions as those who have suffered an actual amputation of an arm or a leg. Therefore the bill proposes, as I stated, to increase the maximum which may be allowed in other cases to $24 a month, leaving it to the Department to regulate the amount that should be allowed according to the disability.

I think that this proposition covers all known classes of pensioners now on the rolls except those not invalid and except the cases of widows and orphan children. I confess that it was with very considerable hesitation that I agreed to the report and to have this amendment proposed here without inquiring into the claims of the widows of soldiers of the late war. I think we shall have to meet that question in the future if we do not meet it now. We have been appealed to by numbers of that class, and I think they urge with a great deal of force and reason that they are certainly as much entitled to liberal consideration from the Government in its bounty as those whose husbands survived the war. But there is no proposition on that subject before the Senate. I mention it simply that Senators may take it into consideration when they come to act upon this subject, for I think that the whole question ought to be carefully considered, and that whatever action is taken ought to be a reasonable and proper graduation with regard to disabilities, and that it ought to be symmetrical, that it ought not to be, as has been too often the case in legislation in former years, action only on one particular class of cases, disregarding others who may be and often are quite as meritorious.

The Commissioner of Pensions has had the kindness also to make an estimate as to what will be the increase of the annual pension-roll if the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire should be adopted. Senators will find that statement in the report submitted by my colleague on the committee, the Senator from New Hampshire, on the last page. The statement from the Commissioner of Pensions is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1883.

Memorandum.

Thirty-six hundred and thirty-one pensioners who have lost one hand or one foot, now receiving $18 per month, and to be increased to $24 per month. Net annual increase, $261,432.

Fifty-three hundred and eighty who have suffered amputation at or above the knee, or the elbow, now receiving $24, and to be increased to $30 per month. Net annual increase, $419,760.

Sixty who have suffered amputation at the hip-joint, now receiving $37, and to be increased to $40 per month. Net annual increase, $180.

One hundred and fifty who have suffered amputation at the shoulder-joint, now at $24, and to be increased to $40 per month (this number estimated). Net annual increase, $28,800.

Fifteen who have lost one hand and one foot, now receiving $36, and to be increased to $40 per month. Net annual increase, $720.

One hundred and twenty-five totally deaf, now receiving $13, and to be increased to $30 per month. Net annual increase, $25,500.

Two thousand who are pensioned for impaired hearing, less than total deafness, now receiving $1, $2, $4, and $6 per month, and to receive an equitable portion of $30 per month. Net annual increase (estimated), $312,000.

Two thousand who have lost one eye (estimated), now receiving $4 per month, and to be increased to $12 per month. Net annual increase, $192,000.

Four thousand (estimated) who are receiving a pension for impaired sight, other than the loss of one eye or of total blindness, now receiving the several rates from $2 to $16 per month, and to receive an equitable proportion of $40 per month. The net annual increase is estimated at $700,000.

Nineteen thousand four hundred and twenty-three pensioners now receiving $10, $12, $14, $16 per month, who will be entitled to a proportion of $24 per month, and the net annual increase is $1,398,456.

Eighty-eight hundred and forty-seven who have a disability equivalent to loss of a hand or a foot now receiving $18, and to be increased to $24, $30, and $40 per month. Net annual increase (estimated), $1,667,804.

Fifteen hundred and fifty-two now disabled for the performance of any manual labor, receiving $24 per month, and to be increased to $40 per month. Net annual increase, $287,998.

Two hundred and thirty-two now receiving $31.25 and to receive $40 per month. Net annual increase, $24,360.

Add $100,000 for commissioned officers and the addition to the roll since June 30, 1882, and the net annual increase for all classes is estimated at $5,429,010.

That is a careful analysis of all cases on the pension-roll covered by the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire. Senators should bear in mind that it only covers those now upon the pension-roll. It will appear that the increase of expenditures on account of pensions will not be as much for those now actually upon the pension-roll, under the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire, as would result from the passage of the bill as it came to us from the House. Of course pending cases will add somewhat to this expenditure; but it is the opinion of the Commissioner, and in this the Senator from New Hampshire and myself concur, that it will not result in a very large increase, for the reason that this class of pensioners are rapidly passing away. That to my mind is one consideration for further extending the liberality of the Government to them. It is stated in this report that the probability is that the annual increase will not exceed $6,000,000 or $7,000,000. I think that is a pretty fair estimate, so far as I am able to understand the figures presented to us by the Commissioner.

On the general question as to the propriety of any increase at this time I should like to read to the Senate some cases where examinations have been made by surgeons, and I assure Senators that they appeal strongly to me, as they have done so personally, many of them presenting their cases to me and some of them appearing before the committee. The following paper was furnished to me from the record of those examinations:

Representative cases of effects of amputation—Index to physicians' statements of pensioners who have suffered the loss of limbs.

1. Name and case of pensioner: Christopher A. Miller, suffering nervous prostration from necrosis of the left femur. Names of physicians: Daniel Kernborts, M. D., Dr. Joseph Frosek, S. C. Lane, M. D., all of San Francisco. These statements indorsed by General W. S. ROSECRANS, Member of Congress, and JOHN T. FARLEY, United States Senator.

2. Name and case of pensioner: William Darling, Fish Creek, Door County, Wisconsin; loss lower limb, suffering partial paralysis of the whole side, caused by the nervous shock. Name of physician: A. MacEacham, M. D.

3. Name and case of pensioner: Ezra Reagles, Richland County, Wisconsin; suffering from tumor on the end of the stump, an irritability of the nervous system. Name of physician: Dr. W. W. Stewart.

4. Name and case of pensioner: Jacob Barner, La Fayersville; loss right arm, suffers inflammation of the stump and swelling, also spasms of the facial nerve, &c., under treatment for two years constantly. Name of physician: H. B. Potter, M. D.

5. Name and case of pensioner: Peter Myers, Union Grove, Wisconsin; loss lower limb, suffers with tender stump, inflammation and suppuration frequently, also neuralgia. Name of physician: Dr. A. L. Buchar.

6. Name and case of pensioner: Stephen H. Powell, Elizabeth, New Jersey; loss lower limb, suffers severe neuralgia of the stump, general debility, and piles. Name of physician: Robert Metcalfe, M. D.

7. Name and case of pensioner: John P. Hartman, Versailles, Illinois; loss right arm, suffers from wasting of the anterior and posterior muscles of the chest and wasting away of the whole left side and partial paralytic condition. Name of physician: John Bond, M. D.

8. Name and case of pensioner: ——— ———, Marseilles, Illinois; the difference as stated between amputation and useless limb, the severing of muscles, arteries, veins and nerves, in amputation causes shrinkage of the parts thereby affecting the whole body. Name of physician: B. Wilson, M. D.

9. Name and case of pensioner: Captain John M. Meyer, Allentown, New Jersey; loss of arm, suffers from nervous affections caused by amputation. Name of physician: A. Alex. Howe, M. D.

10. Name and case of pensioner: Joseph Gamble, Sardis, Ohio; loss of lower limb, suffers erysipelas and rheumatism and wasting of the whole body. Name of physician: Dr. T. J. Rowe.

11. Name and case of pensioner: Henry Fluke, Berg, Franklin County, Missouri; loss of left arm, suffers rheumatism and nervous disturbance. Name of physician: Charles Workhauson, M. D.

12. Name and case of pensioner: H. Brown, Lincoln, Centre, Kansas; constant sufferer from paralysis. Name of physician: Frank Cogswell, M. D.

13. Name and case of pensioner: Charles Carpenter, Holmesburgh, Pennsylvania; loss of right leg, suffers from nervous affection, tender and sensitive stump, affects his general health. Name of physicians: Benjamin Pennebukn, M. D., J. Pearson Willets, M. D., Samuel J. Fort, M. D.

14. Name and case of pensioner: Obediah Underwood, Knox County, Ohio; when healed caused abscess of the left hip, never healed. Name of physicians: A. C. Scott, M. D., D. H. Coleman, M. D.

15. Name and case of pensioner: James Brodie, Mound City, Illinois; loss right arm at shoulder, and two fingers of left hand, wounded in leg, suffers general debility. Name of physician: N. R. Casey, M. D.

16. Name and case of pensioner: Howard Allen, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; loss of lower limb, suffers inflammation of stump and abnormal condition of nervous system. Name of physician: W. C. Phelps, M. D.

17. Name and case of pensioner: Richard Burke, Medina, New York; loss of hand, suffers neuralgia and rheumatic disturbance from nerve injuries. Name of physician: R. S. Bishop, M. D.

18. Name and case of pensioner: L. D. Coombs, M. D., Colorado Springs, Colorado; loss right leg, has suffered three amputations, constant neuralgic pains, nervous system entirely broken down. Name of physician: L. D. Coombs, M. D.

19. Name and case of pensioner: George S. Casey, McLeansborough, Hamilton County, Indiana; loss of arm, suffers wasting of muscles, constant pain, and stump which discharges pus. Name of physician: R. Millard, M. D.

20. Name and case of pensioner: James I. Edwards, Bethlehem, Pennsylvania; amputated limb forms pus cavities from necrosed bone, and irritation of the nerves. Name of physician: A. B. Stout, M. D.

21. Name and case of pensioner: James I. Edmunds, Bethlehem, Pennsylvania; loss left leg, suffers necrosed bone; very tender and chronic indolent ulcer on the stump; had erysipelas. Name of physician: C. E. Humphrey, M. D.

22. Name and case of pensioner: Charles Eaton, Cincinnati, Ohio; loss right arm, suffers nervous irritation of the stump, also fracture of left arm, disabling it. Name of physician: O. D. Norton, M. D., late acting assistant surgeon, Washington Park Hospital.

23. Name and case of pensioner: William Hael, Verndale, Minnesota; loss of arm, suffering constantly; severe pain from severing of nerves, &c., growing helpless. Name of physician: Dr. W. W. Morell.

24. Name and case of pensioner: Michael Fumey, Liberty Centre, Ohio; loss left leg, suffers loss of general health; increasing weakness of amputated leg, extending to the whole left side. Name of physician: D. E. Haug, M. D.

25. Name and case of pensioner: Samuel Stout, Salem, Massachusetts; loss right foot, the severing of nerves and arteries causing a severe shock to the system, causing debilitating effect on the general health and strength. Name of physician: Thomas Kittredge, M. D.

26. Name and case of pensioner: William Stockdale, Oden, Indiana; loss of limb at thigh, bone and nerve but thinly covered; suffers with severe sciatica in the stump constantly. Name of physician: B. F. Moffitt, M. D.

27. Name and case of pensioner: Jonathan Stamp, Newfield, New York; loss left arm; amputation caused a severe nerve shock; was ill over a year from erysipelas in the stump; suffers constant pain from severed nerves and inflammatory condition of erysipelatous character, and tender bone. Name of physician: W. A. McCorn, M. D.

28. Name and case of pensioner: John Scott, Bath, Steuben County, New York; loss of left arm and finger of right hand, totally prevents him from earning a living. Name of physician: J. S. Dolson.

29. Name and case of pensioner: A. Shafer, Mount Ephraim, Ohio; loss of lower limb; suffers neuralgia of the nerves; treatment affords only temporary relief. Name of physician: M. F. Neville, M. D.

30. Name and case of pensioner: Daniel L. Saeger, North Manchester, Indiana; loss of leg, suffers projecting bone, tightly covered with the integument; has neuralgia of the stump. Name of physician: J. M. Walsheimer, M. D.

31. Name and case of pensioner: Louis Rabbideau, Medford, Wisconsin; loss of leg, is a physical wreck and unable to earn anything. Name of physician: Fred Barrett, M. D.

32. Name and case of pensioner: John Reagan, Fall River, Massachusetts; unfit to perform manual labor. Name of physician: James E. Sullivan, M. D.

33. Name and case of pensioner: John W. Reagers, Delavan, Wisconsin; loss of leg, suffers constantly since the amputation; kidney trouble; also with hip, knee, and ankle. Name of physician: J. Cook Sultman, M. D.

34. Name and case of pensioner: Nathan L. Newcomb, Cleveland, Ohio; loss of right arm, suffers spasmodic nervous affections from injury to the nerves, numbness of remaining limbs, and sudden shocks to whole nervous system. Name of physician: S. L. Thorpe, M. D., dispensary physician, H. H. Medical College.

35. Name and case of pensioner: Charles S. Nehimiah, Lowell, Indiana; loss of right leg, suffers suppurating stump; spicules of bone are thrown off; is entirely helpless. Name of physician: John E. Davis, M. D.

36. Name and case of pensioner: Alexander Perry, Penn Yan, New York; loss left leg, suffers from imperfect amputation; lack or tissue or covering, intense pain, nervous system affected, and rheumatism. Name of physician: J. M. Waddell, M. D.

37. Name and case of pensioner: William Han, Alfordsville, Indiana; loss left leg, suffered two amputations; has ulcerated stump and disagreeable sensation; toes of the amputated limb cause much suffering. Names of physicians: John S. Mitchell, M. D., A. W. Bingham, M. D.

38. Name and case of pensioner: Josiah G. Messer, Mechanicstown, Maryland; loss right arm, suffers from severed nerves and arteries. Name of physician: Dr. M. E. Leatherman.

39. Name and case of pensioner: William H. Ingle, McClean, Ohio; loss left arm at shoulder joint, suffers atrophia of muscles of shoulder and chest, shortness of breath, neuralgia of the stump, and general nervous debility. Name of physician: E. B. Harrison, M. D.

40. Name and case of pensioner: Terrence Monahan, Lowell, Massachusetts; loss left lower extremity, suffers severe neuralgia and tender stump; never free from pain except when under an opiate. Name of physician: Stephen J. Johnson, M. D.

41. Name and case of pensioner: Edward Kennedy, Saint Louis; loss right arm at shoulder; nervous system shattered; partial paralysis. Name of physician: J. J. Rowe, M. D.

42. Name and case of pensioner: Surgeon's statement sworn to showing the effect of an amputation upon the nervous and circulatory systems differing from a useless limb not amputated. Name of physician: Allen S. Smith, physician and surgeon.

43. Name and case of pensioner: Ephraim Gross, Toledo; loss right leg; irritation of the limb and nerves drag greatly upon the constitution. Name of physician: J. T. Wood, M. D.

44. Name and case of pensioner: Jacob Kapp, Ripley, Ohio; loss of leg, suffers irritability and nervousness of the stump. Name of physician: J. L. Wylie, M. D.

45. Name and case of pensioner: John Morgan, Coal Creek Furnace; loss of left lower limb, suffers neuralgia of the stump, decaying of the muscles, and hernia. Name of physician: Joel Smith, M. D.

46. Name and case of pensioner: William H. Moore, New Haven, Connecticut; loss of right foot, causing a third amputation of leg below knee; health permanently impaired in consequence of prolonged suffering. Name of physician: Francis Bacon, M. D., late surgeon United States volunteers.

I am aware that there is no government extant to-day, nor has there ever been in the history of the world, which has been so liberal as ours to its citizens who have served it in war; but though that be the fact, neither is there any precedent for this country. This is a Republic which must depend in time of war (and no one is far-seeing enough to know how soon that may befall us again) upon its citizen soldiery. So far as I am able to understand the public opinion of this country, of my State especially, the people desire that Congress shall go to the utmost limit that it can afford to proceed in providing for the necessitous, maimed, wounded, and suffering survivors of the late war for the Union. I sympathize with that sentiment, and I am in favor of a large increase to this class of pensioners. I would go as far and do as much as any Senator or any citizen to prevent fraud upon the pension law; and I desire to be as liberal as I think we can afford to be in extending to the soldiers of the late war that bounty which the munificence of this Government is capable of extending to those who saved it in time of peril.

Mr. PLATT. I move as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to strike out all of the bill after the word "duty," in line 6, and to insert in lieu thereof what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Shall have lost one hand or one foot, or been totally or permanently disabled in the same, or otherwise so disabled as to render their incapacity to perform manual labor equivalent to the loss of a hand or a foot, shall receive a pension of $24 per month; that all persons now on the pension-roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who in like manner shall have lost either an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, or shall have been otherwise so disabled as to be incapacitated for performing any manual labor, but not so much as to require regular personal aid and attendance, shall receive a pension of $30 per month: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to repeal section 4699 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or to change the rate of $18 per month therein mentioned to be proportionately divided for any degree of disability established for which section 4695 makes no provision.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it seems to me that we had better at once amend this bill and declare that all men upon the pension-roll shall draw $40 a month, for it will come to that. It strikes me that the laws we have already are good enough. By the present law the pension is graduated according to the degree of disability. But here is a proposition to put a few thousand men, meritorious no doubt, upon the pension-roll; and then another clause declares that all other pensioners who have received injury equivalent to the disability of losing a hand or a foot shall be put upon the pension-roll likewise at $40 a month.

We have now applying and already on the pension-roll nearly half a million persons. Does not anybody know that the mere loss of a hand or a foot does not amount to the same degree of disability that a gunshot or a bayonet wound through the body may produce upon the muscular or nervous system? Suppose you say that a man who has received an injury equal to the loss of a foot shall be put upon the pension-roll at $40 a month, for that is a provision of the bill, how easy will it be to procure the certificate of country doctors that a stiff knee equals the loss of a foot or a leg, that a stiff elbow equals the loss of an arm, that a stiff neck equals the loss of the head?

Mr. President, I have always been on the side of the soldier. I do not know that I have voted against a single pension bill during my service in the Senate. A brave man always sympathizes with another, even though he fights in an army opposed to him. We cherish no animosity; we are for giving pensions to honest soldiers; but to open the door as this bill will do to plunder from the Treasury I can not give my assent to. It is worse than the arrearages-of-pensions act. Fully half of the men now on the pension-roll will make out a disability equal to the loss of a foot or an arm. We know that a man may lose a hand or a foot and be a stout, strong man, able to perform any manual or intellectual work in the world. My observation has been that men wounded in the body suffer more ailment, more inconvenience, and are more greatly disabled than those who lose a hand or a foot.

Instead of increasing the pension-list two, three, four, five, and the highest estimate, I believe, is nine million dollars a year, your pension-list would be increased more than $50,000,000 a year. Who shall say that a stiff elbow or a stiff shoulder is not equal to the loss of an arm? Who shall say that a varicose vein in the leg, which impedes the man's walk, is not equal to the loss of his leg?

I like always to see soldiers pensioned. I have no feeling of unkindness or animosity toward them. One brave man loves another, although he fights against him under a different flag; a fellow-feeling makes them kind toward each other. We do not object to it down South, although we pay a part of the pensions ourselves. Our boys get no pensions. You have appropriated ample sums to buy artificial limbs. You have gathered up the remains of your men from all the battlefields of the South. You have put them into costly cemeteries; you have erected monuments of marble and brass and granite; you have fenced them in with iron and with stone, you have decorated them, and you have your annual celebrations. We have with us down South no government to take that care of our men.

Mr. HOAR. Do not the Union soldiers of the State of Kentucky receive pensions like those in other States?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course we do, and I will come to that in a moment. I am not complaining of soldiers receiving pensions, but I do complain of making one-half of the people of this country pensioners and making the others pay those pensions. I was just saying we did not complain of it, although down in the extreme South we do not share in its benefits. Our brave men who fought on the confederate side have usually been buried on the battlefields where they fell. A few of them have been gathered by private enterprise into cemeteries, and those cemeteries are neglected, overgrown with rank weeds and briers, and the little boards put at the head and foot to tell who the soldier was have rotted away in time and it is impossible now to distinguish who it is that lies there.

We do not complain of that, but we do complain that you attempt here by reorganizing the whole pension-list to put from 100,000 to 200,000 men on the pension-rolls at $40 a month, for that would be the result. I am opposed to it as much as I have been in favor of these pensions all my life. I have rarely, if ever, voted against allowing a soldier's claim for pension on this floor, and I regret that a proposition so monstrous as this has been presented to the Senate that I can not vote for it. This is a little too steep for me. I can stand a great deal, but I can not go to the full extent of this law. The fact is, the majority of the committee propose to indefinitely postpone the bill, which ought to be done, and I hope will be done. The law is good enough as it stands. It gives to a man a pension in proportion to the degree of his disability, ranging from one-fourth, one-half, and three-fourths up to full disability, and reaching as high as $71 a month.

Sir, the object of a pension law is not to enrich the pensioner; it is to protect him against want, to keep him from the poor-house, to prevent him from appealing to public charity. Forty dollars a month is a fortune for a common man. Twelve times forty, $480 a year, is a princely income to a plain Western or Southern man. One hundred and fifty dollars a year is ample to clothe and feed any man who has not expensive tastes and desires, and to tax the people North, South, East, and West to put from 150,000 to 200,000 more men on the pension-roll at $40 a month is a thing that can never get my support.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I have this moment come into the Senate Chamber, having been called out necessarily, and I have heard the half dozen concluding sentences of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS]. The degree of accuracy with which that Senator speaks on this subject is quite amazing to me. He speaks of this bill in behalf of the one-legged and one-armed soldiers of the country as a bill to place, I think he said, from 100,000 to 150,000 additional pensioners on the roll. I have the statistics and figures here on the subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that he could not have heard what I said. I know he does not want to misrepresent me. I said for the few thousands of one-legged and one-armed men whose pensions it would increase the bill would amount to very little, but there is a clause in the bill which proposes to give all pensioners $40 per month who received disabilities equal to the loss of a hand or the loss of an arm or the loss of a leg, and that to put them on the pension-roll at $40 per month would open the doors of the Treasury to the plunder of two or three hundred thousand men, which in my judgment it will do.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am speaking of men who have suffered the loss of a limb. The feature of the bill spoken of by the Senator from Kentucky can be regulated hereafter. There are less than 15,000 persons who suffered amputation of a limb in 1870, and to-day one-half of those are dead and in their graves. The vital statistics on this subject are simply appalling. They show beyond all controversy or contradiction, as accurately as the work of an actuary of an insurance company can show anything, that the average diminution of a lifetime to one who has suffered the loss of a leg or an arm is fifteen years. The average lifetime of the soldier who suffered such loss at this time can not be over forty-five years. I hazard nothing in saying that in ten years, or fifteen years at most, nobody will be troubled and no Senator will be on this floor declaiming against a measure of relief for this class of pensioners; they will have been mustered into eternity. The facts and figures demonstrate this fact.

If the Senator from Kentucky thinks that $480 a year is too much to pay to these men for the remnant of their lifetime, shortened as it is on an average by fifteen years, he and I differ widely. It is the smallest and most contemptible pittance. Perhaps I should not use the word "contemptible," because the Government never can do full justice; but when you compare it as an equivalent to what has been lost in the service of the Government, when you speak of this money as something paying for what these people have lost, then it becomes utterly contemptible.

I am for this bill as a measure of justice, as far as it goes, but it is wholly inadequate. This Government never can repay the men who have suffered losses of this kind. I challenge the attention of the Pensions Committee, I challenge the attention of Senators, to the statement which I have made—that the vital statistics show this average loss of lifetime to men who have been mutilated by the loss of a limb, and that being an established fact I ask Senators whether they are willing to record their votes that $40 a month for the little remnant of life that is left is too much. My only regret is that we can not give them more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair). The question before the Senate is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. PLATT. I offered an amendment, which I supposed was in order, in the nature of an amendment to the amendment, but I have been informed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate that although he entertained it for the moment he does not think it is in order at this time. If the pending amendment should or should not prevail, I shall then offer my amendment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I desire to say only a few words on the amendment at this time. If it is the desire of the Senate to defeat the bill which has come from the House, House bill No. 1410, or a similar bill, that is one question; but if it is the desire of the Senate that this class of pensioners shall receive additional pensions to what they are now receiving, that is another question. I say that if the Senate desire to increase the pensions of one class of disabled soldiers, in my judgment it should be those proposed to be stricken out, those who suffered an equivalent disability, because, as my friend has stated, there are those who suffer really more of actual suffering and of inability to take care of themselves, to secure the sustenance of life, who have received injuries which are not so patent to the eye probably as the loss of a limb, but really more injurious. It covers the case of the soldier who has come out of the war with the asthma, with consumption, with hernia, with paralysis of a limb, not requiring amputation, from the effect of a gunshot wound; and I only wish to suggest at this time that at least that clause should be kept in the bill, and if it should ever happen that a majority of the Senate disagree entirely to an increase of pensions to any class, then that should be squarely voted on.

Mr. SLATER. I do not desire to say very much upon this bill, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a few facts before they enter upon the passage of this bill.

I think that some measure increasing the rates of pension will be passed. The bill as it came from the House will add to the pension-list immediately, that is, to the annual cost of the pension-list of those now upon the roll, known to be there by the office, who are suffering and are known to be suffering the disabilities described in the bill, $5,187,564. That is for those who have lost a hand or an arm or a foot or a leg, to say nothing about equivalent disabilities, to say nothing about the increase that may come from the large number of claims now on file, although that class perhaps will not be very largely increased in the future. It is fair to be presumed that most of those who have suffered this class of disabilities are already upon the pension-roll; but from the statements of the Commissioner of Pensions there must be added to the figures already given for claims now pending of this class $892,000 more, making for that class $6,079,564.

I should have said that at this time the equivalent disabilities for the loss of a leg, an arm, a foot, or a hand will be $2,021,244, and for equivalent disabilities of those now on the pension-roll, which are supposed to number in all 10,925, which would make a net annual increase of $2,716,329 for equivalent disabilities.

Taking into account the $892,000 which would be due on claims pending, as the bill now stands $6,079,564 is the actual increase which must take place in the increased cost of the annual pension-roll under this bill. This, however, if that were all, would be perhaps but a small matter to be considered, because, as has been stated by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], the vital statistics show the rapid decrease of this class of pensioners, and they will not be increased, so far as the loss of limbs is concerned, very rapidly in the future. But there is another feature that must not be forgotten in this respect—as to what will come under the class of equivalent disabilities, with 250,000 now on the pension-roll and some 166,000 who it is estimated must go on the pension-roll by reason of claims now filed. As the years go on these equivalent disabilities are constantly and steadily increasing, and what we may figure to-day as being the possible or probable estimate a year or two years hence will be found to be very far below the actual figures.

It will be remembered that when the arrears-of-pensions bill was before the Senate there were vague guesses that it would cost the country but some $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 at most to meet all the requirements that bill proposed. That bill has been in force some four years, and we have paid out something like $100,000,000 on it, and the estimates are that it will require $200,000,000 more to meet its requirements. I will not undertake to say that if this bill shall become a law any such extraordinary figures will be required to meet its provisions, but we may expect a very much larger amount under the head of equivalent disabilities than can now possibly be estimated.

I believe that the Commissioner of Pensions has given as careful an estimate as it is possible for him to make, but with all the care he can bring to it and all the attention he can give to it it is little more than a shrewd and careful guess in this matter, and, as I have said, as the years roll on these disabilities that are now but trifling, that are now but small and are of the lower grade in the pension-list, will gradually year by year be growing into the higher grades of disability, and in that way under the clause as to equivalent disabilities a very much larger number will be found upon the list in a few years from now than we find to-day or can estimate to-day. Under this head, as has well been said by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], this class is certainly as deserving as those who have lost an arm or a hand or a foot or a leg. Who can tell the sufferings of those who are suffering disabilities of the kind mentioned by the Senator? They are certainly as severe, they certainly affect their means of procuring a livelihood quite as greatly as the other class of disabilities, and any bill that should seek to increase the pensions of one class at the expense of the other is inequitable.

Mr. President, the bill itself it seems to me is inequitable in its terms. Certainly no Senator will claim that the loss of a foot or a hand is equivalent to the loss of an arm at the shoulder or a leg at the hip-joint. There is no relation between them whatever; and to put them without discrimination at the same point of $40 a month is certainly injustice. When you have done this, the men who have lost a leg at the hip-joint or an arm at the shoulder-joint will say, "Those men who have only lost a foot, who have only lost a hand, or have only lost a leg at or above the knee, or an arm at the elbow or immediately above the elbow, are getting $40 a month; we are much greater sufferers; our disabilities are of a much greater class, and we ought to have $50 or $60 a month." That is what this bill means. It means not only to raise the pensions of these particular classes, but to raise all of them.

I object to the bill for this reason: There is a large class of pensioners who are drawing only $8 a month who are meritorious, who ought to be considered before any of these other classes are considered; for who shall say to the man who is scarcely able to go about and yet is not entirely disabled, who may be able to work a little or do a little something, that he can not go on the list to draw more than $8 a month though he is scarcely able to keep body and soul together? These cases are very numerous. The increase made by this bill means, if anything, in a very short time not only the raising of this class under the equivalent disabilities clause to the rate of $40 a month, but it means the raising of the entire pension-list to a very large advance in this respect.

If any measure is to pass, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is the one that should be adopted. It is equitable in its terms and it is graduated in such a way that, so far as the classes referred to it are concerned, all are equally considered. The different disabilities as related to each other are fairly considered and fairly apportioned in the proposed amendment.

But there is another reason which, in my judgment, ought to admonish the Senate not to enter upon a disturbance of the present pension rates. I admit that in a very short time, perhaps in the course of a year or two, there ought to be a general revision of the rates of pension, from the lowest to the highest; but that ought not to be undertaken now; it ought not to be done at the present time, for the reason that there are to-day something like 200,000 or 250,000 pension claims still undisposed of, of which I think 166,000—but perhaps I have the numbers too large; it may be only 66,000—that the Commissioner estimates will be placed on the pension-list.

In common justice these claims ought to be considered and disposed of measurably before the office force is diverted again to considering the graduation and rerating of the pensioners already drawing pensions. It is but common justice, even if these parties are entitled to what is claimed for them, that they should wait until those who have not been able to have their cases heard and determined shall have their cases determined and then it will be time enough for a rerating to take place. I have no doubt when the business of the Pension Office in a year or two from now shall become less pressing, that there will be not only a disposition but a willingness on the part of the Senate and Congress to enter upon and rerate the entire pension-list from the lowest to the highest. It ought not to be interfered with until that time shall have arrived.

That is all I desire to say, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 7.

Mr. ROLLINS. It will evidently be necessary to have the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly. There is evidently no quorum in the Chamber now.

Mr. ROLLINS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The proposed amendment is, in line 7, after the word "foot," to strike out "or shall have suffered disability equal thereto."

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, here is a bill which very likely in its results will take a hundred million dollars from the Treasury of the United States, extending it over the years during which it shall have an operation. I have refrained from saying anything on this subject, because I felt that if the Senate of the United States had no more interest in such a bill than to occupy ten or fifteen of the chairs of the Senate while it was under discussion, it was scarcely worth while for me to say anything; but upon this amendment I desire to say a few words. If Senators do not deem it their duty to attend the discussion of this bill in the Senate, they may possibly, after the matter is over, read it in the RECORD.

I want to protest here against what I believe will be a great injustice if it shall be done. I want to protest against striking out of the bill the clause increasing the pension of those whose disabilities are equal to those who have lost a hand or a foot, an arm or a leg. To do that will be simply giving an increase to every man who has lost a foot or a hand; it will be shutting out from the benefits of that increase every wounded soldier in the land, no matter how much he suffered from wounds or how great his disability is from wounds, so long as he does not require the aid and attendance of another person. It takes the whole class of wounded soldiers, those whose life is but a living death, and leaves them at $18 a month, while it takes the men who have lost arms or legs, but who are still able to do something, and increases their pension to $40.

It does another thing. If a man has lost his arm at or above the elbow or his leg at or above the knee he gets $24 a month for it; but the man who for any other cause is so disabled that he can perform no manual labor whatever only gets $24. Now, strike this clause from this bill and you will increase the pensions of those who having lost an arm or leg are still able to do something toward earning a living, and you will say that those who are unable to do anything from other causes shall have no increase.

I protest against it as a rank injustice. If there is to be any increase here it should include this class of men whose disabilities are equal to those who have lost hands or feet, arms or legs. I can conceive of no reason which can be given for the one case and not given for the other.

I have heard it suggested that there may be some enjoying this pension for disabilities equivalent to the loss of an arm or leg who are enjoying it unworthily; but that same thing may be true of those who are enjoying pensions for the loss of limbs. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] in his place stated here not long ago that his attention had been called to fraudulent cases where people were enjoying pensions for the loss of limbs when they did not lose them in the service. I want to say that from an examination of a great many records in the Pension Office, from all the information which I have been able to obtain, I am satisfied that the Pension Office has been extremely conservative in this matter of recognizing equivalent disabilities.

No man gets an $18 pension upon the ground of a disability equivalent to the loss of a hand or a foot until he gets it as the result of surgical examination and testimony showing that his loss is fully equivalent, and under the new administration of the Pension Office he can not get it by the examination and a certificate of a single surgeon, but only on the report of a board of surgeons. It is possible that some man may have imposed on the surgeons or the board of surgeons or the Pension Office, but the great class of those who are receiving $18 and $24 because their disabilities are equivalent to those who have lost hands or feet or arms or legs are, in my judgment, more entitled to it as a class than those who are enjoying it for the loss of limb.

I do not desire to speak longer on this subject, but I desire to repeat here what was said to me only last night by a gallant soldier, a pensioner, who is enjoying a pension for the loss of his leg. He said to me, "My face would burn with very shame if the Government should give me $40 a month and should not extend it to those who were suffering disabilities equal to mine;" and the whole country would say so.

Mr. HARRIS. A majority of the Committee on Pensions reported adversely to this bill and recommended its indefinite postponement. In deference to that report, as well as my own opinion as to the merits and propriety of passing this bill, I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed, in order that we may test the question, and if such is the judgment of the Senate we may end the matter without debate on the various amendments that have already been indicated and will be insisted upon if the bill is to continue before the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. Is that motion in order after the yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HARRIS. There is no question about that. It is in order at any moment.

Mr. BLAIR. Of course that motion will dispose of this whole matter.

Mr. HARRIS. If it carries.

Mr. BLAIR. I shall be obliged to say a few words at this time which I had otherwise designed to postpone to a later period of the discussion.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL], who has charge of the bill, the chairman of the committee, under very great difficulties and in the absence of almost the entire Senate, made a general statement of the conditions which exist and which seem to require of the country some increase of the pensions which it is paying to the classes of soldiers embraced in this bill. He gave to some extent a history of the rise and progress of the events that have attended the bill from its introduction in the other House. It would certainly seem that if public sentiment had indicated anything or can indicate anything by petitions, by memorials, by the reports of committees from all parts of the country, by discussions in the press, and in every way that a free people contrive to make known their sentiments to their representatives in legislative halls, this much at least must be considered as established, that some increase of pensions to the classes who are embraced in this bill should be allowed. I do not think there can be any question whatever remaining in the mind of any Senator whose attention has been closely called to these exhibitions of public sentiment that it does exist, and that there is a demand for legislation of some kind.

Of course in a matter so intricate as this is, the matter of the arrangement and apportionment of rates of pensions duly and equitably among the various classes of those who have suffered in the cause of the country, the general public can not possess that minutiæ of information which is essential to accurate and correct legislation as to these various classes, but the great overmastering fact that something should be done, that there should be some substantial increase, the public, I think, by these manifestations have demonstrated. The House of Representatives, in deference to this public sentiment and with scarcely a distinction of party, for the principal advocate of this bill in the other House was a Democrat, the war governor of Pennsylvania, Mr. CURTIN, enacted and sent to us this bill. It is very brief, and I will read it:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension-roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall have lost one arm, one hand, one leg, or one foot, or shall have suffered disability equal thereto, shall be entitled to a pension of $40 per month.

It will be observed that this bill, which has been sanctioned by the other House and sent to us in this almost unanimous way, as I have said, reaches only a few of the several cases and comparatively a small number of those who are entitled to pensions under the general law of the land; and I may say that it reaches but a very small proportion of those who are entitled to an increase of pensions, if these classes are themselves entitled to it.

When this bill reached the Senate, providing as it did for the raising to $40 of the minimum of pension for specific disabilities which hitherto has been $18 a month, so that all these other classes drawing a larger amount would naturally, by the logic of this legislation if it should be enacted, be carried correspondingly higher, and into very high figures too, it struck, I think, the majority of the committee as a bill which required further and very careful consideration; and although founded in a sentiment of justice and a disposition to do justice, nevertheless it was in its terms so broad and so liberal to these classes that as the basis of future legislation it must tax most heavily the Treasury of the country, and perhaps far more heavily than those who advocated the bill themselves conceived, and more heavily than even the merits of the pensioners themselves, great as they are, would justify in extorting from the Treasury of the land.

The bill was consequently a long time pending in our committee. We did not act upon it during the last session, although the pressure upon the committee was very heavy and very strong. It was felt by the majority of the committee that if anything was done, all that justice required should be done, and it was as well to attempt to do it now wholly as to attempt to do it now in part, and that if any justice was done it should be justice to all. Therefore we postponed final action of the committee on this bill until the present session, with the intention during the vacation and the earlier part of the present session to give further consideration to the whole subject, with a view to reporting to the Senate, if we could, either against the bill as a whole or reporting something to the Senate for action by the Senate and the other House which would cover the whole subject and do justice to all, and do it fully and do it finally, so that we should not be troubled session after session and Congress after Congress by the anxious questioning of those to whom justice had been denied if we were, and when, to do justice to them.

We reached final action in the committee, and when we came to vote there was considerable divergence of sentiment. Four members of the committee were against any action in the direction of increase whatever, and those members of the committee submitted what is here called the majority report, but as a matter of fact a majority of the committee was in favor of some increase of pensions, so that this bill does not come into the Senate antagonized by a majority of the committee. It comes into the Senate really antagonized by four members in all, while the other members of the committee appear before this body recommending amendments to the bill which came from the House, differing in degree and in the extent of justice which is done, but all looking to an increase. Two Senators, I would say, were in favor of the House bill as it reached us, without modification, not objecting particularly to an extension of its provisions to other classes who were not included at all, but the measure of justice to those who were included, by the opinion of two members of the committee, was none too high even in the House bill, and they reported directly in its favor.

The honorable Senator who preceded me stated to the Chair his design in offering an amendment. That amendment when offered—and it is in print and accessible to all members of the Senate, and I presume many have read it—covers only a part of the cases which exist in the country, and which, as it seems to other members of the committee, require favorable legislation as much as those which are included in the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. I do not think among those who are in favor of some increase there is any antagonism to that amendment, provided that is all the Senate is disposed to do at the present time. It represents something that should be done. It does not, in my judgment, represent all that should be done; and it will leave the subject half dealt with and liable to and sure in fact, by reason of thus much having been attempted and thus much having been accomplished, to cause further claims to arise at subsequent sessions, and result ultimately in further action by Congress.

It therefore seemed to at least two members of the committee that the proper thing to do was to treat the subject as a whole, to confer with the Pension Office, thoroughly to study the subject as well as they could, and to endeavor by some comprehensive, systematic, and just legislation to provide for all at the same time; and it seemed to us that this was an opportune time to do justice (especially when justice costs money), for now if ever the Treasury is full. We have been legislating, or we have been wasting, it may ultimately prove to be, five or nearly six weeks of the most valuable legislative time almost that ever belonged to an American Congress, and during this time this bill has been pending, and the main object of that proposed legislation was to reduce the contents of the Treasury, to diminish the revenues of the country. In short, I mean by this simply to state that the Treasury is plethoric, that the people demand a reduction of revenue, and if there is justice in the claim of the pensioners of the United States or any portion of them for an increase, now if ever is the easiest time to do that justice; it is the proper time, and it ought not to be delayed.

Accordingly the honorable chairman of the committee and myself united in presenting to the Senate an amendment to the bill. I may say before I ask to have it read that it was prepared with a great deal of care, with reference to all classes who by general consent it is thought should have some increase of pension. After it was prepared it was submitted to the Pension Office, and the thorough criticism of the Commissioner and his assistants has been passed upon it. Any suggestions of modification or improvement which they gave to us have been incorporated in this amendment, and it is not improper that I should say that so far as the opinion of the Pension Office is of any consequence in this matter the proposed amendment is fully and cordially indorsed as sufficient in itself, as doing ample justice, as calculated to give peace so far as effort at future legislation is concerned, and as fixing in the belief of the office and in the belief of men who have examined it the limit sufficiently high to mark the utmost limit of generosity that should be expected of the Government.

I now ask the Secretary to read the proposed amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read for information.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and insert:

"That from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension-roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall have lost a hand or a foot, shall be entitled to a pension of $24 per month; all persons who in like manner shall have suffered amputation at or above the elbow or knee, at the rate of $30 per month; and all who shall in like manner have suffered amputation at the hip-joint or at the shoulder-joint, or who shall have lost one hand and one foot, or shall be totally disabled in one hand and one foot, or shall be otherwise so disabled as to be incapacitated for the performance of any manual labor, but not so much as to require the regular personal aid and attendance of another person, at the rate of $40 per month; and all persons who in like manner shall have contracted a disability equal or equivalent to any of the foregoing specified disabilities, shall be entitled to receive a pension per month of the amount hereby granted to such disability; and in case of amputation below a joint, but with such effect as to produce a disability equal to that produced by amputation at or above the joint, pension shall be paid as for the disability actually resulting from such amputation; and all persons who in like manner shall have lost the sight of one eye shall receive a pension at the rate of $12 per month; and in cases in which the injury to the one eye manifestly affects injuriously the sight of the other eye, or in which the other eye shall have been partially disabled in the service and line of duty as aforesaid, he shall be entitled to an equitable increase in his pension, not to exceed, when the loss of sight is less than total blindness, in the whole amount $40 per month; and all those who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, in the line of duty, by injury received or disease contracted, shall have totally lost the hearing of both ears, shall be entitled to receive a pension of $30 per month; and for any loss of hearing less than total deafness they shall receive an equitable portion thereof.

SEC. 2. That instead of the rate of $18 per month provided in section 4699 of the Revised Statutes, the rate of $24 per month may be proportionately divided for any degree of disability established for which neither the preceding section of this act nor section 4695 of the Revised Statutes make provision: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to reduce any pension now authorized by law; nor shall any pensioner be entitled to increase under this section until an examination shall show an increase in his actual disability except where the evidence on file shows the disability to be permanent in a degree entitling to the rate of pension then received, or when the character of the disability would not vary in a lesser degree.

SEC. 3. That no applicant for pension whose claim shall be granted hereafter shall receive arrears or any allowance of pension for time prior to the passage of this act greater than he would be entitled to receive by virtue of existing laws; but from and after the passage of this act his pension shall be computed in accordance therewith, if his disability be such as is included in its provisions.

SEC. 4. No claim agent or attorney shall be employed in the prosecution of claims for increase of pension under this act, but the Commissioner of Pensions shall make such payments without charge to the pensioner.

Mr. BLAIR. I asked for the reading of this proposed amendment for the reason that in the print the other night, to be found in the RECORD, a mistake occurred. The exception which should properly be at the end of the second section was inserted at the end of the first section, occasioning of course much difference in the meaning of the proposition, and, therefore, I should like to have this amendment incorporated in the RECORD itself as it really is. It was no one's fault, but a mistake of my own.

Now, Mr. President, at the risk of being a little tedious, but because I believe it to be necessary, I propose to state very briefly the essence of the pension law. It is to be found in section 4692 of the Revised Statutes and it provides that—

Every person specified in the several classes enumerated in the following section, who has been, since the 4th day of March, 1861, or who is hereafter disabled under the conditions therein stated, shall, upon making due proof of the fact, according to such forms and regulations as are or may be provided in pursuance of law, be placed on the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive, for a total disability, or a permanent specific disability, such pension as is hereinafter provided in such cases; and for an inferior disability, except in cases of permanent specific disability, for which the rate of pension is expressly provided, an amount proportionate to that provided for total disability; and such pension shall commence as hereinafter provided, and continue during the existence of the disability.

There is much confusion in regard to these several forms of disability. It will be observed that three are mentioned, total disability, specific disability, and an inferior degree of disability. The term total disability is that which is given to a degree of disability equivalent to a stiff elbow joint, anchylosis of the elbow joint, or anchylosis of the knee joint. That is a measurement of disability not to be found in the statute, but adopted by common consent for many years in the practice of the office, so that the statute is precisely the same, by this customary construction which has been placed upon it, as though total disability were equivalent to that disability, or a disability which is equal to a stiff elbow joint or a stiff knee joint. Any disability amounting to that is called "total," without any reference to the rank of the person. If it is less than that, it is what is called an inferior disability in the latter part of the section. If it is a specific disability, it is particularly and minutely described in the statute itself, and it may be greater or it may be less than total disability, and in all instances, so far as I now recollect, as specified in the statute, it is some disability larger than what is called "total disability." It may be dealt with, however, fractionally.

To this total disability, as it is called, as to the private soldier is affixed the rate of $8 per month; to officers a higher rate; to the second lieutenant $15 per month; to the first lieutenant $17 per month; to the captain $20 per month; to the major and to the lieutenant-colonel $30 per month; and all higher grades of rank receive the same amount. That is to say, for a disability equivalent to a stiff elbow-joint, or a stiff knee-joint, a total disability, these are the rates. If the disability is inferior to that total, that is, less than a stiff joint, the pension is a fractional proportion of these several sums, according to rank.

The pensions for specific disabilities are given entirely irrespective of the matter of rank. They are conferred according to the actual disability as described in the statute, and a major-general for a specific disability gets no more pension than a private for the corresponding actual disability. The specific disabilities, as the term implies, are described particularly in the statute. They are not many in number, but they are the classes of disability which are dealt with and the only classes of disability which are dealt with in this proposed legislation, and only a portion of these specific disabilities. I will state those which are touched by the proposed legislation. There are cases of specific disability where a pension is already given to the amount of $72 a month. They are as follows: For loss of both hands, $72; loss of both feet, $72; loss of both eyes, $72; loss of an eye, the other lost before enlistment, $72; for such disability as requires the regular aid and attendance of another person, $72; for total disability in both hands, $72.

This legislation touches none of these cases. I will now state the specific disabilities and all the other disabilities which are mentioned in the statute to which our laws apply at all, which are covered by this proposed legislation. Loss of one hand and one foot, which is now pensioned at the rate of $36, this legislation proposes to increase to $40. I will not mention the proposed increase at the present time, however. Total disability in one hand and one foot now has a pension of $36; total deafness of both ears $13; loss of a hand or a foot $18; amputation at or above the elbow or knee, $24; amputation at the hip-joint $37.50; inability to perform manual labor $24.

There is another specific disability, not mentioned here, which is the same as that which draws $72 per month, but which is not permanent, and that is the distinction. Where the disability which if permanent draws $72 per month is not permanent, is likely to be recovered from, the pensioner for such time as it does exist receives $31.25.

Only one statement more is necessary to place before the Senate and before the country so much more as is necessary to be known in order to fully comprehend this proposed legislation. I may say in passing that the specific disabilities are provided for in sections 4697 and 4698 of the Revised Statutes. The total disabilities are set forth fully in section 4695. Section 4699 is as follows:

The rate of $18 per month may be proportionately divided for any degree of disability established for which section 4695 makes no provision.

Section 4695 is the one which fixes the total disability to the various ranks; that is, the disability equivalent to a stiff elbow-joint or a stiff knee-joint. There are a great many undescribed and indescribable wounds where the disability is greater than the stiff joint referred to, where the allowance of the total pension would be no adequate compensation; and so this section of the statutes has provided that irrespective of rank the $18 herein granted may be divided according to the actual disability from which on examination the surgeon finds the pensioner to be suffering, and that is distributed at $10, $12, $14, $15, or $16, as the case may be.

The pension granted for total disability according to rank, as will be observed by the Senate, in some cases, those of the highest rank, is $30, and that is a pension higher than, if the pensioner were dealt with according to his specific disability, he would receive. For instance, he may be a major-general who has lost his leg below the knee, and for that specific disability he would be entitled to receive but $18 a month, while by reason of his rank he is entitled to $30 a month, and he receives his pension accordingly, being pensioned totally according to rank, and being excluded from the enjoyment of his specific pension. Pensions are never duplicated. The specific is never added to the pension of rank, but he draws for the one or for the other, and by the favor of the law he is entitled to draw his pension at the higher rate, and if his rank gives him more than his specific disability would give him, then he draws according to rank rather than according to the specific disability.

I have said, Mr. President, all that I care to say now in explaining the present status of the law and the particular classes to which this proposed legislation applies. The bill as it came from the House covers only a fraction of those who are suffering from specific disability, and many of them are suffering more severely and are more inadequately pensioned than are the classes which are covered by the House bill No. 1410.

I read now from a memorandum furnished me by the Commissioner of Pensions, and first I mention those classes that are covered by the bill as it comes from the House:

Thirty-six hundred and thirty-one pensioners who have lost one hand or one foot, now receiving $18 per month, the bill coming from the House proposes to increase them to $40.

Fifty-three hundred and eighty who have suffered amputation at or above the knee or the elbow, now receiving $24, also to be increased to $40.

Sixty who have suffered amputation at the hip-joint, now receiving $37, to be increased to $40.

One hundred and fifty who have suffered amputation at the shoulder joint, now at $24, to be increased to $40 per month.

Fifteen who have lost one hand and one foot, now receiving $36, to be increased to $40.

Eighty-eight hundred and forty-seven who have a disability equivalent to loss of a hand or a foot, now receiving $18, to be increased to $40 per month.

Two hundred and thirty-two now receiving $31.25 and to receive $40 per month.

The aggregate of this is nearly 20,000 pensioners that are covered by the House bill. The proposed legislation—that is, the amendment which the chairman and myself have submitted to the Senate—includes all these classes, and in addition to them 2,125 who are totally deaf, now receiving $13 per month; 2,000 who are pensioned for impaired hearing, less than total deafness, now receiving one, two, four, or six dollars per month; 2,000 who have lost an eye, now receiving $4 per month; 4,000 who are receiving a pension for impaired sight, other than the loss of one eye or total blindness, now receiving from $2 to $16 a month; 19,423 pensioners now receiving a pension of $10, $12, $14, or $16 per month; and 1,552 now disabled for the performance of any manual labor, receiving $24 per month.

As will be perceived, a larger number is omitted by the bill which comes from the House than is included with those in the proposed legislation in our amendment. The whole number of pensioners covering all the specific disabilities that exist known to the law at the present time, and including those who are entitled to a fractional part of $18 per month, $10, $12, $14, $16, the whole number covered by this proposed amendment is 47,415. As I have several times stated, it overs all pensions known to the law.

These additional classes are morally, are absolutely sure, if not now receiving an increase while the others do receive their increase, to come at subsequent Congresses and obtain it. It is not in the nature of things that justice should be denied to them if it is granted to their compeers who are as a rule not suffering as much as they are, at least not from the inadequacy of their pensions; so far as the disability is concerned many of them not suffering at all in comparison with some of these.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator now state, as I suppose he has made some estimate, what is the estimate as to the amount which will be taken out of the Treasury under the bill as it came from the House, and also the amount which will be taken out of the Treasury if his substitute for it shall be adopted?

Mr. BLAIR. I have that matter right here, and I was about to state it. It comes logically next in order. The bill which comes from the House increasing the pension of these comparatively few and to the lowest basis of $40 a month will take from the Treasury by the estimate of the Commissioner of Pensions, the sum of $5,187,564 upon the roll as it exists at the present time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is that accurate?

Mr. BLAIR. That will be the immediate increase on the roll as it stands at the present time. That makes no allowance for additions to the roll of those who will be entitled to receive an increase or a larger pension than they otherwise would have received but for this modification of the law, as their names shall hereafter be added. This is the aggregate increase to those now upon the roll by the terms of the bill which comes to us from the House. The proposed amendment, covering all classes, will require a net increase to the roll of $5,429,010. The Senate must remember that these estimates, although the very best the office can give us, may vary one way or the other. It is utterly impossible to know within a hundred thousand dollars, or it may be within half a million dollars, and to know substantially after all, just what the amount taken from the Treasury will be.

Thus it is quite apparent that, the difference in the estimates of the Pension Office being so slight practically, it must go to the country that the proposed amendment, covering all possible cases and doing justice among all classes, will take no larger sum from the Treasury than the bill which comes to us from the House. It is, I think, a fair statement to say that either of them will take from the Treasury at the present time under the existing roll about $5,500,000 more than will be drawn under the law as it now exists.

With reference to the future, if the bill coming from the House should be adopted it is entirely impossible to say what may be the tax upon the Treasury. The calculations of the Commissioner of Pensions indicate that the increase even upon the present roll and including the present applications would be not far from $17,000,000 to $20,000,000. I observe that the majority report, if it is to be treated as a majority report, the report of those who are against any increase whatever, contemplates an ultimate addition to the roll of about $40,000,000, making an aggregate of $70,000,000 annual taxation upon the people for pensions alone if this increase should be made. It is more than doubling by $10,000,000 the present amount of the pension-roll. I do not know and no one can know whether that is an exaggerated estimate or not. The data upon which they form this calculation indicate to my mind that it is not excessive, and that if this bill is enacted into a law we must contemplate that ultimately, and that not remotely, the annual pension-roll will not be less than about $70,000,000.

By the terms of this proposed amendment, as I have already said, about $5,500,000 will be taken at the present time. I have made the best calculation that I can, and aided by the calculations of the Pension Office also, I have thought under its terms there can not be a permanent addition of more than $9,000,000 to the roll as it otherwise will be; and taking into consideration—and that should have weight, of course, in reference to the other estimates and the estimates touching the other bills and amendments—the fact that these pensioners are rapidly dying and that probably those who are suffering from equivalent disabilities, excepting those whose amputations have thoroughly healed, will nearly all disappear in the course of the next ten years, I think it fair to say of the amendment which we have proposed that it will at no time impose an additional burden upon the Treasury of more than six or seven million dollars annually; five and a half million dollars at the beginning, and one and a half million or possibly two millions or perhaps it will be two and a half millions at a subsequent time. Very soon most of it will, however, pass away.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut makes an increase to those classes that it applies to in the same proportion and to the same extent as in this general amendment which has been submitted by the honorable chairman and myself. So far as that goes it is all well and it is in entire harmony with the amendment which we are advocating; but it must leave rankling in the mind of those who are not favored with an increase and who deserve it a sense of injustice, and the country must feel an aggravated sense of having done injustice, and the result inevitably will be that we shall enact a law quite as liberal in its provisions as this proposed substitute submitted by the chairman and myself. That amendment includes fewer classes, if I recollect aright; it does not include any more classes at any rate than the bill which comes from the House, and the lesser amount which it takes from the Treasury is because it makes a slighter addition to existing rates.

Mr. President, in what I have said at this time I have carefully avoided anything whatever which I think can properly be charged as ad captandum talk. I have tried to confine myself to facts and to figures, and to asking of the Senate that if it does anything it shall do, and do at this time all that it should do at all, that it should do complete justice. I think that this proposed substitute will do ample and complete justice.

It is not improper that I should state that a committee representing the order of the Grand Army of the Republic throughout the country has carefully examined this bill and it has their unanimous support. House bill 1410 was opposed by the soldiery of the country as vigorously as it was advocated by other soldiers who were to be pensioners under its terms, but I have the right to state, for it is a fact, that the amendment of which I have spoken, so far as I know—and I know all this committee knows in reference to it—has the universal sanction of the soldiers of the country. If it should be enacted into a law, as I understand it, it will cover substantially all which they will ask at any time. They will go from these halls of legislation satisfied and we shall hear no more, unless it may be in slight and incidental cases which no general legislation can reach; we shall hear no more from them probably in any time to come asking an increase of rates of pension, which they are to be allowed by a grateful country.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I shall vote for the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to postpone this bill indefinitely. It appears that the committee itself is divided in reference to what should be and what should not be embraced in the bill. The majority report is in favor of an indefinite postponement of the bill. It is just one of those bills that the Senate is as apt to err about as any bill that comes before us for consideration, because it is that class of legislation which appeals to the sympathies of the Senate, and we all know the tendencies of humanity are to yield to sympathy and charity. We have provided, and I think liberally, for the soldiery of the country. It may be that some injustice has been done to certain classes of soldiers, but I think the action of the American Government in reference to its soldiery in the provision which it makes for their support will compare favorably with the action of any other Government on earth in reference to its soldiers.

I apprehended that until we know definitely what is to be taken out of the Treasury by the demands of this bill if it shall become a law we had better hesitate in reference to our action upon it. It will be remembered that a few years ago when the arrears-of-pensions act was here no one anticipated that the proposed bill would take more than $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 out of the Treasury in the aggregate. I put the question distinctly to the then chairman of the Pensions Committee, who I supposed was as intelligent on the subject as any gentleman, and according to my recollection his estimate, based upon information obtained at the Pension Bureau, was that it would be $18,000,000 or $20,000,000. Yet we have already appropriated over $100,000,000 with the certainty that not less that $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 more must be appropriated to meet the provisions of that act. Now, I hope that we shall not by hasty action on this bill place the Senate in the same position that it was in with reference to that bill, acting in the dark, without proper information to know what is to be the result upon the Treasury of the country.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Delaware has repeated a statement that has been made before a great many times, that when the arrears act was before the Senate I, as chairman of the Committee on Pensions at that time, said that all that would be required to render it effective would be about $25,000,000. I stated that all that would be required to adjust the cases then upon the roll under the arrears act would be $25,000,000, but that the amount thereafter to be expended would depend upon the number of pensioners who might be placed upon the rolls subsequent to that time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I perhaps did not state exactly what was said by the then chairman of the Pensions Committee, but the impression derived from that information was that that would be the aggregate amount to be taken by that bill.

Mr. INGALLS. On the contrary, when that question was asked me by a Senator from New York I expressly stated that it would be impossible to say what amount would be required to render the act operative thereafter, but that to adjust the cases then upon the roll so that they would receive pensions from the time when they were disabled would require somewhere between $18,000,000 and $25,000,000.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not say that the Senator did not make the statement which he now says he did, but I think if he will examine the discussion which followed that statement he will find that every Senator who spoke upon the question certainly spoke under the impression that the information obtained from the Senator from Kansas was that the cost of that measure would be from $18,000,000 to $20,000,000 or $25,000,000. I do not say he intended to make such an impression or that his language itself ought to have conveyed that impression. I only speak of the impression which seemed to be conveyed at that time.

Mr. INGALLS. The impression could not have been great, because that very proposition was resisted and the declaration was distinctly made, so that if any such impression remained in the minds of Senators subsequently it must have been because they did not want to have it removed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I propounded myself the question to the Senator from Kansas, then chairman of the committee, and I do not hesitate to say to him that such was the impression which I derived, and I think the debates will disclose that that was the impression which others derived from his answer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Allow me to say that in the discussion of the bill in the House and Senate the highest estimate by anybody was $25,000,000.

Mr. INGALLS. For those already on the rolls, not those who might be placed there thereafter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The general estimate was $20,000,000.

Mr. INGALLS. How could anybody state how much would be paid for arrears to those placed on the roll after the act passed? It was impossible.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I refer to this matter not for the purpose of imputing to the Senator from Kansas any purpose to mislead. I had not the remotest idea of such a thing.

Mr. INGALLS. There has not been a debate on this subject since that time when some Democrat has not risen on that side of the Chamber and denounced the arrears-of-pensions act and said it was passed under misrepresentation, and it is time, in view of the facts, that that was stopped, because there was no declaration whatever made that not more than $25,000,000 would be required to render the arrears act effective; it was only as to those who were then already on the rolls.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I repeat, in referring to the passage of that act, that I had no intention to convey the idea that there was any design on the part of anybody to mislead. I am certain I should be very far from imputing such a purpose to the Senator from Kansas. I only spoke of the impression which men labored under at that time, not that the Senator designed to make such an impression; but I do say the debate discloses the fact that those who participated in that discussion certainly had that impression, whether they derived it from the language of the Senator from Kansas or from some other source, and the very next day the Senator from Vermont, who voted for that bill, came to the Senate, according to my recollection, and referred to the fact that he had just learned that it would probably take $80,000,000 out of the Treasury, when he did not suppose at the time he voted there would be any such depletion of the Treasury.

But we are now brought face to face with another bill in reference to pensions upon which even the committee itself is divided, a part of the committee proposing an indefinite postponement of the consideration of the bill, a part favoring the House bill, and another part of the committee proposing a substitute bill, showing that in the committee which has had this measure under consideration for twelve months there is not that unity of thought and action which should commend their report to the consideration of the Senate for its action at the present time.

For that reason I think the motion of the Senator from Tennessee is a very proper one, to postpone indefinitely the consideration of the bill. I am not opposed to doing exact justice to all the soldiers. If there is any soldier who has not had exact justice done to him, when the matter is fairly and fully brought forward and we have all the information necessary to enable us to act upon that subject and to know how far it will become a tax on the people of the country, I shall be as ready to act as any one. I served upon the committee myself for two years. I am not conscious that I ever opposed a single pension case which according to my judgment was a meritorious one. There were a great many pension bills that came from the other House to the Senate Committee on Pensions which were rejected very frequently by the unanimous opinion of the committee; against many of those I did vote, and I was generally in accord with the majority of the committee on that subject, but I am not conscious that I ever did vote to reject the claim of any single pensioner that in my judgment was entitled under the law of the land to a pension.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to state one thing to him?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. He is commenting on the division in the committee. This is true with regard to the committee, that a majority of it is in favor of an increase, some to a much greater extent than others, and the substitute of which I have been speaking is as low in its terms as any. It is simply a little more comprehensive and proposes to do the whole thing at once.

Mr. SAULSBURY. When I spoke of the majority of the committee I spoke of the report which is called the report of the committee. Of course I do not know anything about the individual opinion of members of the committee except from that.

Mr. BLAIR. Four of the committee are against any legislation; the others are for legislation and for an increase.

Mr. SAULSBURY. And those others are divided in reference to what the character of the legislation should be.

Mr. BLAIR. All say some, and some say more.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think we had better pause until we have sufficient information from the committee to enable us to tell definitely what we are doing. We ought not, as the guardians of the Treasury to a certain extent, to adopt any measure until we have full information in reference to the effect and operation of the bill; and so far as I am concerned, I have not been able, from the discussions which have taken place on the part of members of the committee, to learn definitely or anything approximating a definite conclusion what would be the operation of this bill on the Treasury of the country. I am not in favor of passing bills blindly without knowing something of their effect, because every dollar in the Treasury comes out of the people of the country as tax-payers in some shape or other.

The Senator from New Hampshire referred to petitions which had been presented in reference to this measure. We all know that petitions are very easy things to get up. There were petitions piled in forests upon us here for the arrears-of-pensions act, and subsequently it was stated in the Senate that those petitions were sent out by pension agents, men who expected to make fees out of the passage of such an act, sent out all over the country to procure the signatures of men, and that that measure did not originate with the soldiers of the country. It may be that this measure has originated exclusively and entirely from that class of soldiers of the country who are to be the beneficiaries of the act; but it may be true also that the promptings of this measure may have been from the pension agents located in the city of Washington. We ought to know something about this. Besides that, petitions are very easily obtained whether for a good or bad purpose, and I have no question that many hundreds and thousands of petitions have been presented in favor of this bill; but we all know what petitions mean. You will very frequently find that when a measure has not the merit to commend itself to the Senate or to the country, it is backed up by the representations of parties who are interested in the bill by their numerous petitions.

I shall vote for the indefinite postponement of this measure, because I have not such information from the Committee on Pensions as to what ought to be done as to justify my voting in favor of this measure blindly.

Mr. BLAIR. It ought to be stated that it is the sense of the committee, if any legislation passes granting an increase, to provide by an amendment to whatever passes that the increase be granted solely through the Pension Office, and not through intermediary agencies, as in other cases.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I have been absent this morning, in the Committee on Appropriations, and have not heard the discussion. I have just come in, and I desire to say but a word in opposition to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to indefinitely postpone this bill.

I disagree entirely with the conclusions arrived at by the Senator from Delaware. In the first place, the postponement of this bill means the defeat of the bill. I think that the persons applying here for an increase of pension on account of the peculiar disability that is mentioned in these various bills are at least entitled to a fair hearing in the Senate of the United States. If we act in accordance with what I think would be just and proper in the premises, we should give a fair hearing to these bills instead of indefinitely postponing them; and if the bills do not accord with the views of the Senate, amend one or the other of them so that it will accord with the views of the Senate, and let it be passed. That is all I have to say on that point.

One other remark I desire to make in answer to the Senator from Delaware in reference to the taxation of the people for this purpose. I believe that I am as much opposed to the taxation of the people for improper purposes as any other Senator; but if any Senator shall say to me that taxation for the purpose of assisting a man with one leg or both legs off, both eyes out, or both arms or one arm off, who has been maimed in his country's service, is improper taxation, I disagree with him. There is no man to-day, I care not how humble he may be, how poor he may be, what his condition in life may be, who would submit to the deprivations that these men do on account of wounds, disability, or disease for ten times the amount that they receive as a pension. One of the great inequalities in this country is the distinction that is made in our laws. I will take two captains for the purpose of illustration. Two captains enter the service, one in the regular Army and one in the volunteer army. They both go upon the same battlefield and both of them lose a leg on the same day. They come to Congress, and how does Congress provide for those two persons? Congress gives one of those men three-fourths of $2,500 per annum, and to the other one $20 per month. That is the distinction—two men of perfect equality in commission, in conduct, in honor, in integrity, and in everything that belongs to a man, and you discriminate by the laws of the country between those two men, and when the man who gets but $20 per month on account of his commission as captain comes before the Congress of the United States and asks that the gradation in reference to his wound or disability may be made so that he may receive $38 or $40 or whatever it may be, Congress has not time to consider that proposition.

Mr. HARRIS. May I ask the Senator from Illinois if I understand him as saying that under the existing pension laws between two officers of the same rank similarly disabled, with the same degree of disability, there is this vast difference in the pensions that they receive that he has suggested?

Mr. LOGAN. I did not say so.

Mr. HARRIS. That is exactly what I was not sure about and desired to know. It is owing to the difference in rank that there is this difference of pay, I suppose.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir, it is owing to the difference made by the laws of Congress. I took for illustration two men, both captains in the Army, appointed on the same day, one to the Regular Army and one to the Volunteer Army. They went upon the same battlefield, both lost a leg on the same day, and one is put on the pension roll at $20 a month and to the other you give three-quarters of $2,500 per annum by the laws of Congress.

Mr. HARRIS. Why is that?

Mr. BUTLER. How is it?

Mr. LOGAN. One is put on the retired list with three-quarters Army pay, and the other you pension at $20 a month. That is the distinction. I have no complaint to make about it. I was only showing the distinction that is made in the laws of Congress in reference to men who are wounded or receive serious injuries in war. The distinction is made not because of rank; not because of date of commission; not because of wounds. You give one a mere pittance, and to the other one you give large pay. No man will get me to vote to decrease the retired pay of that poor officer. I would not do it. I do not mention it by way of criticism of the pay he gets, but by way of criticism of the action of this Government in reference to the manner in which it pays the other officer who received the same character of wound. I do not believe that $100 a month is enough pay for a man who has lost his arm or his leg or his eye or both eyes; but these gentlemen ask that the $18 a private gets if he lost his leg below the knee or $24 if above the knee should not be increased.

Mr. HARRIS. Is that the present law?

Mr. LOGAN. That is the present law.

Mr. BUTLER. Then the captain gets $20.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; he gets $20 on account of being ranked as captain. The pension on account of losing a leg is not increased in proportion to his rank over that of a private. It is a specific pension and he gets the same as anybody else.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. The captain gets $20 for what the private soldier would get $8.

Mr. LOGAN. Exactly; that is it. But when it comes to the specific pension for the wound, then there is no increase according to rank.

Mr. PLATT. No.

Mr. LOGAN. That is what I was trying to explain. The rank gives him $20 and the specific pension gives him no increase. I am not saying this for the purpose of insisting that the officer should have his pension raised and the private not; but I take that as an illustration to show the distinction that is made on account of the different characters of employment of the same rank. The private as a matter of course is not on the retired-list. When we come to that the privates are on an equality. The private soldier as well as the officer is entitled to regard and respect from the Congress of the United States and the country; all perform their duty, operating in different spheres, and having different functions to perform.

I have not had an opportunity, as I said, this morning to listen to the debate or examine into the various propositions; but I am opposed to the indefinite postponement of the House bill, and in favor of taking up the bills and examining them and appropriately legislating in reference to the various propositions. I think Congress can not afford not to do that. So far as I am concerned, I have no apologies to make either here, to the country, or to anybody else for having voted for pensions always. I expect to continue to do it while I am in Congress. I know some of the sufferings of soldiers; I do not mean any particular soldiers or of any particular war, but in reference to their sufferings under all circumstances; and whenever one has lost his leg, his arm, or both, or an eye, or both eyes, or has been physically disabled on account of other wounds or diseases occurring in the line of his duty, I will always be the defender of that man when he asks the pittance which he gets from the Government of the United States.

The allusion that was made to the arrearages-of-pensions law has nothing to do with this bill. I will say in answer to that, I was not here to vote for it, but had I been I should have done so on the principle that where you agree to pension a man you pension him on account of a wound or on account of disease, a disability; and if the contract under your law is that if a man is wounded or disabled on any account in the Army he shall be pensioned, that contract applies and attaches at the time the disability occurred and at no other time; so that a man is entitled to a pension from the time the disability was incurred. Though Senators constantly prate in this Chamber about arrearages of pensions, the only wrong that was done in reference to that was that they did not apply the pension at the time when the law was passed that it should have obtained from the time the disability was incurred.

The only opposition that could be found in the country to the arrears-of-pensions act is that it took a large amount of money at one time. It took no more if the law at the time it was passed had given the man the pension from the time the disability was incurred, no matter when the application was made, which would have been right and would have been just. So I say the arrearages-of-pensions law is right and it is not a question with me as to how much it costs. The question with me is, is it just; is he entitled to that pension? If he is it is not for me to inquire where the money shall come from. I will pay my part of it and let everybody else do the same. The government that does not protect, the government that does not support and sustain to a certain extent the lame, the crippled, the halt, and the blind who received these injuries in the time of emergency of their government, in war for its preservation and protection, fails in the performance of that duty that ought to apply to all governments and all nations. When the Government asks that the best blood of this land shall be poured out for its preservation, it is not for that government to higgle and complain when these unfortunates ask a pittance to aid them through the time they shall live along the pathway of life until the time comes when life shall cease to exist.

Sir, these complaints are often made, but unwisely made. The honest man at home is not the man who complains of his taxation for pensions. No man would be ever heard to complain in this land on that subject if it had not been for members in the Congress of the United States trying to show that the people were imposed upon by large assessments for unworthy purposes. This has been done from both sides of the Chamber. The fault lies equally with all those who make these complaints.

Now, Mr. President, I hope this bill will not be postponed, but will be fairly, justly, and honestly considered, amended if it needs amendment, so as to provide an increase of pension for these unfortunate men, if they are entitled to it, no matter where they are or where they are to be found.

Mr. VAN WYCK addressed the Senate. [See Appendix.]

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. VEST. I wanted to say a word or two in regard to the motion which I submitted to amend the bill by striking out the clause in relation to equivalent disability.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not now the question before the Senate.

Mr. VEST. As I do not wish to detain the Senate but a moment or two I may as well say now what I have to say, because the Senator who has just taken his seat alluded to the position of the confederates with regard to these pensions. During the four years that I have been in the Senate I have voted for every pension bill that came before this body. I may say without exception I have voted for every pension bill where the committee recommended it, for every individual pension bill. As I said once before, if the confederacy had won, to which I was devoted heart and soul from the beginning to the end of the conflict, I would have voted the last dollar of money and the last acre of land within its limits to have paid the maimed, wounded, and disabled soldiers of the confederate army. The people of the United Sates, to whom Providence gave triumph in that conflict, have the same right, and not only the same right but the same duty imposed upon them.

Believing that a people who would not reward their soldiers who have given life and limb for their national existence should be blotted from the map of Christendom; as a Senator of the United States I am here to vote to the largest extent that the public shall take care of the men who upon the battle-field preserved the national existence. While I hold a seat here I shall so vote.

But the clause in the bill which I have moved to strike out is in my judgment the opening to illimitable frauds and illimitable robberies of the public Treasury.

Why, Mr. President, who has ever seen any man suffering who did not believe that his disease or his wound, whether imaginary or actual, was the greatest misfortune that had ever befallen any human being? Who is not aware of the same thing if he has ever been the subject of the confidential disclosures of any man afflicted in any way by wounds or disease in regard to his peculiar misfortune and disability? I undertake to say that if this bill is passed with this clause no man who was ever grazed by a bullet during the late war, no man who thought his lungs, his heart, his liver, or his stomach in the most remote degree was injured by his service in the Army, will fail to come here and say under this clause that his sufferings, his disabilities were equal to those of the soldier who lost either an arm or a leg.

Who is to determine this question of an equivalent disability? I take it that it is to be determined by the medical profession. What does that mean? It means that you can never find one single case in which a physician will not certify that his patient is suffering agonies, horrors, and disabilities more than those of the man who has really lost an arm or leg in the military service. There will not be one single case that will not find medical testimony and authority to prove and show it to be a case of equivalent disability. It means, and it is a mere conjecture as to numbers, that a quarter of a million of cases at $40 a month will be placed upon the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. VAN WYCK. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. VEST. Why, certainly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The term "equivalent disability" has now a fixed meaning in the Pension Department. The same source which has been passing upon the question of equivalent disability still exists. The Senator has stated the mode by which it should be determined. If it be true that 250,000 are to be added when they receive $40 a month, will he tell me why during the last twenty years under the same terms and designation and by the certificates of physicians the number is such as is reported by the Senator who sits immediately in front of me? Why have not great frauds on the Treasury been perpetrated in the last fifteen or twenty years?

Mr. VEST. For the simple reason that no such law as this has been enacted, and because they can not draw the same sort of pension under other statutes.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but I should like to reply to his observations in a few words. Perhaps I might as well do so now, by his courtesy.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. Equivalent disabilities, as has been observed, are as much known to the statute and to the practice of the office as disabilities occasioned by actual amputation. They include disabilities which are equal in extent to those with which they are compared. Here is a stiff arm. That is the measure which is applied to the great class of the pensions. For a disability, whether it be in the head, the body, or in the leg, unless it is specially described and pensioned by a specific description, if equal, in the judgment of the medical examiner, to a disability occasioned by stiffness of the elbow-joint, the pensioner gets the total $8, $15, $17, $20, $25, or $30, as the rank may be. In every case whatever the medical examiner compares the status of the individual from his personal examination with that imaginary standard, and if he says it is equal to that disability he gives him a pension according to the rank for total disability. There are various specific disabilities specified in the statute: the loss of a leg, amputation of a leg below the knee, amputation of a leg above the knee, amputation at the hip-joint, the loss of an arm below the elbow, the loss of an arm above the elbow, amputation at the elbow-joint, the loss of both eyes, and so on.

The bill proposes that where the disability is equivalent to any one of those specified, that is, where the disability is not equal to the loss by stiffness of the joint, but is equal to the loss of a limb above the knee, the man shall be pensioned at the same rate that the other one is who has lost a leg above the knee. His general condition is compared, in the mind of the examiner, with the status of a man who has lost a leg above the knee and whose case is described in the statute, and is fixed by the present law at $24. It covers, as the medical examiners universally have told me, really much more suffering and much more meritorious cases in their opinion than the specific disabilities themselves. A man has lost a leg below the knee and has got a good amputation; it heals and he will live as long as though he had not lost it oftentimes. If he has lost it above and it was a good amputation he is relatively all right. But here comes a man whose arm is shot and shattered above the elbow, and what they call the operation of resection takes place, that is, removing a portion of the bone, three, four, five, or six pieces, as the case may be, and the arm hangs limply at his side. Here is another man whose arm is actually cut off above the elbow, and if it was a well-healed wound he would draw a pension on account of specific disability, according to the description in the statute, at the rate of $24; but it has healed badly; he can not attach a false arm to it; the stump is sore; it bleeds. He has other wounds, it may be, in the body; he was shot through the lungs; he may have festering and never-healing sores, unmentionable diseases, for the great mass of the body is exposed to the bullet and not the limbs alone. The much more serious wounds and disabilities are those not named in the statutes, and if pensioned at all they are to be compared with some of the specific disabilities.

There is no new principle involved here. It is precisely the same principle upon which the entire pension law, so far as disabilities are concerned, is administered. It sets up these different standards and says to the medical examiner, if a man's disability by a shot through the lungs unhealed, or by other wounds, or by severity of disease, heart disease, or other, if on the whole he is as much injured physically as though he had lost an arm above the elbow, he shall have a pension at the rate of $30 a month, which is the sum provided in the proposed substitute, the substitute making an increase of $6, while the bill as it came from the House increases the rate from $18 to $40.

Mr. VEST. What is the increase in the original bill?

Mr. BLAIR. I will state the increase in the original bill. I am glad Senators ask attention to this point, because the more the matter is examined the better it will be understood, and if it is understood something will be done. The bill coming from the House proposes that the loss of a hand, which is now pensioned at $18, shall be pensioned at $40; that the loss of an arm above the elbow shall be pensioned at $40; that the loss of an arm at the shoulder-joint, which is the most dangerous and severe form of amputation which is known, even disabling to a greater degree, it is said, and being more dangerous than amputation at the hip-joint, shall be pensioned at $40. All the lower forms go up to $40 as a fixed rate. That is the bill that comes from the House.

Mr. BUTLER. Just so about the leg.

Mr. BLAIR. Just so about the leg; just so about every disability that is covered by the bill. The truth is, the bill covers relatively but a few of the disabilities, some three or four, whereas the proposed substitute covers all, and all of which are sure to come in, if there is any legislation, sooner or later. The amendment of the Senator from Connecticut is the same, only it does not go nearly as far, and leaves this terra incognita, or rather this well-known territory, still to be legislated upon in the future. That makes an increase of from eighteen to twenty-four dollars where the arm is severed so as to make merely loss of a hand, that is, below the elbow, being an increase of $6 instead of $22. If the loss is above the elbow the increase is from $24 to $30, an increase of $6 instead of $16. The higher disabilities, which now are compensated by a pension of $31.25, $36, $37.50, which are not covered at all by the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, are by the substitute which I am advocating carried to $40. As far as it goes it goes upon precisely the same route and makes precisely the same points as the substitute which the chairman of the committee and myself have offered, which covers the entire ground and would put this whole question at rest. There is no more extravagance in our substitute than there is in the proposition of the Senator from Connecticut. It is the same thing, only his is partial and ours is a total provision.

I am obliged to the Senator from Missouri for his courtesy in allowing me so much of his time.

Mr. PLATT. I assure the Senate that I will only take a single moment. Out of 173,138 invalid pensions on the list only 8,847 are for equivalent disabilities.

Mr. VEST. I understand that; but the salient point remains, and it is one that controls the whole matter. This is an increase of pension, and the inducement to bring cases within this classification of equivalent disabilities would be increased 100 per cent. by the enactment of this law. The undertaking will be now as a matter of course to bring every wound, every disease, under this increase. Every soldier who is in feeble health to-day almost without exception believes that his disease or disability came from the war. You can hardly find a man who participated in the service on either side to-day who has an ache or a pain, rheumatism or gout or neuralgia, or lung disease or throat disease, who can not trace it to the very night on which he slept ahead of his baggage-wagon upon wet or damp ground, or to some forced march, or to some hours of privation and exposure. The bill simply says to all that class, "You are now offered a premium of 100 per cent. to bring the proof that will bring you into this classification." There is the danger in it. That will be the inevitable result.

I undertake to say that if this law is enacted it will be a harvest for the pension agents and the claim agents who swarm around this city, and in the principal cities of the Union, such as they have not had since the passage of the act for the arrears of pensions. I do not know what the experience of other Senators has been, but mine, since this question has been mooted and discussed, is that I have been flooded with printed petitions coming not from soldiers but coming in the stereotyped words and language of the claim agents in the name of the soldiers, in the name of the veterans of the war, begging me to vote for this bill in their interest. The whole thing will result not for the benefit of the soldier but of the lawyers, and they hardly deserve the name of lawyers, the pension agents, most of whom have accumulated enormous fortunes at the expense of the soldiers of the Federal Army, while those soldiers themselves go maimed and beggared to their graves. Pass the bill with this clause in it, and I say again it will be such a harvest as these people have not had since the passage of the arrears-of-pensions act. For that reason I have moved to strike out the words "or shall have suffered disability equal thereto."

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Pensions I concurred in the majority report, and I wish to state briefly to the Senate the reasons why the bill in my judgment should not be passed. I concur fully in what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has stated in reference to the equivalent-disability clause. There is not now, and has not been, anything in our legislation so broad as that. We have equivalent-disability clauses in reference to certain specific disabilities. For instance, if an arm is lost below the elbow and the injury is such as to be equivalent to a loss at the elbow, under the existing law you may rate the pensioner on the equivalent disability. But this bill goes beyond all that. This bill provides for the loss of a hand or a foot $40 per month, and any one suffering a disability equal thereto shall be pensioned at the same rate.

As the Senator from Missouri has stated, no man can possibly tell what amount this measure will draw from the Treasury even if honestly administered. The Commissioner of Pensions himself in his report to us says it is impossible to tell. We know the number now existing who lost a hand, or an arm, or a foot, or a leg; we know the number who are now pensioned under the equivalent-disability clauses, numbering 10,925; but there are 270,000 pension cases yet to be adjudicated and it is utterly impossible to tell how many of that number will be included in any general-disability clause. The disability clause in this bill goes to the point of any injury, any disease which any surgeon may certify to be equal to the loss of a foot, a hand, an arm, or a leg.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if every physician's examination is not revised by the surgeons of the Pension Office, and if final action is not the decree of the Pension Commissioner?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes; and the gentlemen who serve on that board see day after day certificates of surgeons certifying that the injury or disease is equivalent to the loss of a foot, or an arm, or a leg. It is an every-day occurrence.

Mr. BLAIR. But the point that I wish to ask the Senator's attention to and to state to the Senator is this: are not all these examinations subject to medical revision, and is not the rating finally made by the Pension Office upon all the information it receives, medical and other information, bearing upon the case?

Mr. JACKSON. The examinations are made at a distance by one or perhaps by a board of surgeons. It is certified here. That is subject to review by the local board at Washington. There is no doubt about that; but that does not reach the difficulty. How can the board here acting upon the certificate of a distant surgeon be able to review it? It can not be reviewed.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Tennessee still yield?

Mr. JACKSON. I prefer not to be interrupted. I will not detain the Senate more than a few moments. I say not the Commissioner himself, no member of the Senate Committee on Pensions, and no member of Congress can tell approximately, there can not be an intelligent guess given, as to the amount this measure will take out of the Treasury. It will open immensely the door to fraud and corruption, for, as was stated by the Senator from Missouri, every pensioner will come forward and claim that his disability is equal to the loss of a hand or an arm, a foot or a leg, and immediately his pension will be raised to $40 a month.

But there is a graver objection to the bill than that. This very class of pensioners have been before Congress year after year, and have had special legislation in their behalf. On the 4th of July, 1864, they had an increase of pensions in their behalf; on the 3d of March, 1865, they had a further increase; June 6, 1866, they had a further increase; June 4, 1872, they had a further increase; in July, 1874, they became the subjects of special legislation again; February 28, 1877, they were again the subjects of special legislation, and June 17, 1878, they were again advanced.

What does the bill propose? Look at the operation of it. It proposes for the loss of a hand $40 per month, and for the loss of a leg at the hip-joint $40 per month. The loss of a hand in the service does not disable the soldier from manual labor, and he is able to earn a partial support for his family, and for that disability he is to be pensioned at the rate of $40 per month. If he lost his life in the service the widow of the soldier gets no increase. She gets $8 per month for the loss of the private soldier's life, while on account of the private soldier's loss of a hand his pension is to be raised to $40. It is a discrimination, and an unjust discrimination.

The pension laws ought to be revised. There is an unjust discrimination against the private soldier in favor of the officer. Rank should not give an increased pension. The private soldier's disability for the loss of a hand and for the loss of a limb is equal to that sustained by any officer, however high in rank or gallant in the service. The pension laws should give equal pensions for equal disability without regard to rank. But here, where the loss is sustained by a soldier, whether he be a private or whether he be an officer, for an injury of his person that does not disable him from earning a support for his family, he is to be raised to $40 a month, when the widow who lost her whole support in the service by the death of her husband is left standing at $8.

I say it would be an unjust discrimination in the most offensive sense for Congress to pension still higher the particular class who have been the objects of its care in repeated legislation, and leave the dependent widows of the country to the pittance that is now doled out to them.

I opposed the bill as partial legislation, as class legislation, and I have opposed and expect to oppose in Congress all such class legislation when it is presented here. The whole subject ought to be revised, but the Pensions Committee have not had the time nor the opportunity to do it.

For these reasons I concurred in recommending the postponement of the bill until it can be renewed and revised thoroughly.

Mr. MITCHELL. If I understood the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] correctly, he said the probability would be if the bill became a law that there would be 250,000 persons who would come in as claimants under the equivalent disability clause. I will state for the information of the Senator that the total number of pensioners now upon the rolls is only 291,000, and that it appears by the report from the Commissioner of Pensions of those now drawing pensions for equivalent disability which are provided for by the existing law, there are only 10,925.

I think the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON] was led into an error in stating that the existing law does not provide for equivalent disability in any cases. I call the attention of that Senator to section 4698 of the Revised Statutes, in which occur these words:

> And all persons who, under like circumstances, shall have lost one hand and one foot, or been totally and permanently disabled in the same, or otherwise so disabled as to be incapacitated for performing any manual labor, but not so much as to require regular personal aid and attendance, shall be entitled to a pension of $24 per month; and all persons who, under like circumstances, shall have lost one hand, or one foot, or been totally and permanently disabled in the same, &c.

So that equivalent disabilities are provided for by the existing law; and by the administration of that law it appears that of the total number of 291,000 pensioners now upon the roll only 10,925 are allowed pensions under that clause of the law.

I desire to have read at this point, as bearing on the question of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, a letter from an intelligent soldier, who is not demanding any increase of pension, showing how unjust it will be to strike out these words. I ask the Secretary to read that portion of the letter which I have marked.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

> I have the honor to address you, as one who has always shown a special interest in the ex-soldiers, to say that unless said bill provides for equivalent disabilities it will be unjust to a large class of deserving pensioners.
>
> I think the present pension is generous, and do not wish to be understood as either advocating or opposing an increase; but to give a man $40 per month for loss of an arm or leg, that entails no other disability or suffering, and deny it to another whose wounds, far more serious, disable him to a greater extent, besides causing continuous suffering, is not the equity expected or which the Government should mete out to its crippled defenders.
>
> Take my own case, for instance; I was shot through the neck, the ball, a large sized minie, entering in front four or five inches below the left ear, passing between the jugular and windpipe, and finding its exit between the fifth and sixth cervical vertebrae, which it fractured, a few inches below the base of the skull.
>
> My left arm is paralyzed to a great extent, so is my left side, as far down as the waist, and the paralysis extends, also, to left leg and foot at times when I overexert myself or contract a cold. Owing to injury of the gastric nerve by the ball my digestive organs are unable to properly perform their functions. I suffer from hemorrhoids, directly attributable to my wound, and, owing to the same cause it is rarely that my bowels act of their own volition at shorter intervals than three or four days. Many times, without the intervention of powerful medicines, they remain inactive for a week even, and to take physic brings on other troubles as bad or worse than that indicated.
> Since I was wounded, in August, 1862, there has not been a minute in the hour, an hour in the day, or a day in the year, except when I have been asleep, that I have not been subjected to physical suffering almost beyond description; and the nature and location of my injury induces insomnia in a most aggravated form, so that slumber results more from exhaustion than nature's effort to restore mind and body. It requires the utmost care on my part to keep myself in a condition to be able to attend to any kind of business, and were it not for my originally strong constitution I could not have stood it as I have.
> My nervous system is shattered to such an extent that things which a man with an arm or leg off would laugh at are to me causes of excruciating misery. A slight change of temperature, a misstep, severe or protracted mental application, these and other incidents of living bring on neuralgia, intense pains in head and spine in the vicinity of the wound and throughout the whole of my left side and arm. Besides changes in the weather, a cold, a strain, or shock increases temporarily the paralysis which has been growing with my age.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is the case of a soldier who was shot through the neck, the ball going down and coming out at the back, between the vertebræ, his whole system shocked and broken down, and yet he suffered no amputation. If that clause were stricken out of the bill as it passed the House of Representatives, he would not be provided for. There are hundreds of such cases. I have had letters from a large number of persons of that kind. I hold one in my hand now. If we do anything on this subject we certainly ought to retain that provision in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to indefinitely postpone the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I do not choose to allow the fact that I have made this motion to indefinitely postpone the consideration of the bill to be construed into hostility upon my part to granting pensions fairly and properly and justly to those who have served in the Army and in the Navy of the United States. Upon the contrary, for the six years that I have had the honor of serving upon this floor, I have consistently and habitually voted for every pension bill that wore the ordinary semblance and indicia of fairness upon its face. But this proposition I have moved to postpone, taken up as it is in the expiring hours of this Congress, in respect to which no member of the Committee on Pensions, no Commissioner of Pensions, no other official of the Government can inform the Senate or any member of it as to whether the passage of the bill will involve the drawing from the Treasury $5,000,000, $10,000,000, or $100,000,000. While it is possible and may be probable that the classes of disabilities proposed to be provided for by the bill merit an increase of pension, we have not at this moment sufficient information to enable us fairly and properly and with any degree of safety to the Treasury and the tax-payers of the country to undertake to regulate the question.

For that reason I moved that the bill be indefinitely postponed, and upon the meeting of the coming Congress—if there be merit, as probably there may be, in the demand for an increase of pension in this class of cases—we will then have abundant time to thoroughly investigate and to devise such a scheme as will at least approximately, if not fully, do complete justice to these various classes of cases, for it is utterly impossible for us now to provide for them with such a degree of care and certainty as will give safety either to them or to the Treasury. For that reason I made the motion to indefinitely postpone, and for that reason I shall vote for the motion.

Mr. SLATER. Mr. President, I beg to call the attention of Senators to a point that I am very fearful will be entirely overlooked in this matter. It will be remembered by the Senate that at the last session of Congress we were pressed to furnish a very large increase of force to the Pension Office in order that long-delayed pension claims that had been constantly accumulating at a ratio more rapidly than they were being disposed of might have some chance during the lifetime of the claimants to be adjudged. The report of the Commissioner of Pensions shows that on the 1st of July last there were 207,000 pension cases pending there. The Commissioner estimates that 166,000 will be ultimately allowed. I say that the interest and the claims of the 200,000 claimants demand that the office shall not be gorged again and overworked until those claims are disposed of or measurably so; and any legislation of this kind, even under the amendment proposed, will necessarily impede the settlements of the claimants who have not yet had the first dollar of pension, although they are entitled to it. I beg Senators to consider this fact. Let the Pension Office have at least one or two years' chance to dispose of the unfinished work and the accumulated business there that has been waiting for very many years to receive attention.

Mr. MITCHELL. One word in reply to the Senator's suggestion. If this bill did not relate to specific cases I would agree that there is great force in the suggestion; but inasmuch as the proposed legislation relates only to cases of specific disability, as to which in all cases now allowed the evidence is clear and certain, I think there is not much force in it. It will take very little time to settle those cases, and it will not be necessary for the intervention of an attorney. I am willing, so far as I am concerned, that a provision shall be placed in the bill, if we go on to its consideration, providing that there shall be no attorney recognized in settling any of these cases. All that is necessary to do is that the claimant shall file his application for an increase of pension, and immediately upon the evidence in the Department the Commissioner upon a very slight examination will be able to determine whether the pensioner is entitled to the increase. The record would show whether he is entitled to it or not.

Mr. SLATER. The Senator can not push aside the suggestion I have made so easily as that. It is true there is a small number of cases of specific disability such as the loss of an arm, or a foot, or a leg, and they can be readily adjusted, but they will form but a small percentage of the cases that will have to be gone through. It has been already stated that there are ten thousand cases now of equivalent disability, all of which will probably have to be gone through again, and to many more cases the door will be open for them to come in. A low estimate of the equivalent disability cases under the operation of this bill if it should pass as it came from the House will be at least twenty thousand, which would incur as much work in the office, if not more, than original new cases.

Mr. BLAIR. I called the attention of the Commissioner to this very point. He said it would be attended with very little additional work, that the intervention of no agent would be necessary. In fact the payment of arrears to those whose claims have been established was not attended to by agents. Nothing in this case would be necessary but to issue the increased amount instead of that which is now given. A man by his present certificate gets $18, and the law as proposed by my substitute would say that the same man shall have $24, and the man who now gets $24 shall have $30, and the man who now gets $30 or $31.25 shall have $40. It is simply a stroke of the pen and will not be attended with any particular addition to the labor of the office.

While I am up I want to say further, in reference to a suggestion from some Senator to the effect that if action is not now taken by the Senate in the way of amendment nothing can be done by the House, that members of the House have said to me that anything we may send to them they will pass there by an overwhelming vote. In these last days of the session they have control of their action, as we all know, and the moment the bill reaches the Speaker's table it will be taken up and our amendments will be concurred in. There is no objection to action on that ground.

These men have been waiting two years. It is now proposed that they shall wait two years more. We have as much information now as we should have then. We have had all the investigation that is necessary; they have been to all necessary expense to make their case known, and if we are ever to do them justice we ought to do it now; because to say that we will wait two, three, or four years until the business of the Pension Office is performed is equivalent to saying that we will wait until these men are buried, for they are going off at the rate of one-half the number during the last five years. The mortality among those men is very large, and if they are to have anything given to them it should be given before their burial. I am informed by the Commissioner that they would simply indorse on the certificate by a stamp or a stroke of the pen the amount to which the pensioner would be entitled by virtue of this increase allowed by the law, and he would be paid accordingly. That is all there is to it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I shall vote against the proposition to indefinitely postpone the bill, and I here and now announce my willingness to vote a pension of $40 a month to any soldier who has lost an arm or a leg; I do not care whether it is above or below the knee, or whether it is above or below the elbow; but I am opposed to that provision of the bill which provides for equivalent disability, because I do not believe there is any disability which is equivalent to an injury of that sort. I think, as has been stated, that it will open the door to a great many very dangerous practices.

I shall therefore vote for the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If our friends on the Pensions Committee could only agree on what they do actually desire and want I should be very glad to vote for the proposition which I have stated, to wit, to give $40 a month to the man who has lost an arm or a leg without reference to the locality where he may have been injured. If the committee can agree upon that I will vote for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, as I may not be able to be present during the rest of the consideration of this bill, I desire to state in a general way what course I shall pursue in regard to it, and if I am not present to vote I shall take care to be paired with some one who differs with me in opinion.

I am in favor of increasing the pension of all those who have been disabled by either the loss of an arm or a leg, or by any other actual wound equivalent to such a loss. I might be willing to vote, and probably would vote, for what is called the equivalent-disability clause, if it could be so defined by meet terms that an officer in executing the law might judge what the intention of Congress was. The difficulty is that as the bill now stands there is no definition that would enable an executive officer to say what was an equivalent disability.

The gentleman who wrote the letter which has been read no doubt was a man who suffered largely, whose case as stated by him would be an equivalent disability. He feels that the disability under which he labors is greater than the loss of a leg or an arm; and so it is.

If the disability caused by actual wound, by being shot in any part of the body, through the lungs, or through the body, or through the neck, or any wound inflicted by a bullet where there could be no doubt about the nature of the disability, and about its being caused by a wound received in the service of the country, I should be willing to vote for the equivalent clause. But the difficulty in regard to this subject is whether under this clause a great multitude of cases will not be embraced that can not be defined, or at least certainly defined by the law. No rule is prescribed which would enable any executive officer to execute fairly the intention of Congress. I do not think that we ought to pass such a law and then abuse officers of the Government for trying to execute it. I have no doubt that the officers of the Government have been in the main liberal in their construction of the existing laws for the benefit of the soldier, but it is sometimes impossible to show whether a disability under which a soldier now suffers was caused by a cold contracted during the war, by some injury suffered in the war, or by an injury that was acquired long after the war ceased. It is so difficult to mark the boundary line between disabilities under which they labor now, and to separate those which were contracted since from disabilities acquired during the war, that it is necessary in any law that the lines of demarkation should be distinctly defined.

I believe that the Government of the United States is rich enough, strong enough to give to every man who actually suffers by a wound in war which is equivalent to the loss of a hand, or an arm, or a leg, or a wound in any part of the body, anything that makes his life unhappy, anything which impairs his ability to sleep, any injuries from which men suffer, a reasonable and fair pension. The sums proposed do not seem to be large. Either $18, or $24, or even $40 a month is a very small compensation for the loss of an arm, for the loss of that which makes life dear, for the loss of health. I am willing to vote, and probably would vote if present, for the largest proposed pension granted to persons who have been disabled by actual wounds in the war. The great trouble, however, does not occur in regard to those cases, but it occurs on account of disabilities growing out of exposure to cold, to heat, to rain, to storms, and the consequent injury to health growing out of exposure during the war. If there were some way by which we could define and separate the injuries that come from the natural course of life, from the progress of age, from the natural debility of advancing years, from the injuries that grew out of the war, I should be glad to vote for an equivalent-disability clause that would give an increase of pension to all persons who suffer from disease contracted on account of service during the war.

Mr. BLAIR. With the permission of the Senator I wish to say to him that I think he is laboring under a misapprehension as to the existing law, and that the principles that he is advocating are already the rule of the Pension Office.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I have nothing else to say.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that the equivalent clause is in the existing law, and I know that very clause now produces all the trouble, all the difficulty in the application of the present laws to the cases as they arise. If a man has lost an arm or a leg, if he has been wounded in the body, if he has a distinct wound from which he suffers, that is easily proven, and there can be no fraud about it, no pretense of fraud, because his suffering can be proven by the record; but if an application is now made, more than fifteen years after the war, on account of weak lungs or a diseased liver or some ailment of the body which can not be traced directly to a wound actually received, or to a distinct cause of exposure and continuous suffering from the time that it occurred during the war until this time, it is impossible for an executive officer to trace it. Surgeons may believe it and certify to it sometimes with or without the proper facts, and that creates all the doubt or delay or dispute and the allegation of fraud in these cases.

If a majority of the committee who reported in favor of some increase of pension could be put into a room and compelled to agree about what they would propose, I should be very willing to vote for any proposition they might agree upon. I should vote for the proposition introduced by the Senator from Connecticut, and would do so cheerfully if nothing better could be done. I would vote for the proposition introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire, in which the chairman of the committee concurs, if they would leave out the loosely-worded clause to which I have referred, and let that be the subject of more definite and accurate legislation. Indeed, in the amendment as I have read it over carefully it would only be necessary to leave out one single clause, and then let us provide for cases that are clear and indisputable and make some wise and just line of demarkation or regulation as to the equivalent-disability cases; but to leave the whole question to the executive officers to say whether or not an injury which a man may suffer from, if a cold, and there being a doubt as to when the cold was contracted, is equal to the disability caused by the loss of an arm or a leg, induces uncertainty, fraud, and danger in the administration of our pension laws.

You may fix any rate you choose if you confine it alone to those cases that are clearly marked, where the testimony would be undoubted, and give an increase of pension to any man who now carries one arm or a wounded arm or a wounded leg, or who carries the marks of a wound upon his person from which he suffers, I will vote for any rate of pension which may be proposed.

I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire with great pleasure if he will strike out a single clause and leave that for future legislation. When it is said that there are many diseases under which the soldiers have suffered that are equal in their effects upon his ability to labor to the loss of an arm or a leg, I can not deny that; but in the one case there is absolute certainty of proof—there can be no doubt whatever but that the person who suffered this palpable injury, an actual wound, ought to receive the benefit of these large pensions; but as to the other case there can be no certainty. Dozens of cases have come under my attention where upon the proof I was utterly unable to even form an opinion whether the disease under which the soldier suffered was the result of the war, or the result of time or of accident or events occurring since the war. It seems to me that it would be better to leave out that clause as a disputed clause in the bill and let us secure justice and liberality to those whose wants are undoubted, and the cause of whose suffering may be clearly traced by actual proof.

If I were present, therefore, and I may not be hereafter if the bill goes on, and I hope it will (I hope it will not be postponed; let it be disposed of), I would vote for the most liberal pension proposed in either of these propositions in those cases where you have absolute certainty, and where the injury was certainly caused during the war; but I should want a little more definite description of the equivalent-disability clauses as to cases that may be included under the general phraseology of either of these measures.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, there seems to be a world of misapprehension about this matter of equivalent disabilities. There is one single equivalent-disability clause under the present law and no more. I will read it. It is found in section 4698 of the Revised Statutes, and is as follows:

> And all persons who, under like circumstances, shall have lost one hand, or one foot, or been totally and permanently disabled in the same, or otherwise so disabled as to render their incapacity to perform manual labor equivalent to the loss of a hand or foot, shall be entitled to a pension of $18 per month.

That is the only equivalent-disability clause in the statute. It is the only one that I have recognized in my amendment. There are others in the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, and that is one of my objections to that amendment.

I want to say one thing more. This is the only way which has yet been devised in the wisdom of this Government or of any government on earth where men disabled from wounds or disease, more than the ordinary $8 per month pension, can receive an increase. There is no way in which it can be specified. You can not say that a man who has been shot through the arm shall receive so much; that a man who has been shot through the cheek shall receive another sum; that a man who is partially paralyzed shall receive another sum; that a man who has suffered another wound shall receive another sum; that a man who has chronic rheumatism contracted in the Army shall receive another sum. It is impossible. The only way in which that class of cases can be adjusted upon any basis of fairness and equity is to make this standard, or some other standard, for the loss of an arm or a foot, and leave the discretion in the Pension Office to say whether a man by reason of some other cause has been incapacitated from obtaining a livelihood by manual labor equal to the man who has suffered the loss of a hand. It is impossible to conceive any other way in which justice can be done to these men.

I wish to say here that that whole matter, I believe, is carefully guarded to-day. A man who makes his application on account of disease, if he proves it, is entitled to a pension. If he is not entitled to it, but imposes upon the Pension Office, he will get his pension. The only question is what the amount of it shall be. If he proves his disease to have originated in the Army, and proves that his disability is equal to that of a man who has lost a hand or a foot, there is no earthly reason why he should not receive as much. The probability of fraud does not enter into this question at all. If there is fraud there will be fraud anyway. It is the degree of his disability which fixes the $18 pension provided for by law, and it is the only way that I can conceive of by which justice can be done.

Many of the men who are receiving the $18 pension are very much more disabled than men who have lost a limb. It embraces the case of every wounded man who was in the Army who has not suffered amputation, and the very fact that out of 173,000 Army pensions only 8,847 are receiving pensions under this equivalent-disability clause shows that it has been most carefully guarded.

What has a man to do in order to get a pension of equivalent disability at a rate of $18? First, he must show, as every other pensioner does, that his disability results from his Army service. He has got to prove it, and under the present administration of the office and under the present laws he has got to prove it by witnesses who are cross-examined in the home of the applicant, where everybody knows everything about him, where the opportunity to impose upon the Government is almost entirely taken away. He has got to prove that that disability results from his army service, and then he has to prove by medical examination, not before one surgeon, but before a board of three surgeons, his condition; and the office is not going to act upon their opinion as to whether he is as much incapacitated or not. They have to state all the facts showing his condition, and then the office in very many instances does not rate him according to the opinion of the surgeons, but according to the statement of the facts which they have made.

I do say once more that to shut out this class of men who are receiving $18 under the equivalent disability clause would be to my mind the grossest outrage and injustice that could possibly be perpetrated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the indefinite postponement of the bill, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY].

Mr. MCDILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS] upon party questions. I take this occasion to state that this morning inadvertently, for the reason that I did not understand it to be a party question, I voted when I perhaps ought not to have done so. I withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MILLER, of California (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. CAMDEN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TABOR] on all political questions. I do not understand this to be a political question, but I withdraw my vote.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to announce that on this vote I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], both of us being engaged in the Committee on Appropriations. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. FRYE. My colleague [Mr. HALE] is absent on duty in the Appropriations Committee room. If he were present, he would vote "nay." He is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 34; as folllows:

YEAS—19.

Barrow,	Garland,	Jackson,	Saulsbury,
Bayard,	George,	Jonas,	Slater,
Call,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Vance,
Coke,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Walker.
Davis of W. Va.,	Harris,	Pugh,

NAYS—34.

Aldrich,	Davis of Ill.,	Jones of Nevada,	Rollins,
Allison,	Dawes,	Lapham,	Sawyer,
Anthony,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Blair,	Frye,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Brown,	Harrison,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck,
Butler,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Vest,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill,	Pendleton,	Voorhees.
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Platt,
Conger,	Ingalls,	Plumb,

ABSENT—23.

Beck,	Groome,	Lamar,	Ransom,
Camden,	Grover,	Logan,	Saunders,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	McDill,	Tabor,
Fair,	Johnston,	McPherson,	Williams,
Farley,	Jones of Florida,	Miller of Cal.,	Windom.
Ferry,	Kellogg,	Mitchell,

So the Senate refused to indefinitely postpone the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], in line 7, to strike out the words "or shall have suffered disability equal thereto."

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAIR. That question if settled affirmatively might as well be looked upon as the destruction of the bill, for it will be the perpetration of arrant injustice upon a very large proportion of the most meritorious of our pensioners. I know that the soldiers of the country and the medical boards who have to do with the examination of the pensioners of the country say almost unanimously that those who are suffering from what are called equivalent disabilities should receive this increase if any class whatever should receive it.

The objection is made that it is difficult to avoid the perpetration of fraud in ascertaining the equivalent disabilities. There is no pension whatever allowed for any disability that is not an equivalent disability. The law which gives $8 per month to the common private soldier, being the total allowed to him, is ascertained by comparison with the imaginary standard of a stiff joint. That is in the primary law. By the law as it now exists, one other standard for which $18 a month is allowed has been introduced, and a great variety of disabilities are equivalent to that and are pensioned accordingly. Those two standards are already in the law; and yet by this amendment it is proposed to strike them out. In the substitute of the Senator from Connecticut there is an additional standard, and in the one which I have moved there are some three or four more, so that by a comparison with the condition of the individual pensioners with the various standards they can receive that which is due and equitable according to their several disabilities. The man who is shot through the lungs, or who is shot through the leg, or who has hemorrhoids or heart disease, and it may be, various other wounds festering and unhealed and never to heal, ought to have the privilege of drawing his pension under the provisions of this bill at $40 a month. You give it to the man who has suffered amputation; you give it to him as a pension for a specific disability. The case I have supposed, and it is not an uncommon case, is one where the actual suffering, the actual disability, is much greater, but for the want of that standard the man can now be pensioned only at the rate of $18 a month at the best; and so the principle passes all the way through. If the Senate is to do anything like justice we ought certainly to introduce these several standards so that the measurement may be made accordingly. If this feature of the bill is stricken out and the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is carried, the bill had better fail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. BAYARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. Were he here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. FAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY].

Mr. McDILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MILLER, of California (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON].

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAWES. I was requested to state that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. The Senator from Kansas Mr. PLUMB] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. It was just announced.

Mr. DAWES. I stand corrected.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Barrow,	Garland,	Jackson,	Pugh,
Brown,	Gorman,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,
Call,	Groome,	McPherson,	Vance,

So the amendment was rejected to.

Mr. PLATT. I now renew the motion which I made some time since out of order, to strike out all after the word "duty," in line 6 of the bill, and insert what the Secretary has——

Mr. BLAIR. By the consent of the Senator from Connecticut, I wish to move an amendment to his amendment.

Mr. PLATT. Not by my consent.

Mr. INGALLS. It does not require it.

Mr. PLATT. Let the Secretary report my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] moves to strike out from line 6 to line 8 inclusive.

Mr. BLAIR. From the word "duty," in line 6.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After the word "duty," in line 6, it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the bill and to insert in lieu thereof:

Shall have lost one hand or one foot, or been totally or permanently disabled in the same, or otherwise so disabled as to render their incapacity to perform manual labor equivalent to the loss of a hand or a foot, shall receive a pension of $24 per month; that all persons now on the pension-roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who in like manner shall have lost either an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, or shall have been otherwise so disabled as to be incapacitated for performing any manual labor, but not so much as to require regular personal aid and attendance, shall receive a pension of $30 per month: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to repeal section 4699 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or to change the rate of $18 per month therein mentioned to be proportionately divided for any degree of disability established for which section 4695 makes no provision.

Mr. PLATT. I desire, Mr. President, to say a very few words, mindful of the time of the Senate and the fact that we are drawing rapidly toward the close of the session, in favor of my amendment. I do not claim for it that it equalizes all the inequalities existing in the present pension law. I do not believe that the Senate of the United States or the House of Representatives should do that until after a commission has been appointed to consider this whole question and make a report of their doings. There are many inequalities in the pension law which my amendment does not touch; I admit that here and now; but I think it affords relief to certain classes of pensioners where there is an immediate necessity for such relief, and I think the moment you step outside of my amendment you are very likely to take such action as will only result in greater inequality and injustice than now exists.

This matter of pension rating is a complicated question. There are one hundred and seventeen different ratings of pensioners on the list to-day, and one of the reasons why the inequalities exist has been that from time to time special classes have been legislated for. Now, I am not here to say that $40 is too much for a person who has lost his arm or his leg above the knee; but I do fear this, and I believe the result will show it, that if the rate of $40 proposed by the House bill is adopted it will be so disproportionate to the other pensions on the list as to result in a corresponding raising of the entire list, including the $8 pensions and all, which I do not think ought to be done. My desire has been to recognize the demand which exists in the country, and which I believe is a just demand, that some increase should be made in the case of four classes of pensioners, two classes of which are receiving $18, and two classes of which are receiving $24, and that the increase which we should make here and now should be within the limit which would be reached upon a final equalization of the pension-list.

In my judgment there is but one thing to do, and that is after the pending arrears cases have been settled that there should be a revision of the entire list, and if pensions are too high they should be cut down; if they are too low they should be raised; and that revision should be made in this manner: The present rate of $72, the highest rate paid for total and permanent helplessness, which requires the regular, constant aid and attendance of another person, should be taken as the highest rate of pension; all pensions should be graded down from that rate according to the comparative disability. To do that requires eminent medical men; it requires the knowledge of eminent medical men; and my idea is that until the pension-arrears cases are settled we can only afford this temporary, it may be partial, relief, and then that such a commission should be appointed and the whole subject of pension revision should be intelligently considered.

I said that there were four classes of pensioners embraced in my amendment. There are two rates of pensions only referred to in it. I have taken those who are now receiving $18 and provided that the rate henceforth shall be $24. I have taken those who are receiving $24 and provided that the rate henceforth shall be $30. It may be said that that is not so much increase as some of those classes deserve. I think it is all that it is wise and safe to make at the present time.

The bill passed by the House will cost in its application to the present list, including the pending cases which will probably be settled at that rate, $6,079,564; it will be that addition annually to the pension-roll. But I believe it would so stimulate other classes to ask for increases that the final result of it would be very much larger than that. There are classes in the list which must inevitably be increased if those named in the House bill are increased to $40. There is no logic, no justice, no reason, no decency which could refuse a corresponding increase to many other cases.

I think, too, that there is great injustice and inequality in increasing all the classes named in House bill 1410 to $40. It can not be that the man who has simply lost his left hand below the elbow is as much entitled to $40 as the man who has lost his leg above the knee. To increase the man who has simply lost a hand, and who is now receiving $18, to $40 would be an increase of $22, while to increase the man who has lost his leg above the knee, and is now receiving $24, to $40 would only be an increase of $16. You would have this strange feature in the bill: that those whose disability was the least were increased the most. So it has seemed to me that the fair thing to do was to recognize the existence of the disabilities provided for now at $18 and $24 and apply an equal increase to each rate, $6 to each, raising the $18 to $24 and the $24 to $30.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I understand the Senator's amendment proposes to increase only two classes?

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator had paid attention to me he would have heard me say that it increased four classes, but two rates. The four classes of pensioners that it will increase are these: first, those who have lost an arm or a foot, who are now receiving $18; second, those whose disabilities incapacitate them for the performance of manual labor equal to the loss of a hand or a foot, who are now receiving $18; third, those who have lost an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, who are now receiving $24; and, fourth, persons who are otherwise so disabled as to be incapacitated to perform any manual labor, who are now receiving $24. Those are the four classes of pensioners that will be raised by my amendment. The two rates which will be raised are the $18 and the $24 rate.

Now, it seems to me that that is as far as it is safe and prudent and wise at the present session to go. It recognizes the fact that the pensions for all those classes are inadequate; it provides at least some reasonable relief, but at the same time a relief which is not greatly disproportionate to other classes of pensioners. The only valid objection that can be made to it, as it seems to me, is that it does not go through the entire list, but looks to a further adjustment, and I desire to say an adjustment which will inevitably come, and which when it comes ought to be intelligently made.

Now, if the Senate feels that it can here to-day, with its light, make a fair, equitable revision of the whole pension-list, and proposes to do it, then I admit that my amendment does not go to that extent; but if it agrees with me in my feeling that I myself have not yet received light and information and knowledge enough so that I am willing to say what should be done as to the balance of the list, then I think my amendment affords a reasonable ground for action.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask at some time convenient to my friend from Connecticut a question which perhaps he has answered, but his reflection and study of this bill will enable him to answer again. What is the meaning of this last clause in the House bill, "or shall have suffered disability equal thereto?" Equal to what? The persons who are enumerated include the man who may have lost his left foot with such an amputation that if he has an artificial foot it would escape detection to a person examining his walk, and it would include also a person who might have lost his right arm at the socket. Now, by what is the "equal thereto" to be measured? The least of the grades of these two? It is a question in the line of the argument the Senator has made, and I thought perhaps he had reflected on some answer to it.

Mr. PLATT. I will answer the Senator that my amendment strikes out that clause.

Mr. HOAR. I do not speak of the amendment, but of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I think that is quite an objectionable feature in the bill, one of the objectionable features—not so objectionable but that if the bill is going to pass as it came from the House, it ought to be retained in the bill. As was said by some Senators on the other side, using that language "disability equal thereto," and applying it to different classes, introduces a new element into the pension law. If the Senator from Massachusetts was here he heard me say that the only present equivalent disability clause to be found in the law is that which I read from the statutes:

> And all persons who, under like circumstances, shall have lost one hand, or one foot, or been totally and permanently disabled in the same, or otherwise so disabled as to render their incapacity to perform manual labor equivalent to the loss of a hand or foot, shall be entitled to a pension of $18 per month.

That is the only present equivalent-disability clause in the law. I preserve that in its language in my amendment. If you come to the House bill you have this condition of things, that all persons who shall have lost one arm, one hand, one leg, or one foot, or shall have suffered disability equal thereto, shall have the same pension. There is a difference in the language, as the Senator observes; it is uncertain what it means. It may be equal to one or the other, to each or to all. I do not know what it means. I think it is an infelicitous clause introduced in the bill. It would have this effect: it would take certain specific classes which are now receiving $24, $31, $36, and $37.50 and make them all $40.

Mr. HOAR. In other words, if I may be pardoned for stating the point in my own way, a man who is incapacitated for earning a living by a disability equal to the entire loss of his right arm hereafter is to receive no more pension than the man whose capacity for earning a living is affected only by a disability equal to the amputation of the left foot which might, perhaps, to some extent, be restored by an artificial limb. Those two classes of persons whose disabilities are equivalent by reason of any other wound or illness occasioned by service, both those disabilities are hereafter as I understand the House bill to be put on an exact equality, or else the department will have to construe that the equality is equal either to the least or to the greatest of these afflictions.

Mr. PLATT. That is not within the line of my argument, because I avoid it by my amendment. I have not been able to go so far in my recommendations as the chairman of the committee and the Senator from New Hampshire. I will explain why. In the first place the Senator from New Hampshire, in his amendment on lines 17 to 21, introduces into the law a new equivalent clause:

> Or shall be otherwise so disabled as to be incapacitated for the performance of any manual labor, but not so much as to require the regular personal aid and attendance of another person, at the rate of $40 per month.

Now comes the new equivalent-disability clause:

> And all persons who in like manner shall have contracted a disability equal or equivalent to any of the foregoing specified disabilities shall be entitled to receive a pension per month of the amount hereby granted to such disability.

There has been no equivalent disability to the incapacity to perform manual labor; there has been no equivalent disability in regard to amputation of the shoulder-joint or hip-joint or loss of one arm or one foot. It would introduce into the law a new equivalent-disability clause.

Then there is another objection to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire which it seems to me is almost insuperable, and to explain that I must refer to something which has been referred to in this prior debate.

The $18 pension granted for the loss of a hand or a foot is to-day divisible under the present law. There are two divisible rates under the present law; the one is $8 per month. Eight dollars is divisible so that a man may receive one, two, three, four, five, six, or seven dollars under it, according as he shall be comparatively disabled.

The $18 clause is divisible in this way, that those who are entitled to a pension of more than $8 but not $18 get a pension somewhere between $8 and $18, as they may prove ten-eighteenths, twelve-eighteenths, or fourteen-eighteenths as much disabled as the man who receives an $18 pension. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire and the chairman of the committee proposes to raise that divisible clause from $18 to $24. I do not think that ought to be done, certainly at the present time, and it will have the effect of raising the pensions correspondingly of all persons who are now receiving $10, $12, $14, or $16, upon the ground of what is called a fractional equivalent.

I had here somewhere at my desk a statement of the number of pensioners who would be affected by that clause. I do not find it, and I state from recollection that I think it is about 15,000 under the present law whose pensions, not included in this House bill, would be raised by the proposed amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire. The difference between my amendment and that proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire in this respect is that I leave the $18 clause to be the clause for subdivision in the proviso:

Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to repeal section 4699 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or to change the rate of $18 per month therein mentioned to be proportionately divided for any degree of disability established for which section 4695 makes no provision.

I do not believe it is wise to-day to establish a new rate to be subdivided, to wit, the rate of $24, instead of the rate of $18 which exists to-day.

Much has been said about the stimulating influence of such acts as this. I can conceive of no greater stimulus to give to the entire pension laws than to raise this $18 clause, which may be divided, to $24, and have every person who is receiving now $10, $12, $14 or $16 at liberty to make an application for a pension, and all at the rate of $24 or at some sum less than that, but higher than that they now get, and all other pensioners who are below the $8 clause in the hope that they may get up and get larger pensions. I believe it is very unwise to raise that amount as a rate which may be subdivided.

Now, with regard to those who have lost the sight of one eye, or are totally deaf, I agree that their cases are hard cases, that if we were ready to act and knew just what to do there ought to be some relief afforded in those cases, but I am not prepared to say that the loss of the sight of one eye should entitle a man to a pension of $12 a month, and I am not prepared to say that a degree of impaired eyesight less than total blindness should entitle a man to $40 a month. I doubt very much if it is wise to make as much increase in that class as is provided by the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. Total blindness is $72 now.

Mr. PLATT. Total blindness is $72 now. I doubt very much whether it is worth while to make the pension for total deafness as much as $30; it is now $13; I will not say that is too much, but I simply say that I do not think we have light enough and information enough on that subject to act intelligently upon it, which comes back to what I said at first. I have felt that as far as we could safely go at the present time was to adopt the rate of increase which I propose, and that if we go further than that we shall very likely only add to the inequalities that now exist.

I think that this increase from $18 to $24 a month is certainly within the line where the final adjustment of pensions must leave this class of pensioners; also with regard to the increase from $24 to $30, I do not think it is enough for persons who are totally incapacitated to perform any manual labor, but I believe that we shall thereby meet the demand now abroad in the country, and it is to my mind a just demand, of affording some relief to these four classes of pensioners who, as it seems to me, are inadequately pensioned with reference to the rest of the list.

I beg pardon of the Senate for having taken even as much time as I have.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to amend the amendment by striking out from the amendment all after the word "lost" and inserting what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is in order. The Chair deems it his duty in view of the length of time this bill has taken and the shortness of the session to enforce the thirty-ninth rule, which he has not been in the habit of doing during the whole session. If he does not do it, he does not know when we shall ever get through with anything.

Mr. INGALLS. May we be advised what the formidable thirty-ninth rule is?

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Chair will enforce any rule that stops debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas knows very well what the rule is.

Mr. INGALLS. Not by number. I probably know the substance of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator knows it very well. It provides—

No Senator shall speak more than twice upon any one question in debate on the same day without leave of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. That can hardly be called a rule of the Senate, because it is never enforced.

Mr. PLATT. I hope we shall have unanimous consent to the enforcement of it. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will enforce it hereafter. The Senator from New Hampshire moves an amendment which will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] moves to insert:

Shall have lost a hand or a foot, shall be entitled to a pension of $24 per month; all persons who in like manner——

Mr. BLAIR. The most of my amendment has been read, and as there is anxiety to save time if I can have it back I will make the necessary comments on it as I go on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no Senator desires to have it read——

Mr. INGALLS. I think it had better be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Shall have lost a hand or a foot, shall be entitled to a pension of $24 per month; all persons who in like manner shall have suffered amputation at or above the elbow or knee, at the rate of $30 per month; and all who shall in like manner have suffered amputation at the hip-joint or at the shoulder-joint, or who shall have lost one hand and one foot, or shall be totally disabled in one hand and one foot, or shall be otherwise so disabled as to be incapacitated for the performance of any manual labor, but not so much as to require the regular personal aid and attendance of another person, at the rate of $40 per month; and all persons who in like manner shall have contracted a disability equal or equivalent to any of the foregoing specified disabilities, shall be entitled to receive a pension per month of the amount hereby granted to such disability; and in case of amputation below a joint, but with such effect as to produce a disability equal to that produced by amputation at or above the joint, pension shall be paid as for the disability actually resulting from such amputation; and all persons who in like manner shall have lost the sight of one eye, shall receive a pension at the rate of $12 per month; and in cases in which the injury to the one eye manifestly affects injuriously the sight of the other eye, or in which the other eye shall have been partially disabled in the service and line of duty as aforesaid, he shall be entitled to an equitable increase in his pension, not to exceed, when the loss of sight is less than total blindness, in the whole amount, $40 per month; and all those who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, in the line of duty, by injury received or disease contracted, shall have totally lost the hearing of both ears, shall be entitled to receive a pension of $30 per month; and for any loss of hearing less than total deafness they shall receive an equitable portion thereof.

SEC. 2. That instead of the rate of $18 per month provided in section 4699 of Revised Statutes, the rate of $24 per month may be proportionately divided for any degree of disability established for which neither the preceding section of this act nor section 4695 of the Revised Statutes make provision: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to reduce any pension now authorized by law; nor shall any pensioner be entitled to increase under this section until an examination shall show an increase in his actual disability, except where the evidence on file shows the disability to be permanent in a degree entitling to the rate of pension then received, or when the character of the disability would not vary in a lesser degree.

SEC. 3. That no applicant for pension whose claim shall be granted hereafter shall receive arrears or any allowance of pension for time prior to the passage of this act greater than he would be entitled to receive by virtue of existing laws; but from and after the passage of this act his pension shall be computed in accordance therewith, if his disability be such as is included in its provisions.

SEC. 4. No claim agent or attorney shall be employed in the prosecution of claims for increase of pension under this act, but the Commissioner of Pensions shall make such payments without charge to the pensioner.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me to make a suggestion, which I meant to have done when I was up before, I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I think that the amount which will be added to the pension-roll annually by the amendments proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be greater than he anticipates. I do not disagree to the figures of the present cost, which are $5,429,010 addition annually to the present pension-roll.

Mr. INGALLS. That is under the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PLATT. Under the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. INGALLS. And how much under that of the Senator from Connecticut who is speaking?

Mr. PLATT. Two million dollars only; but I read now from the report of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Assuming the substantial correctness of this memorandum, the total increase to the pension-roll, when all pending cases are adjudicated, would amount in round numbers to about $9,000,000.

There is an admission that it will cost nine millions

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator read the whole of that?

Mr. PLATT. I will; I would not misrepresent the matter. There is an admission that it would amount to nine millions when the pending cases are adjudicated, except as it may be reduced by the mortality between now and then. The pending pension cases are to be quickly adjudicated. Eighteen months ought to bring the office up square with its work in the adjudication of pension cases. There is not an opportunity for a great mortality between the present time and the time when all the cases on the list shall be adjudicated. The Senator goes on to speak of that mortality, and says:

When all pending cases are adjudicated, would amount in round numbers to about $9,000,000, but as the rate of mortality will nearly approach the annual increase, the amount annually paid out at any time will not, in our belief, exceed $6,000,000 or $7,000,000, under the provisions of this bill in addition to what would otherwise be paid under existing laws.

There is where I think the signers of the report are mistaken. I think it will reach the $9,000,000 at once and will continue at that figure, and I will give my reason for it. I know that the mortality of the pensioners will affect it, but there will be underneath it this stimulating force which I spoke of, which I think will fully equal and offset the deductions by reason of the mortality, even if it does not result in a further increase of the roll on that account.

Mr. BLAIR. If the matter of a few dollars more or less is to decide this case, it is possible that the objection of the Senator is correct. If he desires legislation practically amounting to nothing his amendment should be adopted, because it reaches but a very few of the cases that all admit must sooner or later be remedied. He proposes to expend only about $2,000,000, and reaches but two classes. All the others suffering, many of them even more than those he provides for, are left out. The bill which I have proposed here as a substitute has been very carefully examined by the Pension Office. These points have been the subject-matter of information and discussion for many years. We have brought them to a head now. The proposition covers every specific disability in regard to which there is any complaint, and the aggregate to be added to the existing roll will be five and a half million dollars in round numbers.

The bill which comes from the House covers but four classes, it covers but two ratings, and the increase upon those two is as large as it is by virtue of the substitute we have offered here which covers all the classes who are now making complaint. The House bill, in other words, takes as much as the proposed substitute which the chairman and myself have offered, and it reaches but very few of the cases that have to be remedied. The amendment of the Senator from Connecticut covers the same classes, I believe the very same classes which are covered by the bill of the House; but by such reduced increase as to make the sum total called for by his proposition $2,000,000 instead of $5,500,000 called for by House bill 1410.

With regard to the future the effect is somewhat problematical, whatever bill we may adopt. It is fair to presume that the statements I originally made with reference to increases in the future are correct. They are based on the best information that we can get. Nobody has assailed them in the data which go to make them up. They are as reliable as anything we can possibly get. I have made them, and the office in its review of them made them upon outside estimates larger than we believed they would cover; but there has been so much trouble in the country in regard to the arrears-of-pensions act that I for one was determined, if I could possibly, to guard against accusations such as have been made in reference to that; and I think the amounts specified are the outside limit of what will be called for.

If we pass any bill it is better to do justice to all than to but a few. If we undertake to partially legislate we are to be pursued on precisely this same question in all time to come until justice is done to all.

But it is complained that we have not the necessary information. When, then, shall we have the necessary information? It has been accumulating during all the years that the existing law has been administered. We have been pursuing it for two years, for this entire Congress, and such information, such conclusions as we have been able to arrive at are here before the Senate now. Complaint is made that this bill which may cost $100,000,000 has consumed too much time. I presume from that that Senators understand it thoroughly and they want to vote.

I have made an effort to do equal and exact justice. It is not my effort, but it is the effort of those who understand it better than I and who are perfectly satisfied with this. The officers who know the law the best and the abuses the best, and the soldiers of the country, who are here in these galleries to-day represented by committees of the Grand Army of the Republic, are satisfied with it.

Now, sir, I would add but very little to what I have already said. One point made by the Senator from Connecticut is that in this amendment additional tests of the degree of disability are produced. Three already exist in the law: the hip-joint and the other two he has specified, but I will not stop to mention them. I propose to make a specific standard applying in every instance to the specific amount we give, so that the man who is entitled by his specific allegation to $40 a month shall be a standard with whom the other man who has an indescribable wound, or who by reason of the multifariousness of the afflictions which he has suffered in the service of the Government may be tested and may receive an equivalent amount. If this be not done no man unless specifically mentioned here, no matter what may be his suffering, how many wounds may be upon his body, how severe and dangerous may be the diseases and injuries under which he is suffering, can receive a higher rate than $18 per month. Nothing in this bill calls for over $40 a month, in any event.

But to pass from that, another point the Senator makes is that the $18, which is divisible and is applied to those whose disabilities are more than are now paid for at the rate of $8 a month and less than those who are now receiving $18 per month; and he complains that that $18 is by the provisions of the amendment I have offered raised to $24, remaining divisible among just the same class that it was before, so that all there is in it is simply the addition of $6 to the $18, the divisibility application remaining the same. That $18 is given to those who from nameless wounds, which can not be specifically described in any statute, are now suffering as much as the man who has lost his hand and who gets his $18 a month. We raise that man's pension by the proposition of the Senator from Connecticut to $24. Why, then, should we not raise the pension of the man whose present disability is equivalent to $24? That is all there is in this proposition; and why should it not apply to those who are drawing at a lower rate between $8 and $18, $10, $12, $14 or $16? It is proposed that they shall receive a proportional advance in no case going above the $24; and they in no case receive that advance until they have had a new examination by a surgeon's board and by the approval of the office they shall have been found to be suffering under an increased disability from that which existed at their last examination. Some few cases will be thus increased, but the great mass of them are already fully and perfectly described in the records of the office, where one or two fingers may be gone, where a toe is gone, or all the toes may be gone from a foot, or where there may be an injury not specified in the statute in one part of the body and another in another part of the body, cases of that kind which are covered by this proportionate provision of $18 which is given not in the Senator's proposition but in the existing law, and has been there for years. So much for that.

Now, Mr. President, any objection that exists against this amendment exists against the proposition of the Senator from Connecticut, and it is only a question raised between these two bills whether the country will do whole justice or only partial justice, whether it will part with $5,000,000 a year and save the other $3,000,000 or will adopt that proposition at the expense of the pensioner, at the expense of injustice, and simply pay out the $2,000,000 instead of the $5,000,000. That is all the substantial difference there is between the two bills excepting that in this which I have introduced some six or eight additional specific disabilities are provided for, which we shall have to provide for hereafter by supplementary legislation to that of the Senator from Connecticut, for these rates are no higher than his.

As to an injury to the eyes or the ears, a soldier who has lost his eye is entitled to $4 a month for that disability as the law now exists. It is a matter of universal complaint; it is an outrage. I propose to raise the pension for that disability to $12 a month. The existing law which we do not touch gives to the disability of total blindness $72. By the amendment which I have introduced it is proposed to start with the loss of a single eye at $12, to go up with disability of the entire eyesight to $40 and from that point there is no allowance whatever made until it becomes total blindness, and then by existing law is given the rate of $72. By the existing law total deafness receives a pension of $13, and degrees of deafness relatively all the way down to $1; they are apportioned all the way down to a single dollar. This amendment proposes to raise total deafness to $30, and in a partial degree the amount paid is to be proportioned all the way from $1 to $30.

These cover the substantial points that are contained in the proposed amendment excepting that it is provided in it that by virtue of its provisions no existing pension shall be lessened. That is the general law on the subject. There is also a concluding section which is not printed, that no claim agent or attorney shall be entitled to anything in the collection of this increase.

In connection with what I have said I will now submit the report signed by the chairman and myself, with the amendment I have offered and the memorandum of the Pension Office:

The undersigned, members of the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 1410, entitled "An act to amend the pension laws by increasing the pension of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or leg in the service," being unable to agree with the majority in the rejection of the bill if properly amended, beg leave to present their views, and recommend the passage of the accompanying substitute for the bill. The House bill provides for an increase of the existing rates of pensions for certain specific disabilities from $18, $24, $31.25, $36, and $37.50 per month to $40 per month. It does not attempt to make any proportionate and equitable increase to each of the several classes, but practically makes $40 the minimum of a just and equitable increase as among those several classes, so that if the principle of the bill were properly applied the result would be as follows:

Those now receiving pensions at $18 per month being increased to $40 per month, those now pensioned at $24 per month should, on the same principle, be pensioned at $53.32 per month. Those now receiving pension at the rate of $31.25 per month should receive $69.44 per month. Those receiving at the rate of $36 per month would receive $80 per month. Those receiving at the rate of $37.50 would receive $83.32 per month.

The highest rates of pension now paid on account of the worst form of disability, involving total permanent helplessness, and requiring the habitual attendance of another person, is $72 per month. The same principle would apply to the equivalent disabilities provided for in the bill.

Although the bill does not provide for the increase of any pension beyond $40 per month, yet, as the minimum form of disability, to wit, by reason of the loss of a hand or foot, is by its terms rated at $40, which is all that is allowed for an amputation at the hip or shoulder joint—the most dangerous operations known to surgery—and most rarely successful, resulting when not fatal in the severest form of disability short of total helplessness, it can not be doubted that the passage of this bill would operate only as the logical and irresistible basis or major premise for future legislation, increasing correspondingly the rates of pension for all degrees of disability higher than that now rated at $18 per month. By the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions, transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior, in response to a resolution of the Senate, contained in Executive Document 21 of this session, it appears that the annual increase of the pension-roll, if this bill should become a law, on account of claims already allowed, would be $5,187,564. Disregarding applications yet to be made, the anticipated increase of the roll, on account of cases now pending and likely to be allowed, would be about $6,750,000.

House bill 1410 makes no provision for disabilities affecting sight or hearing, for which, by general consent, very inadequate provision is made by existing law. In recognition of the manifest relative injustice under which these two unfortunate classes have hitherto suffered, the House of Representatives has since passed a bill largely increasing the pensions hereafter to be paid to them. We estimate the necessary increase to the roll by reason of the provision thus made for these two classes, and which properly should have been included in bill 1410, at $1,200,000 per annum, and for injuries to eye and ear, increase of pending claims over what would be allowed by existing law $1,000,000, so that it is a fair statement of the result of the legislation proposed in House bill 1410, and the subsidiary bill providing for increase for disabilities to sight and hearing, that the annual roll would be increased at least $17,000,000 on account of cases already allowed and pending applications likely to be favorably adjudicated. Should subsequent legislation carry out the principles involved in bill 1410, this amount would be increased indefinitely. But it may safely be presumed that it would be not less than $30,000,000. These rates once implanted in the pension laws must remain a component part of our pension system in the future, and the increase of the public burden in this direction would become so great and oppressive as probably to result in the indignant abolition of the whole system or in a wholesale indiscriminate and inequitable reduction.

That the minimum for specific disabilities in the future would, by the enactment of House bill 1410 into a law, be practically established at $40 per month, has been substantially admitted by advocates of the bill, and, so far as we know, is not seriously denied, or if denied, no one exercising common discretion in the case would give credence to the denial. The inequalities which it would establish could not fail to rankle in the breasts of those who relatively would suffer injustice by its provisions, and the ordinary sense of fair play existing in the minds of the people at large would require the relative increase of all, from a minimum of $40, or a general reduction, which would leave all parties interested worse off than they now are. Nor would the evil be lessened; but, on the contrary, it would be greatly aggravated by an amendment such as has been proposed to the bill, by striking out all increase to the equivalent disabilities, making its benefits applicable only to those who have suffered by amputation of the hand or foot, the arm or leg. This would only increase the number of those who would feel that they had been unjustly dealt with, and in the next Congress we should be called upon to complete the justice denied in this.

The undersigned have, therefore, felt that either all legislation should be denied, or that the inherent difficulties of the subject should be dealt with comprehensively, immediately, and with a determination to do equal justice to all and to deny it to none. While we have felt that the soldiers suffering from specific disabilities and their equivalents—although liberally provided for when our legislation is compared with that of other governments—have not hitherto received any more than they were entitled to receive from a rescued and grateful people; yet, assuming that until the present time their pensions have been fairly commensurate with their sufferings and disabilities, it must be conceded that with the increasing necessities resulting from failing constitutions and the unavoidable aggravation of their disabilities, with growing helplessness and incapacity to exercise their mental faculties, as well as such crippled physical powers as the ravages of war have spared to them, and with their lives shortening as the shadows lengthen, a very substantial increase of their pensions has become indispensable.

It should be remembered that all who suffer from these disabilities were soldiers, very seriously maimed or otherwise disabled in the actual conflicts of war. In almost every instance their lives have been greatly shortened, and as the years pass away the rate of mortality among them—fearful at the best— is rapidly accelerated. Those of them who have suffered the loss of hands, feet, or limbs, from successful operations, while oftentimes appealing most strongly to the eye for sympathy, are really subjected to less suffering and shortening of life than those whose equivalent disabilities are occasioned by disease, or wounds in different portions of the body, by sores and fractures beyond healing, and often unnamed and horrible afflictions too shocking for statement here. Any bill which shall undertake to increase the pensions of one class, and at the same time should neglect the other, would be radically unjust. Believing that for the general reasons we have stated, some increase to all is imperatively required to meet their increasing necessities—necessities which will soon cease with most of them by their final discharge from the warfare of life, we have, after careful study of the subject, stimulated by great anxiety to master the complications and perplexities which surround it—difficulties which have been developing and increasing for years from the imperfect patchwork of legislation that has come down to us—prepared the accompanying substitute for the pending bill. It covers all known specific disabilities, their proportionates and equivalents.

By existing legislation $18 is made the pension for the loss of a hand or foot. It is the lowest specific disability, and we have increased it to $24. The next higher grade, to wit, $24, the present pension for the loss of an arm or leg, we have increased to $30. The inability to perform manual labor, which may involve the necessity for the employment of an attendant most of the time, as well as medical aid, now receiving only $24, we have increased to $40; loss of hand and foot, and total disability in one hand and one foot, now receiving $36, we have increased to $40 per month; amputation at the hip-joint, now receiving $37.50, we have increased to $40; total deafness hitherto provided for with astonishing inadequacy—receiving only $13 per month—we have increased to $30. We have also endeavored to provide what seemed to us just proportionate rates for lesser disabilities of hearing and sight. But we must refer to the bill itself for a minute statement of its provisions. There is now no rate of pension between $37.50, the amount allowed for amputation at the hip-joint, and the rate of $72 which is paid for the following disabilities, respectively: Loss of both hands; loss of both feet; loss of both eyes; loss of one eye, the other having been lost before enlistment; disability requiring regular aid and attention, and total disability in both hands.

We have submitted the proposed substitute to the Commissioner of Pensions, and from memorandum furnished by him to Mr. BLAIR, personally, not officially, make the following statement of the addition to the annual roll by reason of the increase of pensioners whose claims are already allowed. The total amount is $5,429,010. Assuming the substantial correctness of this memorandum, the total increase to the pension-roll, when all pending cases are adjudicated, would amount in round numbers to about $9,000,000, but as the rate of mortality will nearly approach the annual increase, the amount annually paid out at any time will not, in our belief, exceed $6,000,000 or $7,000,000, under the provisions of this bill in addition to what would otherwise be paid under existing laws. As these pensioners themselves will soon pass away, we feel that this slight increase, so necessary and so just, ought not to be named as a burden to the overflowing coffers of the American people, whose contents were coined from the blood of these patriotic men. Even if it were a burden our people would joyfully take it up, and will rejoice at the opportunity to testify their gratitude to those by whose sufferings, which can cease only with death, they have themselves been saved.

HENRY W. BLAIR.
JNO. I. MITCHELL.
Chairman of Committee.

The following is a copy of the proposed substitute for House bills 1410 and 1247:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension-roll and all persons hereafter granted a pension who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall have lost a hand or a foot, shall be entitled to a pension of $24 per month; all persons who in like manner shall have suffered amputation at or above the elbow or knee, at the rate of $30 per month; and all who shall in like manner have suffered amputation at the hip-joint or at the shoulder-joint, or who shall have lost one hand and one foot or shall be totally disabled in one hand and one foot, or shall be otherwise so disabled as to be incapacitated for the performance of any manual labor, but not so much as to require the regular personal aid and attendance of another person, at the rate of $40 per month; and all persons who in like manner shall have contracted a disability equal or equivalent to any of the foregoing specified disabilities shall be entitled to receive a pension per month of the amount hereby granted to such disability; and in case of amputation below a joint, but with such effect as to produce a disability equal to that produced by amputation at or above the joint, pension shall be paid as for the disability actually resulting from such amputation; and all persons who in like manner shall have lost the sight of one eye shall receive a pension at the rate of $12 per month; and in cases in which the injury to the one eye manifestly affects injuriously the sight of the other eye or in which the other eye shall have been partially disabled in the service and line of duty as aforesaid he shall be entitled to an equitable increase in his pension, not to exceed, when the loss of sight is less than total blindness, in the whole amount, $40 per month; and all those who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, in the line of duty, by injury received or disease contracted shall have totally lost the hearing of both ears shall be entitled to receive a pension of $30 per month; and for any loss of hearing less than total deafness they shall receive an equitable portion thereof.

"SEC. 2. That instead of the rate of $18 per month provided in section 4699 of the Revised Statutes, the rate of $24 per month may be proportionately divided for any degree of disability established for which neither the preceding section of this act nor section 4695 of the Revised Statutes make provision: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to reduce any pension now authorized by law; nor shall any pensioner be entitled to increase under this section until an examination shall show an increase in his actual disability, except where the evidence on file shows the disability to be permanent in a degree entitling to the rate of pension then received, or when the character of the disability would not vary in a lesser degree.

"SEC. 3. That no applicant for pension whose claim shall be granted hereafter shall receive arrears or any allowance of pension for time prior to the passage of this act greater than he would be entitled to receive by virtue of existing laws; but from and after the passage of this act his pension shall be computed in accordance therewith, if his disability be such as is included in its provisions.

"SEC. 4. No claim agent or attorney shall be employed in the prosecution and claims for increase of pension under this act, but the Commissioner of Pensions shall make such payments without charge to the pensioner."

Memorandum from Commissioner of Pensions, referred to in views of minority, of net annual increase under provisions of the proposed Senate bill:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1883.

Memorandum.

3,631 pensioners who have lost one hand or one foot, now receiving $18 per month, and to be increased to $24 per month. Net annual increase, $261,432.

5,380 who have suffered amputation at or above the knee, or the elbow, now receiving $24, and to be increased to $30 per month. Net annual increase, $419,760.

60 who have suffered amputation at the hip-joint, now receiving $37, and to be increased to $40 per month. Net annual increase, $180.

150 who have suffered amputation at the shoulder-joint, now at $24, and to be increased to $40 per month (this number estimated). Net annual increase, $28,800.

15 who have lost one hand and one foot, now receiving $36, and to be increased to $40 per month. Net annual increase, $720.

125 totally deaf, now receiving $13, and to be increased to $30 per month. Net annual increase, $25,500.

2,000 who are pensioned for impaired hearing, less than total deafness, now receiving $1, $2, $4, and $6 per month, and to receive an equitable portion of $30 per month. Net annual increase (estimated), $312,000.

2,000 who have lost one eye (estimated), now receiving $4 per month, and to be increased to $12 per month. Net annual increase, $192,000.

4,000 (estimated) who are receiving a pension for impaired sight, other than the loss of one eye or of total blindness, now receiving the several rates from $2 to $16 per month, and to receive an equitable proportion of $40 per month. The net annual increase is estimated at $700,000.

19,423 pensioners now receiving $10, $12, $14, $16 per month, who will be entitled to a proportion of $24 per month, and the net annual increase is $1,398,456.

8,847 who have a disability equivalent to loss of a hand or foot, now receiving $18, and to be increased to $24, $30, and $40 per month. Net annual increase (estimated), $1,667,804.

1,552 now disabled for the performance of any manual labor, receiving $24 per month, and to be increased to $40 per month. Net annual increase, $287,998.

232 now receiving $31.25, and to receive $40 per month. Net annual increase, $24,360.

Add $100,000 for commissioned officers and the addition to the roll since June 30, 1882, and the net annual increase for all classes is estimated at $5,429,010.

I have nothing more to say, only that I hope something will be done. If this more generous and comprehensive amendment is not adopted, I am heartily in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. FRYE. Now, Mr. President, can not we have a vote while there is a quorum here? There will not be one in fifteen minutes from this time.

Mr. BLAIR. That is not the fault of the friends of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VEST in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. BLAIR called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY (when his name was called). The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] was called away just now, and I am paired with him.

Mr. HAMPTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], but he has authorized me to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut. I therefore vote "nay" on this amendment.

Mr. MCDILL (when his name was called). The pair of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] and myself has been transferred to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY], leaving the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR] and myself at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

Mr. ROLLINS (when Mr. MAHONE's name was called). The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. VAN WYCK (when Mr. SAUNDERS's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SAUNDERS] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS]. My colleague would vote in favor of the amendment.

I further state that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER]. The Senator from Oregon is opposed to the bill and the Senator from New Jersey in favor of it.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. WINDOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BAYARD. I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. I would vote against the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I announce the pair of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]; the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]; the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]; and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].
